Powledge Picked M.E.; Peacock, Sports Editor

FRED POWLEDGE
. . . into The Slot

Fred Powledge and Tom Peacock were named managing editor and sports editor, respectively, of The Daily Tar Heel yesterday by Editor Charles Kuralt.

Powledge, a sophomore from Raleigh, has worked for the campus newspaper since September of last year, when he enrolled in the University. Since then, he has taken the duties of general writer, and dormitory and political reporter.

Peacock, who was sports editor of The Daily Tar Heel for most of last year, returned to the newspaper's staff after a spring leave of absence. The senior is a native of Arlington, Va., and a veteran of many years' newspaper experience.

Powledge will be responsible for the news pages of the newspaper, and for a general supervision of The Daily Tar Heel.

Takes Over Next September

Dooley Named New BA Chief

Arch Richard Dooley is the new Dean of the School of Business Administration, Chancellor Robert B. House announced this summer.

Dean Dooley has served as Assistant Dean for two years and has been a member of the faculty since 1950.

He will assume the duties of his office in September, 1955. Meanwhile, during the coming year, he will serve on the faculty of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

He had committed himself to the Harvard appointment before being offered the deanship at Chapel Hill.

During the period between now and September, 1955, when Dean Dooley returns to Chapel Hill, Richard J. M. Hobbs, professor of business administration, will be acting dean.

Dean Dooley will succeed Thomas H. Carroll, who resigned from the University recently to accept an appointment as vice president of the Ford Foundaiton.

During the past year Dean Dooley has also served as chairman of Graduate Studies in Business Administration. A native of Oklahoma City, Okla., he is a graduate of Yale University and of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. His teaching activities have been in the area of production and industrial mnaagement.

3 Hostesses Announced For Women's Dorm

Three new hostesses for coed housing at the University of North Carolina have been announced by Dr. Katherine Carmichael, Dean of Women.

They are Mrs. Charles Baldwin Seward Sr., a native of Petersburg, Va., who transferred from the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity here to Carr Dormitory for women; Mrs. Norwood Bizzell, who transferred from the Chi Phi Fraternity to be housemother for the Chi Omega Sorority, and Mrs. Leslie Babcock of New Bern, widow of Colonel Leslie Babcock, who will be at the Pi Beta Phi Sorority house.

Mrs. Seward is replacing Mrs. Florence Highsmith at Carr Dormitory for women this year. She was librarian at the Marion Public Library in Marion, Va., for several years before coming to Chapel Hill in 1949. Mrs. Seward has two daughters, a son and six grandchildren.

A native of Goldsboro, Mrs. Bizzell will serve as housemother at the Chi Omega Sorority house succeeding Mrs. Eugenia Lockhart Bizzell. She came to Chapel Hill four years ago and since that time has been housemother to the Chi Phi Fraternity.

Mrs. Leslie E. Babcock of New Bern, widow of Colonel Leslie Babcock, has been appointed housemother of Pi Beta Phi sorority succeeding Mrs. Charles Snow. Mrs. Babcock, with her husband, has lived in many areas of the United States and abroad. She has two sons.

Hostesses in the other women's residences are Mrs. Bessie Buchanan, Spencer; Mrs. J. C. Clamp, Alderman; Mrs. Florence Cook, McIver; Mrs. Sedalia Gold, Smith; Mrs. Victor Humphreys, Kenan; Mrs. Eleanor C. Carter, Delta Delta Delta Sorority; Mrs. Daphne Maxwell, Alpha Delta Pi Sorority; Mrs. Ernest Graham, Kappa Delta Sorority, and Mrs. L. C. Patee, Alpha Gamma Delta Sorority.

Mrs. Roberta Brower will continue as hostess in the dormitory of the School of Nursing. She will have jurisdiction over students who are nurses, medical technicians, dental hygienists and certain graduate students.

Staff Meeting Today

The Daily Tar Heel staff will meet this afternoon at 4 in the newsroom, second floor, Graham Memorial. Students interested in any phase of work on The Daily Tar Heel should be present, as well as old-timers on the staff, according to an announcement by Editor Charles Kuralt.

Kraar To Fill Executive Post In NSA Group

Louis Kraar, Charlotte, associate editor of The Daily Tar Heel, has been named a member of the interim executive committee of an independent national group composed of 24 college editors from all parts of the country to consider the problem of censorship in the student press.

Kraar

Announcement of Kraar's appointment to the 10-member national executive committee, which represents wide geographic distribution of college weeklies and dailies, was made at the meeting of the Seventh National Student Association Congress held recently at Iowa State College.

Called the National Association for a Free College Press, the new group hopes to provide a mechanism for investigation of alleged breaches of editorial freedom in the college press, and for reporting its finding throughout the country.

Kraar held several positions with The Daily Tar Heel before his promotion to associate editor, being managing editor last year. He has also served on the staff of the Atlanta Journal-Constitution and worked with the Chapel Hill News Leader this summer.

According to procedure set up by the newly-formed association, action on an alleged violation of press freedom would be initiated when an editor of the campus paper involved notified the executive committee chairman.

The chairman would then contact the executive committee member nearest the paper to establish an investigtaion group including a member of the national advisory board and several other college editors in the area.

The new group's stated belief is that the censoring agency, whether it be student government, university administration or some outside group directly influencing the administration, would be highly sensitive to the prospect of having its censoring activity reported throughout the country with resultant national publicity.

Higher University Fees Considered

President Gray Against Raise

RALEIGH—The posssibility of future raises on the costs of University tuition and dormitory rent loomed over returning students' pocketbooks yesteday after administrative officials finished a session with the State's Advisory Budget Commission.

The question of a fee raise came Wednesday when LeRoy Martin, a commission member, asked State College Chancellor Carey Bostian what would be the effect on his student body of an increase in tuition, room rent or other fees. Chancellor Bostian said that an increase would "deprive many youths of an opportunity to obtain technical training."

President Gordon Gray expressed the hope that "it will not be necessary to raise costs to the students." It is a North Carolina tradtion, he said, t o provide higher education which is as near as possible tuition free.

And Chancellor E. K. Graham of Woman's College said that a tuition raise at his institution would be "perfectly disasterous," adding that it would be difficult to show this in figures.

Consolidated University Vice President W. D. Carmichael brought open the question of increased dorm rent when he told the commission that he would ask them to join him in requesting the legislature to pass an act which would allow the University to build dormitories with loans which could be repaid from rentals.

Presently, room rentals to students cover, in most cases, only operational costs. However, Carmichael said the rents could be raised to cover the cost of construction, too, without "undue hardship" on the students.

President Gray asked for an increase in his general administration budget from $79,207 this year to $129,263 the first year of the next biennium and $188,255 the second year.

Fred Weaver Gets Position Of Student Affairs Dean

Fred H. Weaver, Dean of Students since 1943, became Dean of Student Affairs on July 1.

The announcement was made last summer by President Gordon Gray and Chancellor Robert B. House.

The change in title is a part off a change in the administrative structure of the University whereby a number off closely related administrative functions will be organized into one division, the Division of Student Affairs.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees has approved the formation of this Division and the recommendations of President Gray and Chancellor House to make Weaver the administrative officer in charge.

The Division of Student Affairs will comprise the following offices and activities. Admissions; Records and Registration; Student Financial Aid, including scholarships; Student Activities, including the Student Union, the YMCA and the YWCA; Student Health Service; Testing Service; Counselling; Placement Service; The Office of Dean of Women, and Housing.

As Dean of Student Affairs, Chancellor House said, Weaver will be responsible to the chancellor for the development and conduct of a program of student afffairs designed to strengthen the eduational benefits to the students deriving from their experiences outside the classroom. He will be responsible for formulating policies and programs of student welfare and for direction of the activities enumerated above.

The Chancellor pointed out that the organizational changes in the area of student affairs are in accordance with a plan to organize the administrative structure of the University at Chapel Hill into five general areas with a single administrative officer at the head of each under the Chancellor.

These are academic affairs, student affairs, business affairs, development and health affairs. This pattern of organization, he said, has been widely adopted in institutions of higher eduation in this country.

In Summer Meeting:

End Segregation - NSA

By LOUIS KRAAR

"The immediate ending of segregation in institutions of higher education in all geographic areas."

That was the recommendation of a special committee—which included UNC Vice-President Martin Jordan—at the National Student Association Congress in Ames, Ia. recently.

The Congress approved the group's suggestions almost unanimously—with complete backing from all Southern schools.

The special committee, appointed at the insistence of the Virginia-Carolina region, also suggested gradual desegregation for primary and secondary schools in the South. More speedy racial integration was recommended for the so-called border state areas.

The nine-member committee, made up of representatives of both races from all areas of the nation, was headed by UNC alumnus Al Lowenstein, former national president of NSA.

Student body Vice-President Jordan declared to the Congress, after the group's suggestions were submitted, "These are just words. Personal action by you and me working in human relations areas can be the only final solution regardless of the nation's decision on a plan of desegregation."

Jordan concluded, "It is up to us as students to equalize the rights of all humans as God wishes, I am sure."

Carolina's Joel Fleishman and Chal Schley spearheaded a move late in the Congress to get a workable desegregation plan formulated. After a series of dramatic parliamentary moves, which at one point had the entire UNC delegation out of their seats drumming up support from other schools, the Carolina delegates got what they wanted.

The special group met day and night for two days, as time was running out. In its final report, the committee stressed the importance of "giving special consideration to the problems of the South."

"We emphasize the extreme importance of marshaling public opinion as a paramount factor in gaining general acceptance of desegregation," the report declared.

The report was praised for both its content and style by Carolina delegates, who included Jim Turner, Manning Muntzing, Anne Huffman and Norwood Bryan.

Visiting Terms Are Offered

Dean Fred H. Weaver declared yesterday that the "University disapproves drinking by students" and went on to outline conditions under which a plan for coed visiting in fraternity houses could be worked out.

The three conditions, stated in a letter to student government and fraternity leaders, are basically: certain hours for women visitors in fraternity houses, no drinking "within or on the premises. . .while women visitors are present," and acceptance of responsibility by students for upholding the policy.

Inter-Fraternity Council President Henry Issacson said that the IFC plans a meeting Monday night, at which time the fraternity group "may consider" Weaver's letter.

The drinking statement differs from the old visiting agreement in two respects. There is no distinction between coeds and "imports", or non-coeds. And there are specific hours during which visiting may occur.

Weaver also pointed out that there is a chance that resident housemothers will be required of fraternity houses in the near future. The Administrative Board of Student Affairs and other faculty members recommended the housemother requirement to the chancellor last spring.

"The University disapproves drinking by students and it looks to student government to support this policy so far as possible," Weaver said.

"The fact that the regulation has not been rigidly enforced does not mean that the University can disregard it or approve a plan which is conflicting with it.

"University representa t i v e s participating in the discussions last spring did not elect to request the Trustees to withdraw or modify this rule. Student government may at any time re nels to the President. Also, every year students are given the opportunity to appear before the Visting Committee of the Board of Trustees. They are free to petition for withdrawal or modification of the rule at that time," Weaver added.

The controversy over drinking —specifically drinking in fraternity houses with coeds—started last spring when the president of the student body, then Bob Graham, declared that as of April 1, drinking in fraternity houses would be approved.

The Administration reacted to the statement by canceling all coed visiting in the houses, and a series of discussions were begun between student, faculty and administration representatives. No specific action was taken by the student - faculty - administration group, although the administration and faculty members made suggestions to the chancellor—including the housemother one.

Just how long it will be before fraternities will be required to have resident housemothers is not known, but it is understood that this was suggested as a long-range move. The housemother requirement in the past has raised serious financial questions in fraternity circles.

Campus Calendar

The campus calendar of coming events for the '54-'55 school year is completed and will be available free of charge during open house at Graham Memorial Saturday.

The calendar is a wallet sized booklet listing time, and place for cultural, political, and other programs scheduled for the year. There is also space for individual dates and a list of campus organizations and their presidents.

Melon Festival Drew Big Gate

The annual Chapel Hill Watermelon Festival highlighted local activities for the month of June.

The Festival, held June 25 under the Davie Poplar, drew a crowd of more than 1,000 townspeople, summer-school sutdents and faculty members.

High spot of the evening came when a musical combo of faculty and administration members took the platform. Chancellor House played harmonica, Roy Armstrong, director of admissions, played an ocarnia, Roy Holsten, acting dean of students, banged on drums, Ernest L. Mackie, dean of awards, strummed a mandolin, Guy Johnson alternated between the triangle and cymbals and Guy Phillips, head of the summer school, joined in on the maracas.

At one point in the program many of the hundreds of youngsters present jumped on the wooden stage and gathered about Graham Memorial Director Jim Wallace, who was performing on the piano. They kept advancing toward him until he finally had to stop playing. Wallace stood up and looking at the kids, exclaimed, "My name is Wallace, not Hans Christian Anderson."

A young lady from India, Purabi Bose, did a native dance, lending a cosmopolitan touch to the folksy gathering. A little boy ran to his mother saying, "Isn't that gypsy a nice dancer?" And the mother explained to her young son about a far-off land called India.

After it was all over, and the kids were on the way home and the students were on the way to the Y court for a square dance, one couple who were obviously newcomers to Chapel Hill were heard talking:

"What kind of poplar tree is a Davie Poplar? I never heard of that kind of wood," the man said.

Chapel Hill High Senior Sets New Swim Mark

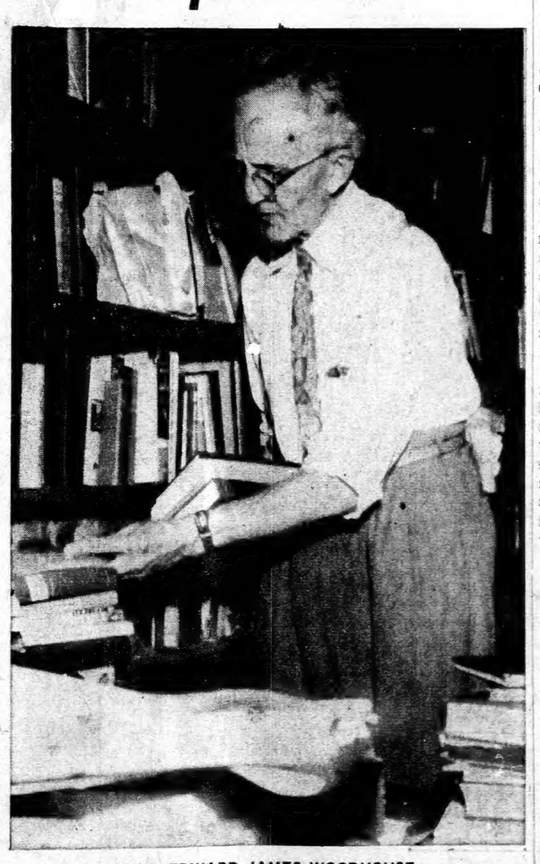
Penny Martin, senior at Chapel Hill High, set a meet record in the Southern Peach AAU Swimming Meet last June 20 at La Grange, Ga.

Her winning time over a large field of entrants in the 220-yard junior national back stroke event was three minutes, six and two-tenths seconds. She and Vicki Greulach and severla University students represented the Chapel Hill Swimming Club at the meet, held at the Callaway Mills pool.

Penny also placed second in the 100-yard back stroke, and third in the 200-yard freestyle.

Woodhouse To Direct College

Carolina's "Man in the White Suit," Prof. Edward James Woodhouse, who decided to "retire" last spring after 28 years on the UNC faculty, started out after a new horizon last month.



The 70-year-old educator and former mayor of Northampton, Mass. (1924-25), packed up his books, family and memories of Chapel Hill and moved them all to Conway, S. C. to start and direct a new junior college—the Coastal Carolina College—in the county seat of Horry County, center of rich South Carolina tobacco lands.

The loved professor became a part of Chapel Hill in 1925, the same year he gave up his mayorship of the Massachusetts city. Since then, he has become a vital—and often outspoken—part of Chapel Hill.

In May, when the University Young Democrat Club sponsored a "Joe Must Go" parade and rally, the veneralbe Prof. Woodhouse lashed out at the junior senator from Wisconsin, declaring that ted States, his state and made the McCarty had "disgraced the Uni-Senate a laughing stock in the ears of the world."

Prof. Woodhouse—dressed in one of his familiar white linen suits—said he felt "pleased, embarrassed, humbled and pround at the same time" when, on the first of June, a handsome por-

Freshmen and transfer students who begin classes at the University today have by now been thoroughly advised on what orientation counselors call the "Carolinawayof life." In more than a week of meetings, newcomers have received the word on fraternities, professors, and terrain from a braintrust of portfolioed advisers. There remains no tidbit of counsel for The Daily Tar Heel to offer on its first day of publication, except for this, a thing to remember: Chapel Hill is not one town, but many.

life."

It is a place of ten thousand people and ten thousand moods, and the student living here for the first time can find a free-wheeling Fitzgeraldan existence if that's what he wants, or he can find a town that's full of knowledge. He can find anything he wants to find, because that's the sort of town it is.

Elsewhere on this page, Julian Scheer and Jake Wade draw opposite sketches of Chapel Hill. If you've been here for vevry long you likely know this, and if you're new, you won't be long in discovering it: Both pictures are true, both factual portrayals of the University and University people. This is a quiet, studious, beautiful, loud, and hell-raising place, and most of us wouldn't have it any other way.

That is all the intelligence we can give you about Chapel Hill. We hope you like it here.

Penny-Pinching Versus Education

Students who register in the University next SSeptember may have to dig deeper to pay the cost of their education. That's the way it looks from the questions asked President Gordon Gray and his three Chancellors by the state Legislature's Advisory Budget Commission.

In Raleigh yesterday and the day before, the University pleaded its case for money to this group, whose recommendations are usually accepted by the Legislature. It is no secret that the University urgently needs four million dollars worth of buildings — a new pharmacy building, a new men's dormitory, more space in the badly worn and cramped facilities we already have. It is no secret, either, that prospects are very gloomy for getting any money at all for these improvements from next year's economy-conscious Legislature.

Into this already dark picture was injected at this vital meeting on Tuesday the prospect of a raise in fees. This would mean, if it were approved by the Iegislature, that North Carolina students, many of them already hard put for the money to attend their state University in Chapel Hill or its branches at Raleigh and Greensboro, would be pressed still further. It could mean no college education for some of the state's youth — young men and women of rare mind and soul, whatever the financial condition of their families.

Chancellor E. K. Graham of the Woman's College told the Legislators that the effect of a tuition raise would be "perfectly disastrous," and pointed out in no uncertain terms that the state is getting a wonderful return on its money. State College Chancellor Bostian said any increase would, "deprive many youths of an opportunity to obtain technical training." And President Gray reminded the Commission that it is a North Carolina tradition to provide a higher education which is as near as possible tuition free.

The Daily Tar Heel joins the Administration in the hope that fees will not be raised, not even as a stop-gap measure in a penny-pinching year. The wealth of the state is its educated men and women. This is no time to make education any less available.

Trustees May Change Rule On Drinking

Louis Kraar

DRINKING RULES on campus apparently won't get revised unless student leaders choose to take action through the Trustees.

In his latest policy statement on drinking, (and there have been many), Dean Weaver said that the University "disapproves drinking by students." He called on student government to "support this policy as far as possible."

That's what the drinking controversy adds up to now. For fraternity houses, it will mean if you have women in the house, you can't have drinking. Thus, the old rule that said coeds and cocktails don't mix in houses has been extended to include all women — imports, sisters, and, presumably, mothers.

The only other big switch is that women will be allowed to visit the Greek letter houses only during certain hours.

It would seem to this reporter that after the great hassle last spring — which began with the student body president saying coeds could drink in fraternity houses and ended with the dean saying no one (particularly women) could drink at all — few changes have been made.

ALTHOUGH WEAVER said in his statement that the Chancellor didn't elect to ask the Trustees for a drinking rule change, he pointed out in detail just how students could get their story before the Trustees.

Perhaps, Weaver, realizing that the rule we have is not completely enforceable, would like to see students take the drinking issue to the Trustees.

This course of going to the Trustees to get a change in drinking rules is not a new one.

Students in 1936 made themselves heard before the Executive Committee to get the wording of the prohibition rule in the catalog changed. They wanted the word "discipline" substituted for the word "dismiss" in the Trustee rule against drinking.

Although it seems like a small thing now, then it meant that if a student was found drinking he automatically had to be booted off campus. The Trustees, at the request of Chancellor House, compromised and changed the wording to "dismiss or discipline," and that was the last Trustee change.

The next one will probably have to come at the students' request, since the Administration has chosen to leave the rule alone.

RAY JEFFERIES, who works in the dean of student affairs office and who knows more coeds than the rush chairmen of most sororities, had a task to do this week that was new for him but right in line with his interests.

Ray was an administer of coed aptitude tests. He told me most of the girls rated high in his book, and all but two live in Aldermen.

GENE COOK, a student and a Student Party politician around the Hill ffor the last four and a half years, got what must have been his political party's version of the Roy Cohn testimonial dinner — a party in the back room of the Goody Shop.

Around midnight, after most of the goodies were gone and most of the speeches and toasts finished, Gene and party moved up the long shop of Spero and on to the door.

Bozo, the Negro who works in the place, gave Cook a smile and a warm handshake and said, "See you sometime, politician Cook." And Gene stepped out of the door with about as much finality as Bozo's farewell.

Many, including this reporter, didn't go along with politician Cook in all his politics. And maybe it's for this reason that I hate to see him leave. Cook always believed in what he did and didn't mind defending it. Wish he was going to be around for just a few more political arguments.

Hootch, Pogo & Archaeology

By Julian Scheer

I came down to this hallowed place on the weekend for atmosphere. I guest that's what people think anyway. Wherever I go, folks tell me I must love this place (I used to live here) because there is "so much atmosphere. I guess that's what

At the time I left, I remember I preferred money to atmosphere, being both young and hungry, and moved on. But I imagine there's lots of atmosphere around here but I just can't tell one atmosphere from another.

My avowed purpose for coming here was to make an exhaustive study. School opens at UNC this week and in recent weeks some pretty nasty things have been said about state universities like this one.

Up at Charlottesville they're calling the University of Virginia a country club. They've made snide remarks — (even reached the Education section of Time Magazine) — about the F. Scott Fitzgerald world up there and that those rich college boys had better get down to brass tacks.

Of course, those remarks got the Carolina Gentlemen pretty hacked. They maintain that if there's a Fitzgerald world anywhere, it is right here in this atmospheric place and besides they consume more beer here than they do at Charlottesville—per capita.

Fitzgeraldan life, it seems, is a free-wheeling, wild, unstudious type of existance that hovers between the sublime and the sober. But I'm old fashioned enough to know that there are some here who study and wait on tables and work, but they're the ones who become governors and lawyers and doctors and they're not the issue today.

I found a rising senior here who could tell me what I wanted to know—does Virginia have more Fitzgeralds than Carolina? He has been here several days planning a nifty schedule for himself for the coming school term. He's a real pro at this sort of thing and if there was ever a Fitzgerald here, this kid's it. An example: he has sandwiched in archeology between an economics class and accounting.

For the uninformed, archeology is known as the only third grade class offered on the college level.) That takes planning, friend, as any SAE will tell you.

We sat down with this gentleman at the Goody Shop and talked this thing out. He was dressed in UNC clothing—white shirt and khaki pants. (At UVA this would be white shirt, black tie, khaki pants and crumpled seersucker jacket).

The Carolina Gentleman proudly showed me his schedule for a typical day, Fall, 1954:

Seven a.m. — alarm goes off; 7:38—get up; 8—cut first class; 8:30—breakfast; 9—proudly attend archeology, look at slides of Pompeii; 9:50—coffee; 10—nap under tree. Cold weather, return to frat house, read comics (Pogo, Li'l Abner preferred), finish crossword puzzle started in archeology; 11—quick trip to Durham for hootch; 12—attend third class; 1—copy notes on first class subject from friend; 1:15—lunch; 2—nap, 4—attend half of lab; 5—play football with frat team; 6:30—get Ec 52 notes from Phi Delt files; 7—get date for beer party; 8—see movie; 10—park in Battle Lane near Louis Graves' home and neck; 11—make dash for Alderman Dorm to get date under curfew; 11-12 — friendly card game at frat house, finish hootch; 1—bedtime to end busy day.

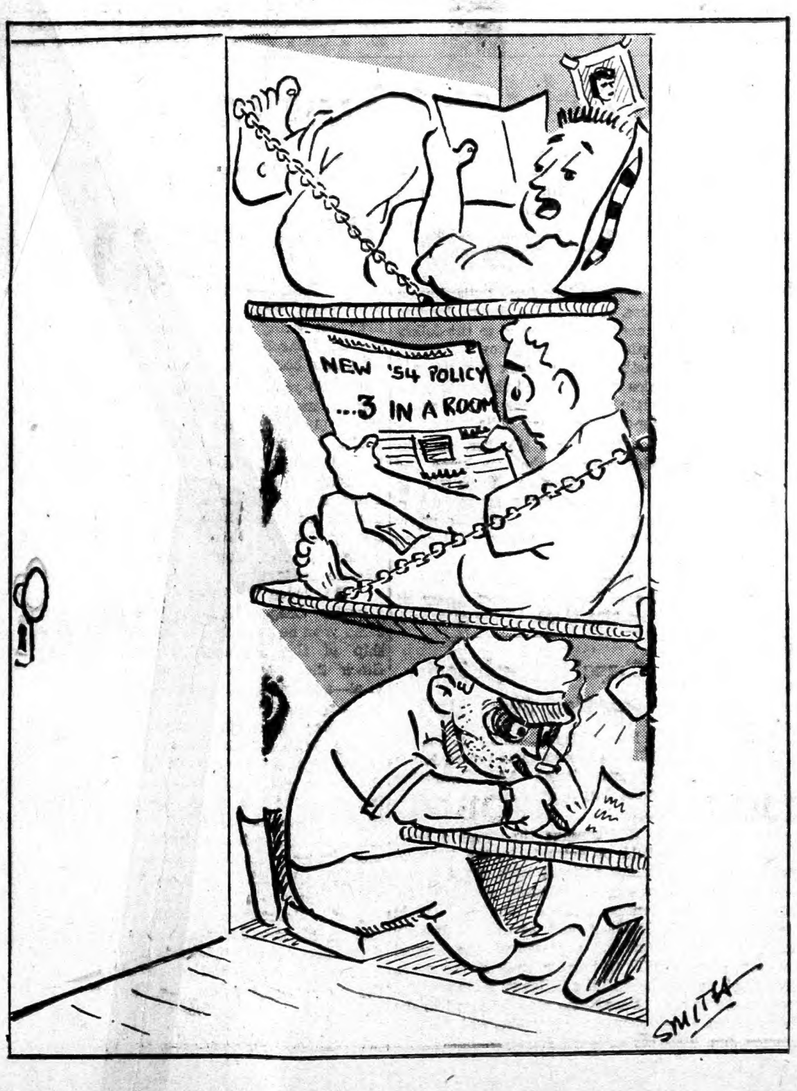
My friend, thoroughly pleased with himself, says he challenges any Charlottesville cat to match that! If they can, says he, maybe they deserve that swanky Fitzgerald tab after all.

A Sad, Magic, Romantic Town

By Jake Wade

This is a town touched by strange magic and one to which its people, many of them a curious breed, hold a rare and somewhat inexplicable attachment. Our town has no rivers, no mountains, no sea, but in the spring it is beautiful and in all seasons it is both wonderful and sad, romantic in the spirit of the youth it harbors in the educational processes of the great State University, which is the town's principal industry.



Chapel Hill, where bells wake you in the morning, regardless of whether you live in the Beta house, Cobb dormitory or on Laurel Hill Road .... and where bells ring periodically the day long, with the chimes taking over in the majesty of twilight and on certain important occasions such as the big football games .... A town as tragic as Pasadena, California, and as lovely and charming .... A town which a native son, a brilliant and beloved artist, call-"The Southern Part of Heaven" in a best-seller he wrote between paintings and who, then, in his own home in this gentle village he loved so much and dwelled in so happily, shot himself one black fall morning .... where its only commercial radio station looks down its nose on hillbilly tunes and plays music in the spirit of the town .... Where a retired opera singer spins records at the University's own station, and they are the red-seal Carusoes and operas ....

In Chapel Hill that man in dungarees, coming out of the post office, is just as apt to be a best selling novelist as the town's leading plumber or the divorced author of a profound treatise on the science or marital compatibility .... Chapel Hill, where the clients of the barber shops buy 100 haircuts to every shave, where the shaving trade, in fact, is practically nil commercially .... Where shoe shines, on the most modest and simplest leather, cost you 20 cents per copy, with the same treatment from five to 10 cents cheaper an many places at a town just across the way, but there you are not waited on by one of the Town's most popular citizens, who contributes philosophy, sound sense and remarkably accurate prognostications as a dividend to the dab of mundane polish.

But in Chapel Hill you can purchase a first rate steak with a good salad and a bushel of french fries for less than what an appetizer and sandwitch will cost you in some places .... People in our town go to church, pray, are kind and considerate—both students and townspeople—as in all towns, and the local Episcopal church must be as exacting in its demands for consecrations before a communicant is admitted to membership as any in the nation, because the rector is one of the most devout and holiest of men, even with his exquisite sense of humor and generous proportion of pacticability .... Chapel Hill, where some of the parsons never wear hats, do wear sweaters, and sometimes drive modest but snappy little sports cars, but their democracy in manners is no compromise with the dignity of their souls, for our town is blessed with able and godly preachers.

There are circles and cliques, as in all towns, for the socials, round tables and sports, but where those who travel together are frequently of oddly dissimilar tastes and with widely separated backgrounds. One of the millionaire retired band leader's closest friends is the folksy retired (from big time) village editor .... A famous singer breaks bread often and attends games with a Kenan prfessor .... A coach has tea regularly with a celebrated author .... A University department head finds more wisdom, truth and beauty in the philosophy of a local tavern keeper than in the ivory towers of his own intellectual level and prefers his company .... But Chapel Hill is a town of neighbors who are bird watchers and tend their flower gardens with loving care and talk over picket fences or stone walls, and drink their coffee or cocktails while talking oftenest about their children and grandchildren ... Yes, in Chapel Hill the college Chancellor can be seen almost every afternoon rolling a baby buggy down the main drag, stopping now and then to tuck in his grandbaby or to light his pipe. That's Chapel Hill, God bless it and its gentle way of life.

"Pass Up The Funnies, Jack!"

The Ram Sees

The Ram Sees that Eve Roebuck sashayed back to Carolina for the football semester wearing dark cheaters. Why? The Ram thinks it is a beautiful mouse, and if she tells you she ran into a door, don't you believe it. Coeds, it seems, should steer clear of mouses (or izzit mice) and rats, whether or not they're of the four-legged variety.

The Ram Sees by the newspapers that the Advisory Budget Commission is considering putting the squeeze on students for the additional cash the University needs to operate. This seems mighty strange to the Ram, who realizes that money is getting short, but who knows that it was no problem at all for Controller Billy Carmichael to go out and raise a million or so cold hard dollars for his latest pet project, the TV station. Why doesn't Mr. C. go out and drum up some more cash for the most worthy project available — keeping students' tuition from going up AGAIN?

Freshmen please note: If you want a touch of the old Carolina tradition, take a stroll on the only sand walks left on campus— on the north side of Hill side of Battle-Vance-Pettigrew Music Hall and along the west (that's a mouthful; the Ram's glad he doesn't live in THAT dorm!) We didn't use to have all these fancy brick walks when the Ram first trotted onto the Carolina campus. Every time it rained, we literally waded through the mud to get to class.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

again? I hadn't seen him fofr some weeks.

"I was in Noo Yawk for eight daze." The Horse shuddered, his muzzle turning gangrene. "Roger me lad, The Big City is as doomed as ever were Sodom and Gomorrah."

The Horse thought New Yorkers were that sinful?

"Not in the way you mean," The Horse stated, "though there is some contention on this point. No, Roger, New York is dying of physical cancer, not of moral cancer. Its arteries and veins of ommunication and transportation are hopelessly clogged. Getting anyplace means getting no place—for when you get to where you thought you wanted to go, you take one swift and disillusioned look and immediately want to go some other place. Any other place. And everybody else seems to have the same idea you have."

To what did The Horse ascribe this chronic frustration which he diagnosed New York as suffering?

"Primarily, to this Detroit - sponsored and Washington - fostered idea that the United States economy is an automotive one." The Horse saw it. "We have a two-car-owner nation in the building without room to drive one car in. Well, Noo Yawk being the world's largest seaport, it is automatically the heart of the world's largest bookkeeping system; and with all the bookkeepers — and salesmanagers, and tycoons, and bankers — trying to own two cars, and as often as not succeeding in doing so, the result is not alone dangerous to life and limb, but actually a threat to whatever sanity Noo Yawkers misview themselves as possessing."

The Horse saw it as a city of psychos then?

"Read the papers," The Horse sighed. "Teenagers stomping inoffensive elders to death; elders stomping innocent teenagers and tots to death; and the System stomping everybody, young and old, to death. Actually, it has become so bad that parents are more afraid of sending their children to Noo Yawk schools than not to: a turant-officer is better fun than the Homicide Squad."

But, how did The Horse hook this sad condition up to size?

"Put yourself in Noo Yawk for a moment," The Horse invited me, "and look at the picture. You want to go someplace through the welter of trucks, busses, so-called pleasure cars, bicycles, motorcycles, pushcarts and shanks-mare citizenry and visitors who clog the streets and avenues and alleys. Suddenly, you find yourself in a mad race with wild-eyed jehus and sprinters. Everybody, but everybody, is taking part in this human ratrace! Eyes glassy, faces twisted into grimaces of concentration on the need for speed, you and they push, shove, jostle, kick in, along to the destination of the frantic mocent; and the minute you get there, you start to push, shove, jostle, kick away from there to some other destination."

So? They had something to do there, yes?

"Humans arriving at offices, restaurants or homes in any state such as conditions like this effect, are either fit only for a first-aid squad or for a straight-jacket," The Horse saw it. "Keep that up long enough, and what have you? You have Noo Yawk. A too-big city. A mad city. An unmanagable city. O doomed city. And no H-bomb from the Russkies is needed to complete the destruction. Nope, Noo Yawk is doomed — and good riddance, say I!"

In other words, Noo Yawk is spinach, to hell with it?

But The Horse was listening. Instead, he was crossing his eight-balls of eyes in interest on Something In Purple that was panthering past toward the Registrars.

"Who dat?" The Hodse asked. "Who she?"

I said it was some New York coo-ed signing into school.

"O wonderffful placce, Noo Yawk," The Horse chittered. "Yup, I sure like that lil' ole town! Just came back ffrom eight days in that heavenly metropolis, y' know. Guess I'll have to ask Deep Purple over yonder just wwhere in Noo Yawk she's ffrom. Yup, Noo Yawk is sure a wonderful place."

I'm afraid The Horse hasn't changed any . . .

Ramblings

Ron Levin

Dateline . . . May 1954 . . . And brother, did I ever ramble! Here I was in Victorian Chapel Hill minding my own business, when some brainy guy took a pollen count, and announcced that all hay fever suffers should commence suffering at once. So after assorted sneezes, wheezes, and hacks, I pulled up stakes and left for the wide open spaces. Traveling incognito, (which simply means hitchhiking) found me five days later in the "Land off Enchantment" . . . Albuquerque, New Mexico. (Note to freshmen: Don't worry . . . the indians can't pronounce it either)

Dateline . . . June, 1954 . . . I'm standing on the corner, see, watching the tourists roll by, when all of a sudden up pops this 53 Ford with a UNC sticker leering at me frfom the windshield. I immediately started sneezing, until I founl out the occupants were friends of mine. (For the reader who is new to the Carolina campus . . . a ffriend of mine refers to any human being who has not read my column yet . . .) They were three Carolina students who were going out to Yellowstone, or Yosemite, or Yoghurt . . . one of those parks where they put up signs reading . . . "Do Not Pet Bears over Nine Feet Tall". For your information, a park ranger is a guy who puts up signs saying, "Do Not Feed the Animals," because they eat better than he does, and consequently he is insanely jealous of them. I have this on good authority from a friend of mine who is wintering in Yosemite as a park bear.

Dateline . . . July, 1954 . . . I finally get to see the big boys. Geronimo, Cochise, Taza, and Schmaza, son of Taza. We sat around a big council fire discussing prevalent Indian problems, like the two platoon system, the African problem, and the flat chested look. Cochise put forward a motion that any Duke alumnus to step foot on the reservation should be scalped appropriately, and it was immediately passed by an overwhelming majority. I took one last puff off the peace pipe and bid them all a hearty farewell. (More Tomorrow.)

Post Office Asks Students To Check New Addresses

In order to speed up delivery of mail to students, the Post Office requested yesterday that all students notify their correspondents of their correct college mailing address as soon as possible.

The address, according to the Post Office, should include the student's room number, as well as his dormitory.

All old students should file a change of address form, obtainable at the Post Office on Franklin St., if their addresses have been changed since last year. Forms are also available at the Central Records Office, basement of Hanes Hall; information desk, South Building, or the housing office, 2 New East Annex.

Soph Cothran And Vet Russell To Lead Carolina Soccerman

Carolina soccer Coach Marvin Allen expects a good season from his squad this year though he lost some of the top performers from last year's team.

Leading the returning veterans is Gerry Russell, a top scorer for the past three years, and a sure bet sophomore who could be this season's top scorer is Pete Cothran.

The Tar Heels had only a fair season last year, however, and ended the year rather poorly. Carolina took a resounding win over Georgetown University but then began floundering. This year the Tar Heels should continue to improve, and they will be meeting some improved competition.

The soccer team works out daily in the afternoon on Fetzer Field, and anyone wanting to come out for the team should come down and see Coach Allen.

trait of him was presented to the Graham Memorial Student Union.

The portrait was placed in the newly-decorated Woodhouse Conference Room in Graham Memorial by present and former students and colleagues and friends of Prof. Woodhouse, and campus organizations.

Said Chancellor Robert B. House, in presenting the portrait: "Prof. Woodhouse has taught an unlimited number of courses of unlimited variety—including all kinds of U. S. History, some economics, and more recently, in our Political Science department, courses in city government, county government, state government, American government, political parties, contemporary American politics, municipal administration, county administration, historical jurisprudence ancient and medieval, historical jurisprudence Anglo-American, and the great lectures under the trees, at Danziger's at the Coffee Shop, over tea at home and anywhere else quiet enough for the human voice to be heard—on any subject related to the efforts of people to govern themselves.".

At the time of the portrait presentation, Prof. Woodhouse's plans were to return to his native Princess Anne County in Virginia after the summer session here.

But the end of the summer found him in Horry County, S.C., opening up another horizon.

Touch Of Paris Replaced Coke

A bit of Paris, at least in its outdoor cafe life, was imported to Chapel Hill this summer in the shape of tables under the trees on the lawn at the Scuttlebutt where Cameron Avenue and Columbia Street converge at the west gate of the campus.

Here throngs enjoys the shade under the trees began to gather at breakfast time and patronage continued steadily until closing time in the evening.

Sandwiches, snacks, candles, confections, newspapers, magazines, and cold drinks—samples of all the varied stock carried by the Scuttlebutt, which was formerly a center for the naval preflight students during the days of World War II—were carried out to the tables and enjoyed at leisure.

There was no frowning head waiter to limit the time of occupation, and no peddlers or solicitors to interfere with one's conversation. And of course no alcoholic drinks were served.

The idea was Archie Christopher's as manager of the Scuttlebutt. He tried it out briefly last summer, and, convinced that the summer school population was ready for it, he this year set out accomodations for about people.

Aside from the problem of litter created by careless customers, the idea proved a huge success.

Misses Habel, Davis Traveled

Two Carolina graduates sailed for France last month to take up graduate studies in French universities. They are Miss Marilyn Habel and Miss Charlotte Davis, both of Chapel Hill.

Miss Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lambert Davis, will enroll for a year's study at the University of Aix-Marseilles at Aix en Provence, France.

A Fulbright scholar, she was vice president of Phi Beta Kappa and editor of the Carolina Quarterly and prepared honors work in French. Her work at the University of Aix Marseilles will be in the background of contemporary French literature.

Miss Habel, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Samuel T. Habel, will do graduate study on a Rotary International fellowship in Political Science, International Relations, French, and History for the coming school year at the Graduate Institute of the University of Geneva. She graduated ffrom the University in June wwith a major in Political Science.

increase was $15,000 for the new office of a business manager-treasurer and secretary. This office was recommended by a recent survey of the Consolidated University's administration.

"I cannot too strongly emphasize the importance of this office", Gray said. "The state cannot expect to hold the president responsible for the entire operation of the University without assistance of this sort," he added.

Chancellor R. B. House submitted the maintenance budget ofr the University at Chapel Hill, requesting an increase of $905,044 for 1955-56 and one of $867,738 for 1956-57.

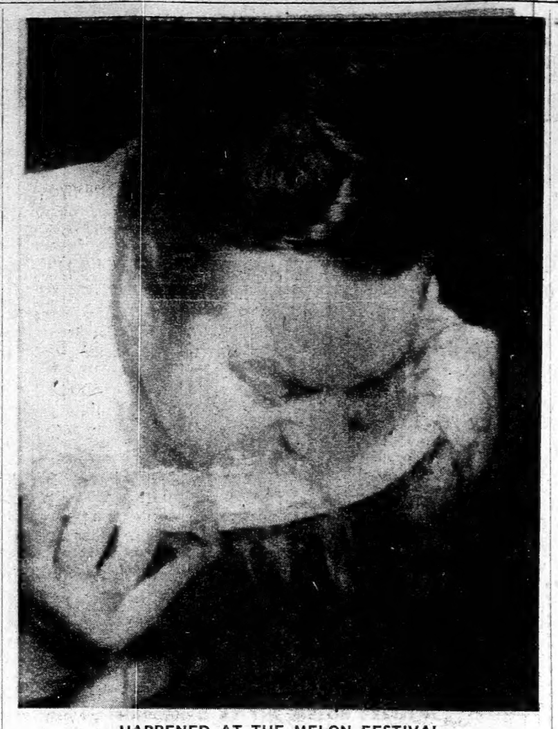
House appealed to the budget group for funds to raise the salaries of graduate part-time teachers, saying that "football competition between colleges is actually nothing compared to the competition between institutions for teaching by bright young graduate students."

The Chapel Hill chancellor pointed out that the Physics Department was weak both in equipment and needed staff. "A man from Cornell, a man from Harvard and a man from Princeton came recently to survey our physics situation. And they said, 'You are down'. So I'm asking for some men in that field."

In outlining the needed professors, House said that the Carolina Athletic Association has been paying the salaries of two associate professors in physical education with its surplus funds. "Their surplus is over now until we win some more games. And it's unhealthy anyway to have them pay a professor's salary."

The University at Chapel Hill requested $1,603,500 to build a new pharmacy building and remodel Howell Hall for occupancy by the School of Journalism.

Other permanent improvements requested for that branch were an addition to and remodeling of Peabody Building, $735,000; dormitory for men, including dining room and kitchen, $1,000,000, and an addition to the physics building, $760,000.



'Ab's' Becomes 'Kemp's' Store

The management of Ab's place, more formally known as Abernethy's Music and Furnishings, changed hands August 4. Its new owned is Kemp B. Nye, who has been manager of the firm fpr many years.

The main street music store, which started out 24 years ago in the Intimate Bookshop, had come to be a widely-known, and at times a controversial institution in town, and indeed over the entire South. Its owner-originator, Milton A. Abernethy, said he would continue to live here, but was retiring from business. Mr. Abernethy said he would devote his main efforts to the handling of the real estate which he owns here He'll still own the building, too, which houses his shore and the Intimate Bookshop, which he sold to Paul Smith in 1949.

"Ab's" had become a well-known establishment through the years as a place where customers could come in and browse as long as they wished. Mr. Abernethy himself has become the subject of much comment in the press in recent years when his place was called the headquarters of Red-dominated groups as was charged by Congressional witnesses last year. However, no formal charges were ever made against Mr. Abernethy himself.

But his selling the store marks the passing of an era in at least one literal sense, since Mr. Nye is changing the name of the place to "Kemp's."

This administrative change has been contemplated in the University for a number of years and was confirmed by the report of the management study firm of Cresap, McCormick and Paget, which made an administrative survey of the University, Chancellor House said. This survey has been under discussion throughout the University and by the Board of Trustees during the past year, he added.

Dean Weaver, a native of Aberdeen, is a 1937 graduate of the University. He received his A.M. degree in history from Harvard in 1950. He was a teaching fellow in economics here in 1937-38 and Assistant Dan of Students from 1938 to 1941.

He served as American Vice-Consul in Rio de Janeiro in 1942 and served in the U. S. Navy from 1942-1946. He was instructor in economics at the University in 1946-47 before becoming Dean of Students in 1948. Dean Weaver had a traveling fellowship to study the administration off student affairs in American colleges from the Carnegie Corporation of New York in 1952.

Fraternities And Sororities Must Have Garbage Huts, Says Town

UNC fraternities and sororities, which had to install fire escapes last year, are now being required to build "garbage houses" to meet an ordinance passed by the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen.

The ordinance, said Town Manager Tom Rose, was passed by the town fathers on Feb. 1 of this year as a measure to lessen the fly and rat population around Chapel Hill. It applies to all restaurants and houses with large kitchens. Penalty for ignoring the ordinance is a $5 fine, and each day's violation will be termed a separate offense.

"Garbage houses" are bricked or concrete structures in which the fraternities, sororities and eating places must store their trash cans. The District Health Office and town officials have recommended a building seven feet high, with a screen door and hot water connection. The department has Mimeographed plans for the houses and has sent copies to all fraternities, sororities, and eating places.

Town Manager Rose, questioned this week, said some of the Greek letter societies were "terribly unsanitary." Rose added that "flies and rats" would be done away with when the houses erect their "garbage houses."

Said the District Health Department: "The proper handling of garbage....will cut down on the population of the fly."

At least two Greek societies are known to have already installed the structures. The Kappa Delta sorority built theirs for "about $300." President R. B. Fitch of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity said his organization, in building their garbage hut, pretty closely followed the plan sent out by the District Health Department, building it for "a little better than $200."

Interfraternity Council President Henry Issacson said yesterday that he felt he and the local houses houses were "going to get to work on (the garbage situation) as soon as we can."

Tar Heel Sports

By TOM PEACOCK

Thequestion being fframed in Carolina football coach George Barclay's mind right now is, "Why do we schedule State, anyhow," a question which after considerable amount of thought isn't easy to answer. Barclay, being no exception, suffers from the chronic ailments of all football head coaches, The Cold Sweats and The Continual Worries. However, when Barclay worries about N.C. State college, he isn't crying the blues so should anything go wrong Saturday the 25th he can say to alumni and ffriends, "I told you so." He has a genuine sweating type problem.

All this means that another football season is here and once more Carolina opens with State at Carolina and once more Carolina is favored over the Wolfpack which is as it should be. More than likely the Tar Heels will win the game, very possibly by a large scort, but there are plenty of reasons why Carolina fans better shake off a case of the overconfidences if they should have them.

Getting bask to the legitimacy of the original question, the worse thing about playing State right now is that there's nothing in it for Carolina if it wns. The Tar Heels have taken State n the past seven games, in fact State hasn't beaten Carolina since 1942, Carolina, not exactly a national contender last year itself, beat just about this same State team, 29-7. The Wolfpack had a 1-8 record for its effort last season—the worst imaginable. Then whats the worry?

Coach Barclay says there are a lot of worries. "No one seems to realize that this team has been playing together for three years now," he says. "They've got a bunch of help from a good ffreshman team, and this Earle Edwards is a darn good coach. State is as deep this year as we are, so we can't beat them wwith reserves.

"And look at the men in their lineup," Barcclay waves a finger slightly bent from making All-American at guard for Carolina. "This Don Langston (State's fullback) is tough, as tough as they come. West (Eddie), the quarterback is good, and so's Al D'Angelo and John Bagonis up there on the line."

Barclay ffaled to elaborate on the State coaching, but one suspects that Edwards and his brand new staff is a major concern. State's Edwards brought with him all the power and deception of the single wing, split-T, and box formations used at fabulously successful Michigan State. Barclay has been prepping his team on State's plays, but actually, he can't even be sure they are State's plays.

Some of the head oach's problems will be solvved Saturday when the Wolfpack opens with VUI at Blacksburg, Virginia. Iff the Pack loses it's a pretty safe bet Carolina won't have much trouble with it, and the game will provide an opportunity for scouting. Should State take an easy win, however, it will show as little as possible and be fired up to come to Chapel Hill and win back a little of the prestige lost through the years.

It will be a largely improved Carolina team that State will be tryinf to beat, however, and the Tar Heels should continue their reign. Besides a few minor problems, punting for instance, Barclay's only worry is a glaring lack of reserves in some positions. Last season there wasn't a great deal of difference betwen the firts and second teams. This season, the first team is returning almost intact and a 100 per cent better playing unit, while the second team is spotted with untried sophomores. The sophomores are the answer. Coach Barclay would like to win six games, and with a little of the right kind of luck he has a cchance of doing it. Still, he has to beat Georgia and South Caorlina to do it, two teams that are favored to beat the Tar Heels. South Carolina is loaded, too, and though it's unthinkable to say it, a win over Maryland would be more satisfying, anyway.

Rev. Insko At UNC

REV. W. R. INSKO

The Rev. W. Robert Insko, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Erwin, has accepted a call to become chaplain of Episcopal students at the University.

Rev. Insko will begin his duties on October 1. Until then he will come to Chapel Hill for Canterbury Club meetings on Sunday nights and for other important events in Episcopal student work.

Rev. Insko was born and raised in Paris, Ky. He was graduated from the University of Kentucky and received his theological degree from Sewanee Seminary. Before studying for the ministry he taught school and coached basketball and baseball.

Before becoming rector of the church at Erwin, Rev. Insko was assistant minister at Christ Church, Lexington, Ky., and worked with the Episcopal students of the University of Kentucky. He married Miss Ann Hayden, also of Paris. They have an 11-months old daughter, and the Insko family will live in the Chapel of the Cross rectory at 501 E. Rosemary St.

Selden To Talk Friday Night

Prof. Samuel Selden, chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art, will introduce The Carolina Playmakers season with his annual illustrated lecture a 7:30 tomorrow night on "Adventures in Playmaking", a history of the famous University theatre located on the UNC campus.

All students, faculty members and their families as well as townspeople are invited to attend. In his lecture, Prof. Selden, who became director of the Playmakers in 1944, and who had previously been associated with the organization for 17 years, will include personal reminiscences and anecdoes accompanied by photographs from former Playmakers productions.

At this meeting the seasons schedule for the Playmakers will be told about the work of the group, how to participate, and what types of activity will be available to students and community members interested in becoming Playmakers.

Phi Kap Open House Tonight

The annual Phi Kappa Sigma open house for all new coeds will be held tonight at the chapter house on Cameron Avenue.

More than 250 invitations have been delivered to the coed dormitories for the open house, which will be held from 7 until 10 o'clock tonight.

The Phi Kap open house was inaugurated as an annual affair last year soon after the beginning of school to provide an opportunity for new women students entering the University to get acquainted with fraternities on campus.

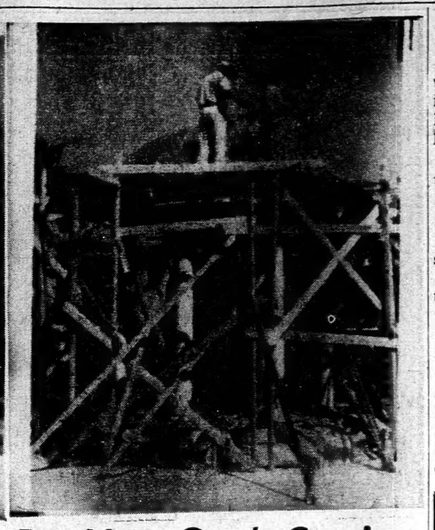
Bobby Jones, president of the fraternity, pointed out yesterday that special permission for new coeds to visit the fraternity house tonight for the open house has been officially approved by the office of the Dean of Women. Under the present drinking agreement the special permission was necessary to allow coeds to enter a fraternity house.

Bill Fetzer and his side-kick, Jerry McGee, will entertain at tonight's paty with a ventriloquist act. Refreshments will be served.

Local Public House Is Exhausted By Students

"It's happened before, but not recently."

That's what Spero Dorton, who runs the Goody Shop on Franklin St., said.



What happened?

Spero ran out of beer Monday night.

"You might attribute it to the fact that everybody was just here," said Spero. "Didn't know many girls to date, probably had seen both of the shows."

Spero was stocked up Tuesday night.

Tentative plans call for an overnight trip to College Park, Md., for the Maryland-U.N.C. game.

The goal for this year's marching band is 120 members, and the season promises to be one of the most successful in ecent years.

A-Bombs—Sans Trig

By CHARLES CHILDS

Would you like to learn about atomic bombs, cosmic rays, light and x-rays without using trig or geomentry?

Well there is such a course being taught a the University. Twenty Century Physics is its name, and it has revealed many new things to all types of students from nurses to physical education majors.

As an example of the things this course discusses just look at "matter". When we speak of matter we can see that it is very solid. But did you know that everything, including this print, is not really solid—that it is composed of morethan fifteen separate particles? Not only do you receive "word pictures" of these particles and the workings of the hydrogen bomb, but you also get to use special electronic squipment similar to that used in large research laboratories.

The apparatus you use includes a "cloud chamber" in which the paths of unseen particles appear as silver threads; a "geiger counter" used for locating uranium ores and counting cosmic rays which can have more energy than a billion electron volts. and Speaking of things to see, you can make your own rainbow with a device called the "spectrometer."

The Twenty Century Physics course is planned so that each student can become acquainted with the great advances in physics without using complicated math.

Informal Talks With University Officials At Camp

By ED CRUTCHFIELD

A group, some 180 strong, began assembling in front of the University YMCA shortly after noon last Sept. 6 to take on a venture established by the Y as Freshman Camp. The four-day session was held at Camp New Hope, eight miles north of Chapel Hill,, with rising junior Jim Turner as Director.

The atmosphere of the stay at New Hope quickly dispelled the initial feeling of being lost as every camper shook hands and made friends with each passing minute. The singing of our national anthem, "Dixie," even brought smiles to our Yankee friends who have finally admitted that there is nothing like the South, especially Chapel Hill.

Some of the things which proved to be invaluable at camp were sportsmanship, friendship, group discussions and the overall picture of the opportunities before us at Carolina. Under the leadership of Larry Ford, a keen spirit of competition between cabins was aroused in all sports, ranging from volleyball to swimming.

As in every group nicknames are found and the ones which stood out most were Itchy, Chuck, Tank and Red. Many members of the faculty visited camp along with student BMOC. In the group discussions topics discussed varied, with the most outstanding ones being on fraternities, studies, Uncle Sam and co-eds. Among the now present "Carolina Gentlemen" were upperclassmen who served as counselers, each being most helpful whenever needed.

Many amusing incidents occurred but the one most suited for print oencerned Manning Muntzing, chief of the Inter-Dormitory Council. It seems that Manning went to his cabin rather early on Thursday morning (3 a.m. to be exact) only to find all of his belongings strung in all parts of the cabin and elsewhere. Camper Hoke Huss drew acclaim with his variation of the "dirty shag."

An impressive part of camp came music-wise as Scotty Hester strengthened the spirit of fellowship, leading a group that had never been together in singing many of Carolina's favorite songs, including the "Dook" song.

Those attending felt that Freshman Camp is a great help in breaking the ice before coming on campus for the rush of Orientation Week. Appreciation should be expressed to those counselors and others who came back early to give of their time and experience.

SUAB Becomes GMAB

SUAB—the Student Union Activities Board—is no longer SUAB. It's GMAB.

GMAB, standing for Graham Memorial Activities Board, is pronounced with slightly more difficulty than SUAB, but the new name, feels Chairman Gordon Forester, is more appropiate. GMAB programs, said Forester, will be sponsored by Graham Memoial.

GMAB activities for tomorrow will include Polgar, world-famous hypnotist, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall; Graham Memorial Day, all day tomorrow, with GM offices holding open house, and distribution of campus calendars.

Tickets to the GMAB Film Series will go on sale Monday. GMAB-sponsored free dance instructions will start Tuesday, Sept. 28.

Forester said yesterday that places on the GM Activities Board are still open to interested students. The nine divisions of the Board are recreation, dance, polls, calendar, office, receptions, films, forum and publicity.

Drama Group To Meet

The Community Drama Group will meet again at 8 o'clock Sunday evening at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Wayne A. Bowers, 714 East Franklin Street. Mrs. Ralph Casey will direct the reading of Paul Green's play with music, "Johnny Johnson." She would like all those who wish to participate in this reading to contact her in advance, at 9-1221.

For the benefit of newcomers, Mrs. Casey explained that the Community Drama Group is a group of people who meet every two weeks to read plays together. There are no membership requirements. The "group" consists of those present at each meeting. The plays to be read are selected from the best drama of the theater. There are serious plays, comedies and fantasies.

This means that there are parts for men and women and children, depending on the requirements of the script, Parts are sometimes assigned at the meeting by the director for the evening. Re-casing for each act, even for each scene, where feasible, usually makes it possible to have full audience participation.

Dr. Adkins Head Of Psychological Group

Dr. Dorothy C. Adkins, Professor of Psychology at Carolina, has been named vice-president of the Southeastern Psychological Association, a newly formed organization.

The association, formed at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association held recently in New York, is open to qualified psychologists in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia and Puerto Rico.

Carolina Quarterly

Anyone interested in working for the Carolina Quarterly should come to the Quarterly office in Graham Memorial today at 3 p. m. for a staff meeting. Experience in magazine work is not necessary; anyone may apply. Present members of the staff are also requested to attend the meeting.

Local Student Goes To Paris For Jr. Year

Miss Emilie Patton of Carolina and Chapel Hill landed on French soil last week, along with 77 other students from 38 American colleges taking part in the "Junior Year in France" program.

Miss Patton, who lives at 614 E. Franklin St. here, will spend six weeks in Tours, provincial capital in the chateau country. Late n October the stulents in the group vill enter the University of Paris or the regular vinter term. They will live with French families both in Tours and in Paris.

'Miss Patton"

On arrival in France the group was met by Dr. Joseph E. Barker, Sweet Briar College, director of the Junior Year in France, and Dr. Artine Artinian, Bard College, professor-in-charge for 1954-55. Accompanying the students on the trip was Dr. Marianna Jenkins, Duke University, assistant professor-in-charge.

Picture Rental Again Offered

Person Hall Art Gallery is again offering its picture rental service to all interested Chapel Hill residents. In order that the patrons may see the pictures in entirety, the collection is now on exhibit in Person Hall and will continue through September 28. On September 28 at 9, renters may sign for their choices and on September 30 may take the pictures home with them.

Designed to offer the opportunity to enjoy many different kinds of painting at leisure and at home, the collection was begun in 1941 by the Friends of Person Hall.

The rental collection totals 275 reproductions, renting for 25c a month and for a deposit of one dollar, which is refunded if the pictures are returned on time. Any number may be rented from one to three months at the end of which time renters may exchange for others.

Rental service can be given only to Chapel Hill residents because of time and transportation factors. The biggest single renter every year is the Chapel Hill Elementary School, but many dormitories, fraternities, sororities and townspeople use this service.

Bob Windsor Seeking Office

Bob Windsor, Winston - Salem, president of the University Young Democrats and second year law student, today announced his candidacy for the office of vice-president of the State Young Democrats for the Middle District.

Windsor has been active in the YDC for several years and was vice president of the group on the University campus before his election to the presidency.

For the last year he has been working on an educational and service group within the framework of the State YDC called the Intercollegiate Council of Young Democrats. The Council plans to organize a party library and give instruction annually for all interested young Democrats in party principles and party organizations.

Many Democratic Party leaders throughout the State have shown interest in the organization," Windsor said, adding that Democratic leaders and workers from some 25 states have indicated that they favor the project. A national meeting is planned this year.

"If elected," Windsor said, "in addition to carrying out to the best of my ability the dutiees of the vice president, I will work actively toward the organization of the Service Group within the Young Democrats for the Democratic Party."

While serving as Deputy Clerk of Superior Court for Forsyth County, Windsor organized and headed both the Forsyth County Employee Credit Union and the Association of Deputy and Assistant Clerks of Superior Court of North Carolina.

UNC Asks $440,310 For TV

RALEIGH Sept. 16 (AP)—An appropriation of $440,310 is needed for the 1955-57 bienium to operate WUNC-TV, North Carolina's first educational television station, the Advisory Budget Commission was told yesterday.

The budget was presented by the North Carolina Radio and Television Commission. Irving Carlyle of Winston-Salem commission chairman, requested $220,650 for each year of the biennium.

The funds would be spent at the three units of the Consolidated University of North Carolina each year as follows: $58,300 UNC and $79,550 at North Carolina State College. In addition, $3,- was asked to help foot the bill for operating the transmitter, located in Chatham County.

Work on the tower was to be completed today. It will be 1,549 feet above sea level. The channel four station will operate with 100,000 Watts and serve some 2½ million people living within a 100-mile radius. A TV building is 85 per cent complete at State College, the Budget Commission was told, and facilities at Woman's College and the University of North Carolina are being converted into TV studios.

Carlye expressed the opinion that the agricultural programs alone would "more than pay for all that North Carolina invests in the program."

He said the TV station is a "far-reaching, forward looking step which means more than any of us know in the future of our state."

The station expects to begin operations th last of October or early in November.

Playmakers Set Tryouts

Tryouts for the opening Playmaker production, "The Crucible," by Arthur Miller, will be held at the Playmakers Theatre Monday, at 4 and 7 p. m.

The play, a stirring drama of witchcraft in Old Salem, Mass., with the timely theme of a community run mad with fear and persecution, requires a cast of 21 actors Several of the parts call for mature actors and members of the community as well as students are urged to attend tryouts.

Performances of the play, which won Broadway success in 1953, are scheduled for Wednesday through Sunday, Oct. 13-17. Scripts are available for reading purposes in the Reserve Room of the Library.

Wake Forest Starts Classes

WAKE FOREST, Sept. 16 (AP)—Wake Forest College formally opened its 121st academic year yesterday.

Dr. Coy C. Carpenter, dean of the Bowman Gray School of Medicine of the college, made the principal address at a morning convocation. He told over 1,500 students and faculty members that the college's move to Winston-Salem will be one of the greatest things to happen to the school.

Doctor Welt Gives Lecture

Caution against overemphasis of the so-called "practical" philosophy in general medical training was sounded by Dr. Louis G. Welt, who delivered the annual fall Whitehead Soicety Lecture this week to medical students here.

Dr. Welt, who is associate professor of Medicine, UNC Medical School, presented an address on "The Student's Contribution to Education."

"The philosophy of practicality takes the view that training of a physician should be limited to those items which can be clearly characterized as having immediate values in the management of the ill," Dr. Welt said.

Overemphasis on "facts" and techniques, and underemphasis on broad general principles, he continued, "is an anti-intellectual atitude and can hardly serve to foster a spirit of scholarship.

"With the 'practical' approach, there is the inherent danger that the student will consider the basic sciences as a hurdle in his path to the bedside, rather than as the very important sub-strata upon which his cliniscal experience mus be imposed, if the latter is to have any lasting significance."

Dr. Welt advised the new students to "listen and read attentively, not to mistake authority for truth and not to submit to authority in lieu of a more rational explanation of conflicting data."

A reception followed the address with medical students, faculty and other friends attending.

The Whitehead Lecture was the final event in a two-day orientation program for the School of Medicine's incoming students. First-year students were welcomed Tuesday by Dean W. Reece Berryhill at an assembly.

Wednesday morning was devoted to tours of various departments and groups meetings.

A combined staff conference was held during the afternoon, with a discussion of "Hyperparathyroidism" by Dr. Charles Burnett, professor of medicine, and Dr. Colin Thomas, assistant professor of surgery.

The University of North Carolina officially began its 161st year yesterday morning at 10 minutes of eight o'clock when the first class bell rang.

Total enrollment figures haven't been compiled yet, but close to 6,000 students were expected to register. This would not be a new attendance record, however. 7,600 students enrolled in 1948 to set the high record.

About 220 upperclassmen and coeds returned to the campus early to assist in counseling new students as they were introduced to college life.

After several days of testing, physical examinations and assemblies, approximately 1,100 freshmen were registered Monday for their first semester's wok.

Registation continued Tuesday and Wednesday for transfer students and others not pre-registered. Classwork in all departments got underway yesterday morning.

HOUSING

University Housing Officer, James Wadsworth, said yesterday that the campus housing situation this year is "good."

"All the dorms are full," he said, "nine of them have three men to the room, but there are only about 40 men living temporarily in the basement of Cobb."

Wadsworth said that the men in Cobb basement seemed pleased with their temporary quarters which the University gives them free of charge. Most of them are old students who failed to reserve a room before leaving school last year, he said.

The only problem we have had so far," he continued, "is one of a few students' changing their dorm room without being authorized by the Housing Office."

He reminded dorm residents that this is an infraction of the University's housing rules and could result in a student's being moved out of a dorm.

Wadsworth also said there are several rooms for students listed in his office in private Chapel Hill homes. A student wanting a room in a private home can check with the Housing Office in those available, he said.

Spotlight Will Be On Carolina Miss Tonight At Annual Ball

By ELEANOR SAUNDERS

The social spotlight will be, and has been, focused this week on the new coed, as another year in the annals of Carolina society gets underway. Old faces and friends will temporarily be neglected, while Carolina gentlemen introduce their new classmates to everybody's friend George, to the delights of slurping Y-Court coffee and to the well-worn path between the Library and the Pine Room.

The grand finale to orientation week, and the real presentation of the new coed to Carolina society, will be the Coed Ball, to be held tonight from 9 until midnight, in Woollen Gymnasium. "Autumn Leaves" is to be the theme of the dance, and Johnny Johnson and his orchestra will provide the music. If past years are any indication of a successful debut at the Coed Ball, the new girls will be gloriously honored and appropriately launched into two years of whirlwind activities. Dress for the dance is semi-formal, and admission is free. Advisees are asked to contact their student advisors if they would like to have dates arranged for them.

The first of the welcoming festivities was held during the immediately preceeding orientation week. New coeds and their advisors, as well as freshmen and transfer males with their advisors, gathered Thursday night in Lenoir Hall. Over cookies and grape punch, the new students discussed their mutual unfamiliarity with the campus and their recently acquired art of recovering a lost advisor. The more experienced students (those who have been enveloped in the Carolina way of life for at least a year) stood back and marveled at the enthusiasm displayed by their advisees.

The Chancellor's reception, the annual introduction to the "bigwigs" on campus, was held Sunday afternoon on the Graham Memorial lawn. The usual handshaking and welcome greetings were greatly aided by the predom name-tags, worn by advisors and advisees alike. Fruit punch and cookies were devoured by the unabashed freshmen males, and enjoyed more furtively by the well-dressed coeds.

An estimated 1,600 people, old and new alike, attended Tuesday's picnic on Emerson field. Seventy-eight crates of cokes, hundreds of hot dogs and rolls, complete with slaw and onions, and a truckload of Coble ice cream were served to the long lines of hungry students by members of the women's orientation committee. Patsy Daniels and Ed McCurry, chairmen of the picnic, were responsible for the diversified entertainment, which helped orientate the new students into the Carolina way of life. The faculty combo, composed of Chancellor R. B. House, Roy W. Holsten, E. L. Mackie, Guy B. Johnson, John D. Riebel, Guy B. Phillips and Jimmy Wallace, gave with their rendition of several popular songs. Kay Kyser acted as master of ceremonies, and assisted Head Cheerleader Jim Fountain and crew in leading several Carolina cheers, so that the new students would be well prepared for a week from tomorrow, the UNC—state football game.

Wed. night featured open houses in all the women's dormitories. Approximately 3,000 people were entertained by coeds in the six dorms, and punch was served to guests. Although the open houses were designed primarily for the freshmen, most of Carolina's trouser-clad population attended. And since turn about is fair play, coeds were honored Thursday night at the Phi Kappa Sigma open house. All new coeds were cordially invited to attend the affair, which was held in the chapter house on Cameron Avenue, last night from 7 until 10 p.m.

As a final note, here is another of the many welcomes to the new coed, a special welcome to Carolina's social swirl. And old coeds, take heart. Won't be long before they remember that we're still here!

Sen. Ervin's Halo

Pundit Walter Winchell, writing while the long-overdue Watkins hearings on the censure of Senator Joseph McCarthy were still grinding on, said that Senator Ervin of North Carolina needed to straighten his halo. What he meant by this remark (which may sound cryptic out of context) is that Senator Ervin has convictions on McCarthy which his respect for judicial processes will not let him reveal. In other words, Ervin has stated, according to the dubious authority of Winchell, that he doesn't like Joe.

The Winchell comment was only another in the stream of accusations with which McCarthy has sought to divert attention away from the real issues involved in the hearings. McCarthy claimed that Senator Johnson of Colorado was unqualified to sit in judgment of him, since Johnson, too, has intimated that he is out of sympathy with McCarthy. Chairman Watkins, staunch and conscientious Mormon from Utah, told Senator McCarthy that the sympathies of the judging Senators was immaterial. We agree.

In fact, and this is our point, if a Senator from North Carolina has any favor whatsoever for the methods of Senator McCarthy he emphatically has no right to be representing the people of this state. Or we are sadly mistaken.

It requires courage first to have a conviction and moreso to stand by it. We register herewith our hope that Senator Ervin has a conviction on McCarthy and McCarthyism; we trust it is the right one. Otherwise, his stand is repudiated by public opinion in North Carolina.

The Anti-Red Stew Of The 83rd Congress

For sheer chaos, irony, and grim comedy, nothing in recent years has matched the situation that has developed here over the outlawing of the Communist Party. It is not yet known whether the President will veto or pocket-veto the bill that has passed both houses. As he remarked a couple of days ago, he couldn't say what he was going to do about the bill because he didn't know what was in it. In this respect, he was like everyone else, including the authors, whoever they were. It is being said that the bill was "written on the floor," which in a manner of speaking is true, since it wasn't the work of any committee. Actually, it wasn't "written" at all but was improvised, like a children's play, and it is only now, when everything that was said is in print in the Congressional Record, that it is possible for anybody to know what it contains. It contains a bit of everything; it is a stew of all the anti-Communist measures ever suggested by anyone over the past ten years. It probably violates the Constitution at a dozen points, and it unquestionably nullifies—as the Department of Justice is frantically pointing out—most of the internal-security laws now on the books.

If the President signs it or if a Presidential veto is overridden, it will be a law that came into being by almost unanimous consent when, in point of fact, there was no one at all who wanted it. The President didn't want it. The Department of Justice regards it as a legal catastrophe. The Republicans in Congress were committed to handling the problem in a different way. So far as is known, Senator McCarthy wasn't for it. It was no part of Democratic policy. It came up because a handful of Democrats — men who strike the loftiest moral attitudes — thought it would be an excellent joke to put the Republicans in the position of publicly opposing a measure that seemed to be in opposition to Communism. The Republicans, as might easily have been predicted in any August preceding an election November, weren't in a joking mood, and they not only accepted the Democratic proposals but started stuffing in ideas of their own. There was a country - auction atmosphere about the whole business. All participants were sure that somewhere there was someone who would get them off the hook. But now, unless the President wants to be the sucker there is no one who will break up what today's Washington Post describes as "this emotional and political stampede." Senator McCarthy is said to be laughing his head off. — Richard H. Rovere

THERE WEHE SOME FOLKS up at Lake Junaluska this summer, according to University Professor Olin T. Mouzon, who lost a maid somewhere, and there is only one mysterious and rather stratling clue to her whereabouts. The people had arranged for the maid to come up to their place at Junaluska in June, and she didn't show up. July came and went, and no maid. August passeff. No maid. Then, as summer was about to depart the mountains of Western North Carolina, they received a postcard from the wandering maid, forwarded from Alaska. The message on it: "Arriving next week." It had been addressed to Lake Juno, Alaska.—Chuck Hauser in The Chapel Hill Weekly.

A Freshman Speaks His Mind On UNC

Louis Kraar

After watching the freshmen stream into town and run over into the Rathskellar and other refreshment emporiums, I thought it might be interesting to see how this year's freshman feels about things.

Carolina freshmen have traditionally been not unlike Carolina sophomores—or juniors. Perhaps the second-year guys know their way around a bit better, already know how to get to Greensboro on weekends and have been through drop-add a few times. But basically there's no difference here between freshmen and upperclassmen.

That lack of difference was apparent as I pushed through the crowd in the Rat looking for some freshmen. I couldn't find any bewildered looks or wide-eyed stares. After a few minutes of looking around the frothy subterranean beer hall, I found that the only bewildered look or wide-eyed stare was on my face.

Finally, a group of guys in the back noticed me and invited me over. After explaining to them that I really wasn't lost, we talked awhile.

"This is really a great school," said the boy next to me, after he had told me his name was Don Ridenhier. "You know, you can't tell the difference between a freshman or an upperclassman here. Everybody's so friendly and all."

The arrival of a smoking pizza broke up the talk for a second. We all reached for a hunk of pie, then he continued.

"I've only got one problem here," my new friend said. "It sure makes me feel like a lowly freshman."

I assured him that it couldn't be all that bad, explaining that at the Hill individualism is the thing that counts and that whatever tagged him as a freshman now might turn out to be as asset. I palavered on reassuringly, then asked what the problem was.

"Well, at high school out in California where I went, everybody said that you had to be a cat. So now all my pants but one pair are pegged."

MOST TALK at the Raleigh budget commission meeting was serious. The problem of getting enough money from the state to take care of the expected enrollment increase is, perhaps, the University's biggest headache.

By 1958, the rise in college enrollments in the country will be clearly reflected in UNC's enrollment. Just where they will put the additional students is the problem.

University Vice - President W. D. Carmichael would like a plan under which dormitory rentals charged students would not only cover operation costs, but also the actual cost of building. In other words, bonds would be issued to build dormitories and then be paid off with rentals.

Carmichael thinks this plan could be adopted without "any harm to the students." However in the past other financial advisers of the University have considered self - liquidating dorms unwise from an overall economic standpoint.

It would seem that, in view of the University's tradition of providing education for as little money as possble (and President Gray pointed this tradition out to the budget people), that upping dorm rents to pay for buildings is not fair to the students. The state should face up to the educational facts of life and realize that by the time the first new dorm is built the enrollment will have swelled enough to require a second.

The big problem, not just for Carolina but all colleges, is to meet the growing needs of a larger student body without pricing education right off the market. Carmichael's plan overlooks this, and it is regrettable.

WHEN THE Redskins and Charlie Justice played in Raleigh last week, our educational television station, WUNC-TV, asked if they might give their cameramen a chance to practice on the game.

The football people said okay, so the station sent over three cameramen. One of these practice cameramen was the new Journalism Dean, Norval N. Luxon.

Dulles Omitted Quemoy

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — Here is some of the background regarding the hitherto unpublicized, now headlined island of Quemoy, to discuss which the National Security Council journeyed out to Denver.

On August 3, as Communist Chinese troops, withdrawn from Korea and Indo-China, began to mass on the mainland opposite Formosa, Secretary Dulles was asked at a press conference whether the United States would defend Formosa.

He replied in brief that the United States was committed to use air and sea power to defend Formosa and the Pescadores Islands. But he did not mention Quemoy. The Pescadores are immediately adjacent to the island of Formosa, approximately 90 miles from the Red Chinese mainland, and therefore much easier to defend than the Chiang Kai-Shek fortress of Quemoy, only three-and-a-half miles from the Mainland.

The fact that Dulles failed to mention Quemoy was immediately noted by the Chinese, also by Congressman Sam Yorty of California, who next day told Congress:

"Former Secretary Dean Acheson was severely criticized for omitting South Korea when listing areas of the Pacific, the defense of which he considered to be a primary interest to the United States. Mr. Acheson was accused of inviting Red aggressors against South Korea.

"Secretary Dulles," continued the California congressman, "has now seen fit to emphasize that the United States is not committed to defend Quemoy."

Quemoy Quandary

A few days later, August 7, Senator Kuchel of California further highlighted the Quemoy quandary by making a speech at the Republican State Convention in California. He said that Yorty, who is running against Kuchel, had made a speech about a "foolish island" with a name he couldn't even spell.

This caused Yorty to put the State Department on the spot by telegraphing Dulles for a flat answer as to whether the United States would or would not defend Quemoy. The State Department replied that they did not want to discuss the matter in writing, but would confer with the congressman if he would come to see them.

Meanwhile the Reds seemed in just as much of a quandary as Congressman Yorty as to whether the United States would or would not go to war to protect this "foolish island."

It was this quandary plus some collateral factors which finally led to the Denver meeting. The collateral factors were:

A. A group of U. S. Naval and Military men are convinced that the United States sooner or later must face a showdown in the Pacific and that it would be better to have a preventive war now than later. This group includes Gen. James Van Fleet, special adviser to Eisenhower, who is so rabid on the subject he talks to almost anyone. To some extent it also includes the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Admiral Radford, who vigorously advocated intervention in Indo-China.

B. A group of Asiatics led by Dr. Syngman Rhee of South Korea, Chiang Kai-shek, plus the China Lobby. This group makes no secret of the fact that they would like to see the United States go to war against Red China.

The situation regarding Quemoy is still fuzzy, despite the Denver meeting, except that it appears the Seventh Fleet will continue to protect the supply line to the Chinese Nationalists on the island; in other words, give what is called "logistic aid." Pentagon officials say the island is well garrisoned, and it will be a long time before the Reds could take it even without U. S. protection.

But Secretary Dulles's omission of Quemoy from the areas for which the Seventh Fleet would fight still remains unchanged — as far as the Reds know. And it would appear that it is in the same category as South Korea prior to June 25, 1950, namely an area which we will not defend but which could conceivably embroil us in war.

Inside The Censure Committee

Most interesting development inside the Senate censure committee is that Senator McCarthy may not be censured for bawling out Brig. Gen. Ralph Zwicker.

Yet it was his treatment of Zwicker which touched off all the furor. It caused Secretary of the Army Stevens to say he would not let his offiers testify before McCarthy and resulted in weeks of televised Senate controversy.

During their secret closed-door hearings, members of the Watkins Committee have pretty well decided to rap their Wisconsin colleague on four of the five counts against him. But, on the fifth and final count — mistreating General Zwicker — they feel that Zwicker was evasive and should have answered McCarthy's questions in a more forthright manner.

On the other hand, McCarthy will get criticized for two phases of the Zwicker hearings, though the Senate committee has not yet decided whether to put this in their main report or in a side report on the bush proposals. The latter are a series of recommendations by Senator Bush of Connecticut for the proper conduct of Senate hearings.

The two criticisms of McCarthy on this score are: 1, lecturing witnesses; 2, allowing non-Senators to question witnesses. McCarthy permitted Harold Rainville , assistant to Senator Dirksen of Illinois; and Robert Jones, the assistant to Senator Potter of Michigan, to question Zwicker in secret session, which the Senators feel was unethical and improper.

Carlson Leans

On the first four charges, the Watkins Committee is debating backstage whether to recommend to the full Senate the censure of McCarthy, or whether to write a strong report and let the full Senate decide for itself. Some sticklers for form inside the committee are veering toward the latter.

The committee has set a target date of September 20 for its report to be finished, though it may be ready several days in advance.

Note—The Senator who leans most toward McCarthy during backstage committee conferences is Frank Carlson of Kansas. Case of South Dakota, though impartial, is inclined to side with him somewhat at times. Senator Ervin of North Carolina is such a stickler for legal form that he sometimes appears to be helping McCarthy.

The Ram Sees

The state press please note: The University's Memorial Hospital was kind of close-mouthed about this one: Just a couple of weeks ago, an almost - mother was hurrying to the hospital to become a sure - enough mother, when nature caught up with her somewhere along the way before she could get to the door. Mother and child were admitted together, both doing just fine. The hospital wouldn't comment on anything that happened outside its walls, but it just so happened that the records show a Mrs. Lucille Trimm and her child (age too young to be listed) were admitted together to the hospital.

The Ram Sees a long, dry football season ahead.

The battle of the century is looming in front of our eyes and nobody has commented on it yet: When Chancellor House retires, just watch Dean (of Student Affairs, no less) Fred Weaver and Brother C. P. Spruill fight it out to see who is heir apparent to the throne. It's a little dubious right now, but the Ram's got his blue chips riding on old Fred.

Ramblings

Ron Levin

Dateline. . .August, 1954. . .An Indian runner at last brought the welcome news that the pollen - count in Chapel Hill had gone below fifty, so after packing up my rapidly dwindling collection of human heads, I set sail for the hot and humid East. After three speeding tickets and five motels, I arrived in the good ol' North State and my ramblings for the year 1954 were officially declared at an end.

If any freshmen have a vacant hour in their schedule I would be more than happy to enroll them for my special Six Week Rain Dance Course in which, for no extra charge, I throw in Tomahawk Throwing at Embittered Instructors and How to Build a Wigwam for One.

After having been back only a few hours I ran into George the collie and thought it might be a good chance to get his opinion on several current problems.

About the flat chested look, George says he once knew a French poodle who tried the same thing and ended up not having a date for the Canine Germans which are held thrice yearly in Kenan Stadium. (Note to coeds. . . .let a word to the wise. . .)

I was down in Woollen during registration and overheard two freshmen speaking in quiet subdued tones. It seems that he already had signed up for six courses and was angry because his adviser wouldn't let him take Russian too. These crazy freshmen.

Rumor has it that the entire administrative and executive hierarcy of "Brat" was revamped during the summer months, and that proceedings are under way for a huge campaign included in which will be a student raffle for Thanksgiving. This is a bit different from ordinary raffles. The Grand Imperial Potentate and Past Participle of Brat says that only turkeys will be allowed to buy tickets for the raffle, and a student will be given away at the drawing.

New Pastures For The Old Horses

Ed Yoder

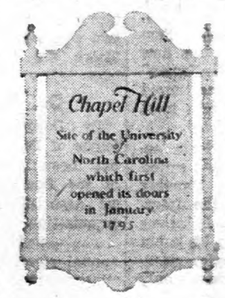
As a symbol of the advancement of our culture, I was glad to read of a "Hello, Mr. Chips" program that is having genesis under the sponsorship of the John Hay Whitney Foundation. This program takes scholars and teachers who have performed to mandatory retirement age for many of the larger universities and, paying part of the salary, helps them find positions in smaller liberal arts colleges that might not otherwise get the brilliance and talent they have to offer.

The Whitney Program is evolutionary (if not revolutionary) in scope, not only because of the benefit to smaller schools, victims of less attractive names in the academic cosmos and an often-limited budget, but because it stands contra to the "good old horse" theary that a certain age robs a man's mind of its powers and its worth. No more poisonous heresy exists. The race-horse heresy holds that although man, like the race horse, is a noble and spirited animal, it is a fitting vision to think of him cropping grass after society no longer has need for him.

But the spirit of scholarship and teaching is one that lingers—even in the shadow of the grave — and it should be stimulated for as long as it lingers. For an outstanding picture of this lingering drive one must only turn to men like Bertrand Russell and Winston Churchill. When that old Ivy-League scholar, Bliss Perry, was through in the classroom he still defied the Grim Reaper and was still at it when he died.

The Whitney Program ought to help remedy that problem of occupation for the aging that complicates in direct pace with the lengthening of the human lifespan. Threescore and ten years for a man's life is in transition from abnormality to the common turnout of events.

Those whose business is scholarship and the preservation of the spirits of imagination and inquiry are committed to the propositon that these are the noblest of pastimes. Yet these occupations deaden in a man, despite such programs as the Guggenheim Fellowships, which can't supply all our needs, when he has passed a questionable but arbitrarily-set age of "usefulness." Year after year, worthy projects for the betterment of our outlook wither when they are slashed from their posts of support.



I hope this University gets a call to enter the program and lengthen the tenure of its most formidable teachers. In any case it can begin to think about registering its dissent resoundingly to the race-horse heresy.

Quote, Unquote

FOLKS IN SOUTH BUILDING have been asking about the age of the circular brick well casing which appeared above ground when the temple of the Old Well was demolished last week. The brick is old and crumbly, and may very well have been part of the original casing put in when the well was dug. At least, there are no records to indicate to the contrary, according to Historian Archibald Henderson, who has done exhaustive research on the campus and its buildings. I posed another question to Mr. Henderson: How old it the well? President Edwin A. Alderman, at the time he ordered the construction of the "temple" for the well in 1896, had reason to believe that it was 132 years old at that time—or 30 years older than the University itself! Could this be? The answer is yes. The well was dug at the side of a trail which crossed the hill on which the town lies, and may have been put in that spot by members of the congregation of the Chapel of Ease, which stood near the present southwest corner of the open quadrangle behind the Carolina Inn. Records show the church was standing there as early as 1760, and there are no indications that a well was dug at the church site itself. The church, a missionary branch of the Church of England in Hillsboro, had fallen into disrepair and disuse by 1795, when the University opened its doors.

Tar Heels Work Hard For Opener Against State

Newman Steps Ahead O Long At Quarter

Barclay Says Passing May Be Key To Club

"Who's playing quarterback for Carolina?" was a question asked often here last year, and was usually met with a different answer each day, but the answer now is, "Marshall Newman with Albert Long right behind him."

"Newman is my quarterback," says Coach George Barclay. "He improves all the time. He's big and rough, can pass well, and now his ball handling is pleasing us very much.

"Long is doing fine, too. He mostly needs experience and he'll get plenty of that."

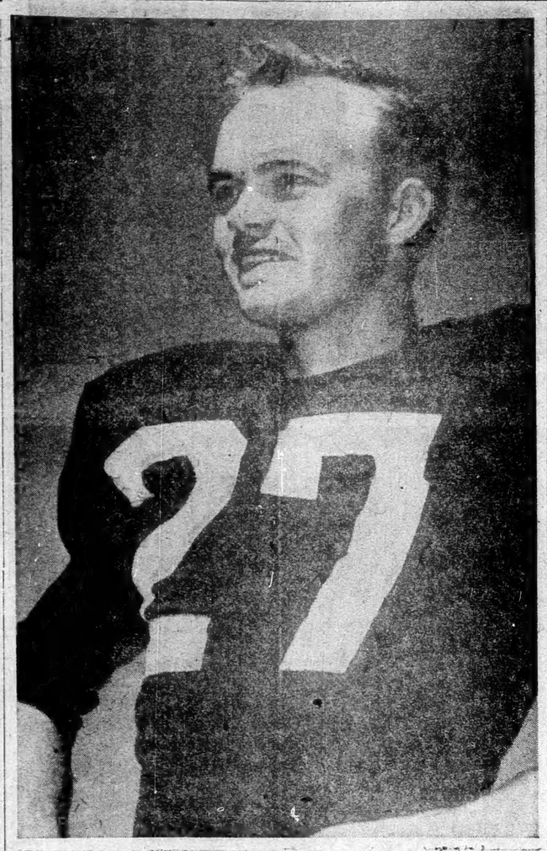
Meanwhile, Newman and Long battle it out for the number one spot, with the Clinton, N. C. junior holding his own against Long, a former Durham star.

Passing may be the key to an improved Carolina football showing this season, Barclay is declaring, and he has five of his seven passers from last year's squad to back up the statement.

However, the main figures in the Tar Heel aerial game are quarterbacks Newman and Long.

Newman, was the squad's top passer last year, hitting on 26 of 81 attempts for 297 yards and three touchdowns. Although only a junior, he is in his third season with the Tar Heels.

"Marshall has learned to soften up his passes," arclay declared. "I think that is one reason he is finding more success with his passing this season. He looked very good in the scrimmages with Bolling Field."



Long, a 176-pounder also entering his third year on the varsity. The six-foot quarterback tossed only eight times last year, but hit on four of them for 40 yards. "Long has showed definite improvement over last season." Barclay opined. "He is handling himself and the ball better and his passing is definately improved."

The other figures in the Tar Heel passing attack are quarterback Len Bullock, halfback Connie Gravitte, fullback Larry Parker and halfback Ken Keller. All four entered last season's passing statistics and are figured to do the same this year.

With Newman, Gravitte, Keller and Parker tentatively slated for starting duty, Barclay will have a potential passer at each of the backfield positions.

Bullock, the little back who had such a good day against Georgia last season, was runner-up to Newman in the passing statistics, making good on 21 of 42 passes for 212 yards. A junior from Ayden, N. C., he is expected to see duty behind Newman and Long. He's behind now, having been out with injuries.

Also to be considered in the passing department is little Doug Farmer, who engineered last season's edition of the Tar Babies. The spunky 168-pounder from Pulaski, Va., is the smallest man in the Tar Heel fold, but a capable passer.

Marshall Newman who will handle the first string quarterbacking duties in the Carolina split-T formation. The Clinton junior is in his third year of varsity play.

Grimsley Picks Sooners, Terps

By Will Grimsley

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 16 (AP)—The "impatient Sooners" is the word for Oklahoma's football team, which always has to find out in a hurry.

So pressure comes early to the pigskin prophet, who rates the Sooners 1-2 in the nation.

The first blush:

Oklahoma over California: Gene Calame and Buddy Leake, head an experienced Oklahoma backfield which has too much balance for the Golden Bears. But California is at home and has a great attacking weapon in Paul Larson, so it'll be close: About 28-21 Oklahoma.

Maryland over Kentucky: Last year's mythical national champions also have a rugged opening in Kentucky, a light fast team rebuilding under Blanton Collier. The Terrapins have too much muscle, speed and know-how, should romp 27-7.

Georgia Tech over Tulane: The Engineers are rated by many as best in Dixie. Tulane is cellar material in the Southeast. Tech, 28-9.

Baylor over Houston: George Sauer's Bears have been waiting a year to get even for last year's embarrassing setback. The Bears in a close one, 14-6.

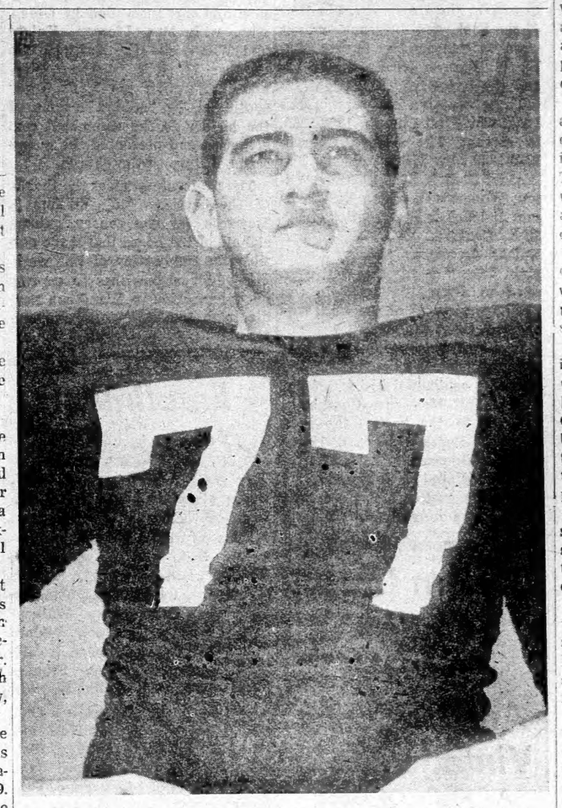
W & L Returns To Grid Scene

LEXINGTON, Va., Sept. 16 (AP) — President Frances P. Gaines said yesterday Washington and Lee University will return to the collegiate football scene in 1955—on an "amateur" basis—and will field a freshman team this fall.

In a talk before the school's first student assembly, Dr. Gaines also indicated minor sports would receive a financial shot-in-the-arm with the offer of an unidentified alumnus to foot the bill if the school would double the allocation for minor sports.

"That will be done," Dr. Gaines declared. He pointed out the term in "minor sports" includes basketball, baseball and track, considered major sports at most colleges. The additional funds, about $7,500, will be used for equipment and coaches' salaries.



Dr. Gaines emphasized the return to football would be on a strictly "amateur" basis. Athletic scholarships of students now in school will be honored, he said, but there will be no such thing as an athletic scholarship in the future at Washington and Lee.

The W&L president said all sports in the future will be under the direction of the Physicl Education Department. Football, basketball and baseball in the past were handled through the athletic director, while other activities were under the direction of the physical education staff.

Series Tickets Going Well

Sales of subscriptions to the Chapel Hill Concert Series stood this morning at about the halfway point toward the objective of 1,800 purchasers, according to Mrs. Norman Cordon, sales campaign chairman.

She estimated that approximately 900 of the four-concert tickets had been sold to townspeople to date. Jimmy Wallace, secretary of the organization, said mail orders were beginning to come in at a good rate. Both predicted the total sale of 1,800 subscripers would be fulfilled by the end of the student campaign next week. No more than this number will be sold since this is the seating ca-

Jack Maultsby, Chapel Hill tackle who will lead Carolina's experienced line this season from his tackle position. He wears the new Carolina uniform.

Intramurals Set To Open

Intramural competition will open the '54-'55 year with a bang and something new.

Headlining this year activities will be All Campus teams, in football, and soccer. The team members will be chosen daily from regular competition by a vote of managers and officials.

The first intramural activity will be Tag Football. Fraternity entries close September 23, with play beginning September 27. Fraternity managers will meet in room 301-A Woollen Gymnasium at seven o'clock, September 23. Dormitory entries will close September 27 with play beginning September 30. Dormitory managers will meet at the same hour and place as the Fraternity managers on September 27.

Men who live off-campus may organize teams through the Town Men's Association. For information call 9-424, the Intramural office at Woollen Gymnasium. Football field reservtaions may be made from September 22 to September 26 by calling or dropping by the Intramural office.

Anyone interested in becoming an Intramural official should call or come by the Intramural office. The first meeting will be held September 21, at 7:30 in room 301-A of Woollne Gymnasium.

The Fall Golf Tournament begins October 8, with all qualifying rounds in by October 6. The entry fee will be fifty cents.

The two division, single elimination, Fall Intramural Tennis Tournament begins October 4. All entries must be in by October 1. The open division will consist of varsity and tournament players, while the novice division will be made up of players with no tournament experience.

Walter Rabb, Intramural Director, along with his assistants George McGinnity and Bill Williams, invites anyone interested to come to the Gym for athletics and recretaion. These men are there to help you to become a part of the Campus Athletic program. Drop by and see them at their office, 301 Woollen Gym. The office hours are three to five o'clock on Monday through Friday.

Maultsby To Lead Big Experienced Linemen

A vicious line scrimmage against the freshmen, the second in as many days, provided the hard work for Carolina's varsity today as Coach George Barclay and his aides pushed the Tar Heels in preparation for the season's opener with N. C. State here Sept. 25.

The heavy first-year men, a line averaging well over 200, held its own with the veterans and promised good things for the future. The Tar Heel coaches, however, were satisfied with the performance of the varsity, especially the determination put into the work.

Leonard Bullock, who has been on and off the ailing list, had a whirl at quarterback today in passing practice and was impressive.

The 1954 Tar Heels, a "much improved team," is led by three old vetreans in the backfield and by big Jack Maultsby in the line. Connie Gravitte, Ken Keller, and Larry Parker, who was switched to fullback last week, are a trio that has eight years of college experience.

The middle of the line is outstanding, the best Carolina has had since 1948, the tackles good, and the ends less of a problem than expected after spring practice.

Head Coach George Barclay would like to win six games this season, a major undert 'ing in light of the usual murderous schedule the Tar Heels are playing.

There may be further switches before the season starts but if the opener with N. C. State here Sept. 25 were scheduled at the time of this writing, Coach George Barclay would start a Carolina team composed entirely of juniors and seniors.

There is keen competition for berths with several sophomores hot in contention, but the veterans were running on the number one team early this week. Five seniors and six juniors held the edge for starting calls.

In some ways that's a cosmopolitan group, but the four men in the backfield are all from North Carolina. One of the linemen, Bill Kirkman, is a Phi Beta Kappa. Another, Roland Perdue, plans to enter the ministry. Only four of them were considered regulars last year, although all of them except Maultsby were around and saw extensive action during the season.

Card Board

A spokesman for the Card Board yesterday announced an important meeting scheduled for Monday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the organization's office in the basement of Smith Dorm. The meeting is for all old members and new students who are interested in joining the group. The spokesman said that they particularly needed artists, ushers and office staff.

Koman and Parker are in brand new positions this year. The former was a center last year and was a starter a good part of the year as a sophomore, with Kirkman on the injured list. Parker was switched to fullback just last week when Coach Barclay decided that he wanted both him and Ken Keller in the backfield because both are superlative backs.

Guards Jimmy Neville and Ed Patterson, both of them 1954 regulars, may work themselves into the starting lineup. The end positions are by no means set. The backfield comes nearest to being definite although Albert Long could be a starter over Newman at quarterback. Both appear greatly improved.

While it seems unlikely now that, contrary to earlier plans, sophomores will be starters, several are sure to be top replacements. Halfbacks Ed Sutton and Larry McMullen were very impressive against Bolling Field. Big Don Klochak has shown the power and speed that he had last year as a freshman in scrimmages against the varsity. Barclay is counting strong on him.

Reports have come here that N. C. State stands to be a much improved team and the Tar Heels have been at work several days working against the Wolfpack's multiple offense as put on by the freshmen.

The State Department of Motor Vehicles says the death rate in North Caroina is about 60 miles per hour. Why be in such a hurry to reach the end of the road? Slow Down and Live.

Newly Published Booklet Features Local Church

"The Chapel Hill Methodist Church, A Centennial History, 1853-1953" has just been published by the church. It is a 66-page booklet, with a picture of the church on a cover of bright Carolina blue.

Fletcher M. Green, professor of history at the University, is editor of the book, and different sections were written by Mr. Green, Mrs. W. W. Pierson, Louis R. Wilson and the late Edgar W. Knight.

There are five chapters in the book: The First Church, 1853-1889, by Green; The Second Church, 1885-1920, by Mrs. Pierson; The Present Church, 1915-1953, by Wilson; Women's Work, by Mrs. Pierson; and Religious Activities of the 20th Century, by Wilson and Knight. An appendix giving a complete list of ministers was compiled by Green. Included in the book are pictures of the first, second and third churches.

In a preface, Green writes that Wilon "originally suggested the idea of a centennial history of the Chapel Hill Methodist Church in a letter to the pastor, the Rev. Henry G. Ruark, on July 6, 1949.

After due consideration the minister appointed a committee to study the matter and formulate plans for a history. The committee members were Mrs. Hope S. Chamberlain, Mrs. Guy B. Johnson, Mrs. Harold C. McCurdy, Mrs. Walter Patten, Mrs. Marvin H. Stacy, Mrs. Pierson, Green, Knight and Wilson, who was chairman.

Later Wilson resigned as chairman and was succeeded by Green, who, with Mrs. Pierson, Knight and Wilson did the writing. "On October 11, 1953, at the centennial celebration service," Green continued, he "read a resume of the history to the assembled congregation and presented the manuscript history to the church.

The preface expresses the thanks of the authors "to William S. Stewards, for the generous financial aid of the board that made possible the publication of this work. The editor also wishes to express his appreciation to Miss Dena Neville, who typed the entire manuscript."

SEC Presents Four Concerts

The Student Entertainment Committee will present a series of four concerts this year each featuring some well-known name in the music world.

This year's artists will be Alec Templeton, appearing on Oct. 14; the First Piano Quartet, Nov. 18; Rise Stevens, Jan. 11, and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, March 15.

The Student Entertainment Committee is now operating within the Graham Memorial Student Union budget. The concert series is open to all students free of charge.

All the concerts will begin at 8 p. m. and are presented in Memorial Hall. Townspeople and faculty members may purchase admission tickets for $1, if seats are available at 7:40 p. m.

The committee hopes to have a reception following each concert in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial for all students with the guest artist attending.

Chairman of the Committee this year is John Page. Other members are Jim Wallace, director of Graham Memorial, treasurer; John Beshara, publicity Chairman Joel Fleishman, Don Freeman, Ramon Yarborough, Gordon Forester, president of GMAB; Caroll Butts, and Jim McIntyre, acting secretary.

Faculty advisors for the Committee are Dr. Olin T. Mouzon, Dr. Willaim S. Newman, Dr. Samuel Selden and Dr. John W. Parker.

Student Car Registration Required By Regulations

The traffic committee of the University has reminded students that all parking lots on the campus proper are restricted to full-time faculty staff and physically handicapped student between the hours of 7 a. m. and 3 p. m., Monday through Saturday.

The campus proper is defined by the traffic committee as the area bounded on the north by Franklin St., on the south by Highway 54, on the east by Raleigh St. and on the west by S. Columbia St. and the Pittsboro Road.

Subject For High School Peace Study Announced

"The Role of the United Nations in the Building of World Peace" will be the subject for discussion in this year's High School World Peace Study and Speaking Program, it was announced today by E. R. Rankin, Director of the program.

All high schools in the state are invited to register for this annual program, which is sponsored by the University Extension Division. The contest provided for in the program is local in nature and may be held in the school at any convenient time during the school year.

Each high school registering for the program will be furnished one "World Peace" gold key to be awarded as the prize to the winning speaker, and 20 copies of the Peace Handbook, now in press.

Widespread interest has been created in this activity since the idea of a High School World Peace Study and Speaking Program was proposed eight years ago by Oscar K. Merritt, a Mount Airy businessman. Since the beginning of this program in the school year 1946-47, 1636 high schools have participated.

PERSON wanted to help set up and supervise evening newspaper circulation agency both on campus and off campus. Off campus requires use of car and will continue throughout year. This is excellent proposition for married student or couple. On campus can be handled by boy in dorm. Also want several boys for few days work soliciting subscriptions in dorms. For personal interview telephone Chapel Hill 8-0972 and leave your name and address.

Student Union Day Celebrated Today; Hypnotist Franz Polgar Here Tonight

An appearance of Dr. Franz J. Polgar, amazing telephatic wizard and old-timer on the Carolina campus, will wind up a long day of Graham Memorial-sponsored activities today.

Today is GM Day, and all students, old and new, will be treated to an inspection of the newly-revamped student union building, punch and cookies in the GM kitchen, Dixieland jazz on the front porch, free calendars for the fall semester and a look at the amazing Dr. Polgar tonight in Memorial Hall.

Dr. Polgar, a five-year favorite at Carolina, will perform at 8o'clock in Memorial Hall. Admission is 50 cents for upperclassmen, and freshmen are being offered a special ticket for 25 cents. Tickets are on sale at GM and in Y-Court.

The telepathist, called a "mental wizard" by The Saturday Evening Post, will put on a "hypnotism, memory stunts and mental miracles." His appearance will be sponsored by newly-formed GMAB — Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Inspection.

"Every door in Graham Memorial will be open," said GM Director Jimmy Wallace yesterday.

Yackety-Yack offices will be open from 2 to 4 p.m., said Co-editors Jackie Park and Cornell Wright. The annual, formerly located on second floor of Graham Memorial, is now installed in half of the old Tarnation offices.

Tarnation, campus humor magazine, will occupy the other half of the Yack office. Editor Rueben Leonard said his office would be open from noon until 5 p.m. today.

Student government offices, on second floor of GM, will be open all day long. Campus officers will be on hand to talk to visitors.

The Daily Tar Heel will be putting out its Sunday paper, but staffers have agreed to wear ties for the GM Day occasion, and to explain workings of the campus paper to visitors. DTH offices will be open from 10 a.m. until 8 p.m. tonight.

The main lounge, information booth, TV room and kitchen of the student union will observe regular GM Saturday hours—9 a.m. to 1 a.m. Sunday morning.

The popular Rendezvous Room will be open for dancing and dating, and Graham Memorial's new pool room—featuring prevailing pool-shooting prices—is expected to be racking balls all day long.

Punch & Cookies.

Punch and cookies will be served during the afternoon in Graham Memorial kitchen to any and all comers.

Graham Memorial combo, headed by Jim Crisp, will provide hot and warm music for students this afternoon. The combo will play on the student union front porch between 2 and 5 p.m.

Calendars.

A pocket-sized (4" by 2¾") calendar for the fall semester here will be distributed during the day at Graham Memorial information booth. The calendar, prepared by Gordon Forester of the GMAB and Coe Brassell of the Calendar Committee of GMAB, includes organizations and their presidents, information on Graham Memorial and the GM Activities Board, movies in the coming GM Film Series, listing of GM "Petites Musicales," and a day-by-day calendar of events for the fall semester.

Science At UNC

Scientist Shortage Acute

By CHARLES CHILDS

UNC, September, 1965:

"The growing shortage of scientists reached its critical point this month when only 50 per cent of the freshmen students were able to be assigned to already crowded science courses."

This lead might appear to be far-fetched since it predicts a situation in the next decade. Far fetched as it may seem, this condition may actually come about if the present trend is continued.

The shortage of scientists is acute. A report by the Engineering Manpower Commission said "there is a shortage of 33-40,-000 engineers and the shortage is increasing." Even in the field of medicine, which some people think is overcrowded, there is also a trying deficiency of qualified students. Dr. William N. Hilliard of the Medical Society of North Carolina reported that "in 1952-53 there was a decrease in applications for admission to medical schools over 1949-50."

The U. S. will find its high school enrollment nearly doubled by 1965, whereas its potential mathematics teachers will be down 41 per cent. Science teachers as a whole will be down 48 per cent.

Our state's high school enrollment by 1965 will be half again what it is today. This increase will place a strain on all the teachers, because there will be a constant demand for 250 science teachers per year.

What will be the effects if our country does not solve this growing problem? There will probably be a lower standard of health if the population increases more than the supply of doctors. New drugs, hitherto unknown, will assist in the preservation of health and save doctors many hours, but there still remains a constant need for drug research. Already certain bacteria and viruses are becoming "immune" to some new drugs, and it is possible that the "miracle drugs" of today will not perform as efficiently tomorrow.

Another consequence of an increase in the shortage of scientists will be that it will tend to even further the shortage. If we find industry attracting scientists and if the competition of scientists becomes keener than it is today, then we should expect to find that many prospective scientists who enter college will lack certain basic knowledge and skill. Things which they should have learned in high school will be left to the college, thereby throwing more weight on the college staff.

Many national professional organizations are attempting to warn of the danger facing our country's scientific program. These organizations are sponsoring research grants, high school contests and science fairs. All of these are to promote public interest in solving the problem.

In our state we find that the North Carolina Academy of Science has adopted a new program aimed at helping to relieve the scientist shortage. The Academy has plans to sponsor regional science fairs and a State Science Fair. Additional activities already include essay contests and an undergraduate organization entitled the North Carolina Collegiate Aademy of Science.

The shortage of scientists is critical, and it will effect every part of our life from clothing to airplanes. Programs of national and state science organizations mark a sincere step to inform the public of the shortage and how it can be overcome.

Sixty-five freshmen met last night to begin organizing the Freshman Fellowship—an organization for all freshmen, sponsored by the YMCA. Bob Leonard, fresehman from Hendersonville, who attended Freshman Camp, was chairman of the meeting.

Interest in four special groups was indicated: improvement of reading and study habits; beginning and advanced dance classes; deputations to girls' colleges, and YMCA leadership training.

In addition a program committee for the regular meetings of the entire fellowship was recommended and a Steering Committee to guide the group was elected. The committee is composed of: Edwin Avery, Winston-Salem; Mitchell Borden, Charlotte; Jerry Boudreau, N. Augusta, S. C.; Joe Clapp, Greensboro; Stewart Conson Grensboro; Bob Leonard, Hendersonville; Jerry Mayo, Chocowinity; Gary Nichols, Chevy Chase, and Dan Southerland, Arlington, Va.

A general meeting of the Fellowship is planned for next Monday night, 5:15-7:00, in the south dining room of Lenoir hall. All interested freshmen are invited.

Jim Turner, junior from Winston-Salem, Bobby Newton, sophomore from Creedmore and Larry Ford from Landis are upper-class advisors for the group. Turner is chairman of freshman work in the YMCA and was director of the 1954 Freshman Camp, which was attended by 180 freshmen. Newton and Ford were counselors at the camp.

Next Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock, the preliminary judging will be held for the first Consolidated University Queen among nine finalists, five of whom will be from WC, three from UNC and one from State. She will be presented at the half of the State-Carolina football game with her court in attendance.

Each women's dormitory and sorority has chosen one representative to take part in the preliminary contest here. Judges for the contest in Gerrard Hall on Sunday will be Roy Holsten, assistant dean of students; George Harper, professor of English, and Charles Bernard, assistant dean of admissions.

Students ae urged to attend the preliminary judging on Sunday.

Final competition for the title will take place on next Saturday in Gerrard Hall. Judges for this closed contest will be Kay Kyser, Georgia Carol Kyser and Thad Eure, N. C. secretary of state. Eure will also crown the queen.

The Order of the Grail will sponsor a dance from 8:30 to 11:30 p. m. next Saturday with Jimmy Johnson and his orchestra furnishing the music. The dance will be semi-formal and students are reminded to get their dates early.

WUNC-TV Tower Is Up, But No Television Til December

WORKMEN on the "tag line" strain to pull the University's new 83-foot antenna away from its base while resetting it. The tower was erected atop Terell's Mountain at 12:25 p.m. yesterday.

WUNC-TV moved nearer to being yesterday with the erection of the antenna in Chatham county and he hammering of workmen in Swain Hall here on the Campus.

"We've only scratched the surface as far as installation is concerned," said Alan McIntyre, chief engineer for Consolidated University Television. But all the plans are in, he said, and the station should begin operations by Christmas as expected.

The 83-foot antenna was fixed in place atop the tower on Terrell's Mountain at 12:55 p.m. after an unsuccessful attempt to hoist it up Thursday.

The construction crew took an hour to raise the antenna to the top of the 798-foot tower. The antenna weighs 10,000 pounds.

The crew failed to attach the antenna when the hoisting winch failed.

Swain Hall was a shambles yesterday as workmen continued the extensive renovation begun in July. The ground floor partitions and fixtures have been removed completely and plans are to use that floor for television and moving picture studios. The Communication Center will occupy the basement and the upstairs portion of the building.

Meanwhile State College at Raleigh and Woman's College in Grensboro continued work on installations for productions on Consolidated University Television.

At Woman's College the old laundry building is being rebuilt to house studios. A new building is being constructed at State. Both buildings should be completed within a month, said McIntyre.

All three stations kill transmit Mountain.

Larkins Tells Young Democrats They Should Elect Delegation

CHARLOTTE, Sept. 17 (AP)—The State Democratic chairman told North Carolina's Young Democrats today that the election of a solid Democratic Congressional delegation is "our first order of business."

Speaking in Charlotte, which threw its vote to Republican Rep. Charles R. Jonas in 1952, State Rep. John D. Larkins Jr. attacked the Eisenhower Administration. He said that because of "its own disunity" it is unable "to get things done."

Most o fLarkins' address dealt with the depression of the 1930s and with what he termed Republican failures. He reviewed his own party's history claiming that it is the friend of the farmer upon whom is based the prosperity of both business and labor.

But at the end he turned his attention to the 9th and 10th Congressional Districts where the two parties are staging their most bitterly contested races this fall. Jonas is opposed by Charlotte City Judge J. C. Sedberry and Rep. Hugh Q. Alexander of Kannapolis is challenged by Republican William E. Stevens Jr. of Lenoir in the 9th District.

Avoiding personal criticism of Jonas, Larkins said that the "progress and prosperity" that has come to the state under the Democrats justifies the election of an all-Democratic congressional delegation.

"No matter how fine an individual that person might be, he represents Republican policies," Larkins declared. "And there are enough Democrats capable of giving us fine representation in Congress who are entitled to our support in the 9th and 10th Districts who must be elected in November.

He urged the Young Democrats to "get the Democrats to the polls" and "let's not have any more Republican victories by default. The Democratic party is a militant, fighting party. It wins by doing more for the people than the Republicans are willing to do—and then we expect our people to show their appreciation of good sound government by going to the polls and voting."

Playmakers Set '54 Slate

The Carolina Playmakers this week announeed the opening of their 37th season of play production. The first show this year will be "The Crucible," by Arthur Miller, to be presented in the Playmakers Theatre October 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17.

Following "The Crucible" will be "Darkening Shore," a new play by Kermit Hunter; "Arsenic and Old Lace;" "Show Boat;" a new full-length experimental play, and "Julius Caesar," in the Forest Theatre.

"Show Boat," the musical selection of the year, will have its University theater premiere on the North Carolina campus. This play has never before been done by a college group and was released to the Playmakers because of the fine reputation of former work done by this organization.

The Carolina Playmakers are also sponsoring two outside attractions. The first of these will be "Three For Tonight," starring Marge and Gower Champion, Harry Belafonte and the voices of Walter Schumann, and orchestra. The second is "The Caine Mutiny Court Martial" with Paul Douglas, Wendell Corey and Steve Brodie, directed by Charles Laughton.

Fleishman Named To NSA Office

The election of senior Joel E. Fleishman as chairman of the Virginia-Carolina region of the U. S. National Student Association was announced yesterday in Ames, Ia.

As NSA regional chairman, he will be responsible for coordinating the activities of member schools in his area and seeking new affiliations among no-member campuses.

The NSA represents more than 800,000 American college students through their campus goverments. World's largest democratic student federation, its membership includes more than 300 accredited schools and universities throughout the U. S.

Bennett Says UNC Dorms Are Greatly Improved This Year

"There has been more dorm improvement this year at Carolina than during any other of my 35 years here," said J. S. Bennett, director of operations, yesterday.

Bennett had only from June 10 to September 10 to push through UNC's most extensive dorm improvement plan, which includes better bathroom facilities and the putting down of new floors.

Old bathroom facilities have been done over and modernized. All improved facilities are now in use except for the first floor of Steele. First floor Steele occupants will be rewarded for their patience when the new bathrooms, which Bennett says will make the old ones look like an outdoor privy, are completed.

Vance-Battle-Pettigrew, Old East and Old West bath rooms are completely done over. Steele has new fixtures on the second and third floors, in addition to the completely new first floor.

Mixed water valves were put in several dorms, which Bennett says will keep students from alternately freezing and burning to death.

Asphalt flooring—designed to cut down noise, make the rooms more attractive and easier to clean—have been put in the upper quad rooms.

The lower quad basements which were shower rooms have been turned into game and vending machine rooms.

Rubber tile has ben laid in the hallways and stairways of the upper and lower quads. This type of floor has been used in the Library for thirty-two years with out change.

Vending machines have been taken out of the halls and social rooms whenever possible. Several dorm rooms have been turned over to the vending machine companies.

Acoustical ceilings have been put in the lower quad social rooms.

Bennett asked for student cooperation in keping the dorms in their present condition. He said he doesn't want another parent telling him, after Cobb's first year of occupancy, that it is the most abused public building they have ever seen.

Rub-A-Dub-Dub 3 Men In A Tub (& 40 Down Below)

The University's report to the State Advisory Budget Commission included this self-evident declaration: "The crowding of three men into a room designed for two is bad for proper study habits, morale, and general student discipline."

University Housing Officer James Wadsworth pictured the housing situation as "good." "All the dorms are full," he told The Daily Tar Heel. "Nine of them have three men to the room, but there are only about 40 men living temporarily in the basement of Cobb."

In calling the situation "good", of course, Mr. Wadsworth was speaking from experience. It has been worse. But this year, as for several years, the Housing Office must wait until fraternities induce new pledges to move into fraternity houses, until students with dorm rooms drop out of school, until some, disgusted with three man rooms, move into private homes in town, before all the students who want and deserve University housing may have it.

The University has presented its request for a 400-man dormitory to the state legislature. Such a building could not possibly be ready until 1956, by which time student enrollment, which this week passed 6,000, may be nearing 7,000.

Members of the General Assembly are said to be skeptical of shelling out the million dollars that the new dormitory would cost. If President Gray's articulate argument to the Budget Commission last Tuesday did not convince them, perhaps they should talk to the 40 cellar-dwellers who are still living barracks-style in the basement of Cobb Dormitory, or to their younger brothers at home, for whom there may be no living quarters in the University for years to come.

GOP Weather: Chillier

Cartoonist Herblock's Republican elephant, shivering in the chill of a political nor'easter from Maine elsewhere on this page, may be the humorous picture of a serious reality for the GOP. The old elephant is probably remembering the cracker-barrel phrase that begins, "As Maine goes. . ." and if that saw holds true for the year 1954, recent Republican campaign boasts will have a hollow ring, indeed, by December.

Democrats in Maine are scarcer than Republicans in New Hanover County. But Maine elected a Democrat, Edmund S. Muskie, governor. Add to that the fact that the extremely popular Sen. Margaret Chase Smith got only 58 percent of the total vote for senator (and that Vice President Nixon begged Maine voters for a "greater Republican margin than ever") and that the Republican vote in the congressional elections was 10 to 15 percent below the 1952 levels, and the Maine election becomes all the more remarkable.

The chill winds for the Republicans are blowing from elsewhere, too. In Wisconsin, home of you-know-who, a man who described himself as a "strong McCarthy opponent" won nomination as secretary of state on the Republican ticket, walloping the candidate who had the GOP blessing. The District Attorney who fought the formation of the Wisconsin "Joe Must Go" club was beaten.

Reports of Democratic upsurges in popularity are in this week from Illinois, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, via newspaper polls.

Even Republican sources are down in the mouth. Listen to Republican columnist David Lawrence: "If the election were held tomorrow, the GOP would suffer its worst catastrophe since 1910. . .the unpalatable truth is that the only unresolved question to be settled is not who will win the November elections, but how big the Democratic margin is to be."

Since most Democrats share this view, it almost amounts to being unanimous.

Dorms Should Push For Visiting Pact

Louis Kraar

COED VISITING in dormitories might be accomplished—if the Inter-Dormitory Council will decide exactly what it wants and go after it.

Right now the only regular coed visiting in a dorm is in Connor, which houses grad students. However, any dorm may have a party in its social room if the proper arrangements are made with Roy Holsten in South Building. The dorm parties, though, are one-shot affairs and do not represent an effort to establish regular visiting.

The biggest problem involved in working out a dorm visiting agreement is the lack of facilities. The ideal arrangement for coed visiting (and future dorm builders should consider this) would include a social room cut off from the living quarters and a powder room for lady visitors.

The IDC, I understand, has a committee working on this, but it has not progressed too much. I know that South Building is eager to try to work out something if the IDC people will just be more diligent and definite GOVERNOR Umstead seems to have a good sense of humor, even during business meetings. At least that's the way it seemed to me over in Raleigh the other day when I went over to cover the Advisory Budget Commission.

Dr. E. K. Graham, Women's College chancellor, was telling the legislative group how his school turns out many of the state's best teachers.

"How many teachers did WC graduate last spring?" Umstead asked.

Dr. Graham rattled off the figure, then he paused. "Actually, to be perfectly honest about this, you have to remember that most of our girls get married."

"You wouldn't want to propose that this committee try to stop that, would you?" asked the Governor.

I CAME out of the bank on Franklin and walked on down towards the post office. The man in the doorway of one of the stores caught my eye as being rather different from a usual Franklin St. sight. Then I realized it was because he was standing under a store awning with a drawn pistol.

Students coming out of the N.C. Cafeteria stopped to look down the street at the man with a pistol. I thought of this summer's Carrboro bank robbery. Then a second take revealed that the man with the drawn gun was a bank guard. Somehow I felt a little better as I continued on down the sunny street to the post office.

THE OUTLOOK for permanent improvement for this campus is so dim in legislative circles right now that even the usually optimistic University News Bureau is getting a bit down in the mouth.

In a story indirectly quoting Journalism School dean Norval Neil Luxon, the News Bureau said this week:

"He (Luxon) . . . told of plans for a new home for the School of Journalism, pointing out that Howell Hall, with renovations, will be turned over to journalism in case the School of Pharmacy gets a long-needed new building."

Sen. Watkins: A McCarthy Foe?

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — There are some vigorous gavel-pounding some paradoxes about the ator Watkins to keep Joe McCarthy in his place. They point to the probability that Watkins is either a man of extraordinary interstinal fortitude or has suffered exraordinary Senatorial nausea at McCarthy's behavior. Or perhaps the explanation is a combination of both.

For the Austere Mormon from Utah who now rules against McCarthy was once considered quite a friend of McCarthy. Their associations were the same. Their views, certainly on foreign policy, were the same. And when Watkins faced a tough re-election fight two years ago, McCarthy sent one of his smear artists, an ex-Communist, to Utah to apply an unfair smear. brush to Watkins' opponent. Watkins once even delivered a Senate speech at McCarthy's request.

Futhermore, the Senators who have brought the censure charges against McCarthy are no particular friends of Watkins. Flanders of Vermont, though a Republican, travels with an entirely different group of Republicans. The Utah Senator is an isolationist, Flanders a believer in international cooperation. Flanders once even twitted Watkins in the Senate Restaurant for drinking tea, because tea-drinking is again Mormon Church rules. (Watkins replied that it was Mormon Tea—namely milk, sugar and hot water.)

Watkins also has little in common with Fulbright, the Arkansas Democrat, or Wayne Morse, th Oeregon Independent, the other two Senators who brought censure charges against McCarthy.

However, Watkins does have some strict ideas about right and wrong, plus the ability to reverse himself completely.

A Mormon Bishop

A Bishop in the Mormon Church, Watkins is a conscientious, upright, devout man at his religion. He neither smokes nor drinks, avoids cocktail parties, once asked the Library of Congress to furnish him with figures on the smoking and drinking habits of the nation, following which he published the fact that American were spending $67.22 per capita on liquor, $26.39 per person on tobacco, but only $21.39 on schools. This explains Watkins' rigorous ruling that no smoking will be permitted during meetings of his censure committee.

Most puzzling paradox about Senator Watkins is that in Utah Watkins was head of a Mormon "stake" or region where he put across the same New Deal ideas that he later fought so bitterly in the Senate. At Orem, Utah, he organized a strawberry cooperative and cold-storage plant pretty much on New Deal lines; built a community theatre, and started a system of socialized medicine, for dental work on schopl children which made Utah doctors shiver with apprehension.

In contrast, Watkins turned around and helped defeat the late Senator Elbert Thomas of Utah, another Mormon, on the ground that Thomas favored socialized medicine.

Watkins Can Reverse

In further contrast, Watkins has voted against almost every type of New Deal legislation coming before the Senate. His record can be described as middle-of-the-road, veering to the reactionary—except when Utah interests are at stake. When western wheat first began to pile up in 1947, for instance, Watkins startled his GOP colleagues by proposing that the government buy up the nation's entire whea terop and apportion it to bakers and other users.

McCARTHY

. . .the investigation is on the other foot.

"This would be complete ocmmunism in wheat" exploded Congressman Wolcott of Michigan, amazed at the philosophy of a fellow Republican who hitherto had voted against every type of control.

As a result of similar Republican opposition, the Watkins proposal, needless to say, did not pass.

This ability to reverse himself probably accounts in part for the Spartan manner in which Watkins has been ruling against his old friend Joe.

Both elected to the Senate at the same time, the two have been quite close, probably more friendly than Johnson of Colorado has been unfriendly to McCarthy. Both, for instance, belonged to the little band of Senate isolationists whom the late Senator Vandenberg of Michigan complained of as upsetting bipartisan foreign policy and giving him his greatest headaches.

Two years ago when Watkins faced a tough re-election fight from Democratic congressman Walter Granger of Utah, it was McCa-thy who came to the rescue. He sent to Utah Harvey Matusow, an admitted ex-Communist who was used in various political campaigns in an attempt to link Democrats with the Communists. Matusow has since described his tactics as unfair and has recanted. But in Utah in the fall of 1952 he did a most effective job for Senator Watkins, and Watkins, of course knew it, also knew tht Joe McCarthy was responsible.

Refugee Champion

One year later, however, Watkins found himself in exactly the opposite camp from McCarthy regarding immigration. Reversing his old isolationism, Watkins led the fight for the Eisenhower refugee program.

So, having taken a cold and critical attitude toward his one-time friend during the start of the censure hearings, it's perfectly possible for Watkins to reverse himself. For, intertwined with the strict religious discipline that the Senator imposes on his life are some broad streaks of pettiness.

Watkins fought ferociously, for instance, to keep Ray Murdock from becoming counsel of the Senate Labor Committee, merely because Ray was the brother of Watkins' former political opponent, ex-Sen. Abe Murdock of Utah. Watkins also grabbed a bill written by Congressman Frances Walter of Pennsylvania giving American citizenship to 5,000 foreign-born GI's in Korea and put his own name in the legislation.

Walter's Bill had already passed the House. But Watkins said: "This is a Republican Congress and we've got to take credit for some of the good legislation that's passed."

So he introduced the "Watkins Bill", an identical word-for-word copy of the Walter Bill; and under the new title it had to go through the House all over again, thus delaying citizenship for 5,000 GI's in Korea.

Guzzle, Guzzle, Guzzle

The pointless and endless hassle between fraternity row and South Building over who can drink where and when and under what conditions seems likely to bore the student body for yet another year.

Whether the Greeks will recant and try to get back the visiting agreement which President Bob Gorham scrapped last spring, with the result that the Greeks were left without any agreement whereby coeds might enter a fraternity house, or whether they will continue to beat their heads against the administrative wall can well be determined by the IFC Monday night.

IFC President Henry Issac- has said that the IFC may consider at the Monday meeting the letter from Dean Fred H. Weaver to the fraternities stating the conditions under which a plan for coed visiting could be set up.

Weaver and the Administration have set forth a definite, clear-cut policy concerning drinking, namely that "the University disapproves drinking by students and it looks to student government to support this policy so far as possible."

For years fraternities and other parties concerned have called the Administation's stand hypocritical and unclear. They say that the Administration contradicts itself when it says on the one hand that it disapproves drinking and on the other that there shall be no drinking within or on the premises of a fraternity house while women are present.

The Administration had rather students did not drink. But it knows that they will and that nothing short of martial law will stop them, Simple morality is the only reason we can see as necessary for the Administration's stand on women visitors in fraternity houses.

If the IFC and student government continue to monkey with the Administration, they may well find themselves out in the cold even more than last spring when student government took it upon itself to decide what was best for the student body. It may find that studen freedom can exist here only as long as it stays within the bounds which separate student autonomy and administrative authority.

This reporter cannot believe that the IFC and others who attack the Administration's stand will let false idealism take the place of practicality in their negotiations or that they will be so ultimately reckless to invoke the Administration to such aggravation as to justify it in revoking that degree of student freedom of action and expression with which it has graced the student body.

Meanwhile, as since college campuses began to be, it remains the privilege, and almost the sacred duty, of every true collegiate to imbibe.

And they will imbibe. If there is a Carolina Way of Life, we believe that alcohol is an indispensible part of it.

So, we believe, does Dean Weaver.

As anyone who has listened to a Republican speech has heard, the Government is crawling with spies and traitors and other Communist agents. Consequently, when the FBI issued its official report for fiscal year 1954 (July 1953 to July 1954) we could hardly wait to see what J. Edgar Hoover had done about this terrifying situation. Well, you won't believe it, but the FBI reported that it had not made a single arrest for espionage or sabotage during this period. What is one to think? Is J. Edgar falling down on the job? Or could it be that GOP orators exaggerated the infiltration? We shrink from either conclusion. — The Democratic Digest.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . "—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was making his way heavily, albeit he did not have a load on, including new texts, I wondered what went?

"I can't find my buddies," he mourned, sprawling out on the greensward in the lee of the Library. "You remember my pals, Mr. Neckley and Mr. Wump?"

Oh, of course! The giraffe and the frog?

"Gotta have them to get the high and low views of things," The Horse pointed out with an unmanicured hoof. "Me, I'm a middle-of-the-roader. I find this a most dangerous occupation, however."

How did The Horse figure this?

"People nowadays are suspicious of anybody who isn't violently for or against something," The Horse explained. "As Doc Ullman of our justly famed Classics Department put it not long ago, 'The middle-of-the-roader to-day, whether on U. S. 1 or in Politics, is in a fair way to get his fenders curled, his hubcaps knocked loose, and his driving license mangled if not completely revoked.'"

But, if people knew you were opposed to them, didn't they dislike you? And if you were a middle-of-the-roader, how could they dislike you? A middle-of-the-roader was passive, yes?

"Small wonder you nearly had to repeat Hygiene Eleven three times, Roger," The Horse reproved me loftily. "People want to dislike other people, if they don't like them. It is not fashionable to entertain sentiments of a passive or neutral character about anybody or about anything, in those days of the fast buck and the slow smile. Heck, it even gets into our eating habits: you love grits; or you hate 'em; you love seafood; or you hate it; you love beer, or—well, skip that, it ain't a good comparison, for who could hate beer!"

I hated hot, high-priced beer, myself.

"There you go, Roger," The Horse sighed. "Even you have joined the ranks of lovers and haters. Not that you have ever been observed to turn a beer, hot, cold, or middle-of-the-road in quality, temperature, size or even flavor. But to terminate this unproductive digression, as my ol' pal Cactus Bill Adams of Botany would say, I'm sunk without Neckley to give me the high view, and Wump to give me the low view. Worse, they can't get along without me. They depend on me. They need me."

The Horse's eight-balls of eyes crossed in deep emotion when Mr. Wump, his eyes tight-lidded as always, came leap-frogging out of the bushes.

"Dear, dear, what an awful life he leads, and just for me," The Horse said happily, "Consider what low views Mr. Wump must see to keep his eyes closed all the time, Roger! Golly, it must be something like being a Republican, you think?"

Or, I thought, like a Dook, ugh, student.

We were attracted by a loud, slapping noise to look upward at a Ninth Level window of the Library. A Sweet Young Thing was doing her best to look indignantly at a giraffe which she tried to close the window through which the giraffe apparently had been looking.

"Neckley, old boy!" The Horse nickered happily. "Good old Neckley hard at work getting the high views while I have been grossly slandering him! I say, Neckley! Just what is the high view?"

Mr. Neckley maintained a dignified silence as he moved to another window, where he paused to look in. His puppydog's tail started to wag in appreciation of something or other.

"Noncommittal brute," The Horse grumbled. "But then, he always was. Sometimes I question the true value of a frog who refuses to look at the low views he lives among, or a giraffe who makes no comment on the high views he is familiar with. But it's what the public wants, and the team is together once more. Ah, yes, Roger, I look forward to a worthwhile, self-sacrificing year of humility, consideration, patriotism, and courtesy in my column!"

"Wump!" said Mr. Wump.

This being Saturday, it seems like a good day to talk about football. And the subject of our discussion is Roland Perdue, a young gentleman who has received some interesting publicity in the last week or so that has resulted in his being nicknamed "Paul Bunyan" by members of the Tar Heel football squad. If you believe everything you read in the papers, Brother Perdue approached Coach Barclay and Trainer Fritz Lutz and asked if they could find some work chopping down trees between the two daily drills the Tar Heels were conducting prior to the start of classes. Roland wasn't getting enough work to keep him in shape, according to the story, which added that Grounds Maintenance Chief Raymond Hutchins found him some trees that needed thinning out and handed him an axe. We discover, after closer investigation, that the whole thing was the product of Trainer Lutz's fertile imagination, and it was foisted on Sports Publicist Jake Wade, who sent it out to the newspapers with a first paragraph which announced: "It sounds incredible. . .but it's true." It not only sounded incredible, Jake, it wasn't true.

Freshman Gridders Stack Up With Best In Conference

Ken Keller Injures Ankle In Scrimmage With Fort Eustis

Tar Heel Sports

CAROLINA'S TAR HEEL enjoyed the competition of a scrimmage here yesterday with Fort Eustis, Va. but paid the price such scrimmages sometimes exact, the injury of a first rate ballplayer. Ken Keller, after making a fine gain through the middle of the Eustis team, was brought down in a jolt by three huskies, painfully twisting his ankle. The game little Keller got up and tried to walk it off, but the pain forced him to lie down again, groaning. The ankle was immediately put in an ice pack, and the only official word announced was, "The extent of the injury was not known tonight but it was not believed to be serious."

This statement belies the fact that an injury to any first string player is serious, with the opening game looming ahead on Saturday. Keller, conceeded to be the best back on the squad, especially is needed hale and hearty, not limping around with a tightly strapped ankle, or even sitting on the bench with a swollen joint. A freshman football player, now two weeks constant observer and opponent of the varsity, saw Keller's plight and moaned, "There goes our backfield." A gross exageration, but an indication of the demoralizing effect an injury can have.

EVERY YEAR THE cry goes up in the Major Leagues spring baseball camps that the practice does more harm than good, especially after a major injury such as Bobby Thompson's ankle break. This is not true in baseball, and even less true in football. The training is necessary to get the men in shape and back on their game. In football, it would be impossible to train without contact work. In fact unless carried to an extreme, the rule is the more contact the better, since with each bang the player is in better shape to take the next one. The competitive scrimmages with an outside team are another great help. The players usually try harder than in practice, and the coaches get an idea of their men under actual fire.

The danger, the price, is an injury.

Coach Barclay had seen better scrimmages than the one his team staged yesterday, but he knew the reason why and wasn't discouraged. Said Barclay, "They were tired. They've been working twice a day, doing rough stuff all day, most of this week. They scrimmaged two hours yesterday—they were just beat."

The players were tired, it was obvious to the handle of spectators who watched the "secret" scrimmage in Kenan Stadium. Sometimes when the excitement mounted the team would show a spurt of energy and played with new fervor, but usually it went through the plays fighting to move their heavy legs.

THERE WERE BRIGHT spots: "Our pass protection pleased me," said Barclay, "at least until the end when they buckled. I liked our pass defense, too."

How about the quarterbacking? "I was very pleased with the quarterbacking. Newman and Long both looked very good."

The final tally of the scrimmage was three scores apiece, though Eustice wasn't near the team Bolling Field was, who Carolina played to a standstill last week. The Armymen weren't in shape, but there were a number of top flight men on the team, including at least six standouts from the Tennessee team. Herky Payne, a back, and John Michaels, an All-America guard were the two best known men from Tennessee, and quarterback T. Jones had played in Kenan Stadium before. He led Texas to a 28-7 win over the Tar Heels in 1952.

The Eustis coach had little to say after the scrimmage while he made his team run wind sprints. "Carolina has a good team," he said. "I can't say anything else because we're a service team and have to watch our P's and Q's."

Frosh Debut On October 7

Floyd And Lackey Are Coach Newcomers

Thirty-seven UNC Freshman footballers, including some of the top prep talent from North Carolina high schools, turned to one-a-day drills this week and classes while pointing for an October 7 opener with the University of South Carolina frosh at Laurinburg, S. C.

Paced by lanky ends and a swift backfield, the Tar Babies have been whipping into shape with drills under new freshman coaches Ralph Floyd and student-assistant Dick Lackey.

The UNC Frosh line, which should stack up with the best in ACC junior varsity circles weight-wise, has been in for heavy contact work, while the backs and ends have worked pass patterns and running plays.

Following the opener, the Tar Babies will take on the Wake Forest frosh at Wilson, N. C., October 15; Virginia at Charlottesville, October 22; Maryland here, November 6; and the Blue Imps of Duke at Durham on Thanksgiving Day.

The Tar Baby roster includes 29 scholarship gridders and seven who performed in the prep All-Star game at Greensboro in August. Tops among these are Jimmie Jones of Greensboro, the game's Most Valuable Player, Joe Temple, Jack Lineberger, and Willis (Happy) Setzer. Jones suffered an army injury in early drills, but is expected to be back in action before the opener. The only other injured player on the squad is halfback Wally Vale, who will be sidelined by a kidney ailment for about two weeks, according to Coach Floyd.

Seven Lettermen Strengthen Improved 1954 Soccer Squad

North Carolina's '54 soccer squad is bound to show an improvement over last year's team, which wound up the schedule with a 3-4 record, predicts Coach Marvin Allen.

Allen, who is putting his charges through daily two-hour drill, has seven returning lettermen among the 35 squad membes. With the breaks in his favor, Allen expects the Tar Heels to field one of the best teams in the ACC.

The Tar Heels have an eight-game regular season schedule which opens with Maryland, last year's conference champion, October 16th. Two practice games with Fort Bragg will be played on the first and eighth of October.

Coach Allen and freshman mentor Harry Pawlick said that all students interested in soccer should contact them. Pawlick has five experienced players in his 12-man squad.

The 1954 varsity schedule:

Oct. 16	Maryland	Away
Oct. 20	Wash. & Lee	Away
Oct. 21	Roanoke	Away

Avila Buys Franchise?

Army Ballplayed Booted

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 17 (AP)—Mexican baseball circles today had Bobby Avila of the Cleveland Indians, buying the Mexico City team of the Mexican Winter League. The rumors also said that Avila had received permission from his American League bosses to play second base for the club.

It was reported that Avila purchased the club by paying the debts piled up during the ownership of the team by Mario Ruiz.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Sept. 17 (AP)—Don Holleder, Army's best pass catching end, has been temporarily dropped from the football squad as a result of disciplinary action by the tactical department. Holleder, a junior from Webster, N. Y., may be reinstated but not before the opener with South Carolina on Sept. 25.

Bill Chance of Mount Hope, Kan., a reserve center, will take Holleder's place in the lineup.

Date And Student Wife Ducats On Sale In Gym

Date and student wife tickets for football games may be bought at the ticket office in Woolen Gym from now until the opening game.

Rocky Kayoes Ezzard In Eight

NEW YORK, N. Y., Sept. 17—World heavyweight champion Rocky Marciano knocked out challenger Ezzard Charles here tonight in the eighth round to keep his title.

The Brockton, Mass., champion floored Charles early in the bout and was in control all the way. It was the first time in their two fights Marciano had downed Charles. He took a 15 round decision in their first match and this was a rematch.

The fight had been postponed twice during the last two days because of the weather, but was finally fought here tonight in Yankee Stadium.

Because of the delay, both fighters had to weigh in a second time but Bob Christenberry, chairman of the New York State Athletic Commission, didn't need to bother. Charles still weighed 192½, exactly the same as Wednesday, and Marciano had picked up only a half pound to scale 187 pounds. Charles was the heaviest in his career, seven pounds over his weight for their first match, June 17, while Marciano was a half pound lighter for the second go-round.

Nation's Collegians Open Football Wars

NEW YORK, Sept. 17 (AP)—College football, which made a hesitant entrance tonight, sweeps to the center of the athletic stage tomorrow with a dozen contests that would look well on a November schedule.

There will even be a game on your TV—ABC screen to compete for your interest with the hot National Baseball League struggles, horse racing and Canadian version of football.

Oklahoma visits California in the TV game of the day. Oklahoma, voted the nation's second best in the recent pre-season AP poll, may be handicapped by the bruised ribs which kept Gene Calamity Calame, senior quarterback, on the sidelines much of the past week.

But Buddy Leake, a halfback, is back to carry the mail for the Sooners and the club is blessed with a pair of top ends in Carl Allison and Max Boydston. California's star is quarterback Paul Larson.

In other spectaculars, Mayland, the 1953 No. 1 team but voted no better than third for 1954, visits rebuilding Kentucky; Georgia Tech sends its Sugar Bowl kings against Tulane; Rice meets Florida; Baylor looks for revenge at Houston's expense; Texas unfurls its powerful machine against Louisiana State and Rice meets Florida.

There will be little or no activity in the East or in the Big Ten sector although five of the Big Seven machines will be busy.

Chuck Mather, who won six straight state championships at Massillon, Ohio, High School, makes his debut as a college mentor with a Kansas team that has only one starter back from last year. The Jayhawks bang into Texas Christian. Iowa State, also with a new coach, plays South Dakota State and Kansas State plays a Colorado A & M team that eked out a 14-14 verdict with K-State in '53. Drake is the guest of Colorado.

Texas A & M, only club to defeat Texas Tech last year, hopes that new coach Paul Bear Bryant will repeat the triumph although the Aggie squad is so small that the coaching staff has to offer itself in sacrifice during scrimmages.

Utah goes to the WEST Coast to meet Washington while Idaho and Oregon mix in a Pacific Coast Conference game that counts in the championship race just as if it were played in November.

There also is a league game in the Southern Conference with Davidson mixing it up with Virginia Military.

Virginia Firm Joins Town's Haberdashers

Last Saturday Chapel Hill welcomed to the community a new clothing store. Stevens-Shepherd opened their doors to the public at a grand opening offering a complete line of men's clothing and furnishings. They also carry a large supply of women's sports apparel and accessories.

Joe Augustine, the new manager and former manager of the Sport Shop, has invited all students to come in and see their line of goods. The store is a branch of Miller-Rhodes in Richmond and will carry their complete line of sportswear. Stevens-Shepherd is located where the Varsity Men's Wear, which had been operated by Jack Lipman for 26 years, had been.

Fashionwise, Stevens-Shepherd has been a top name in clothing for 69 years. Stevens-Shepherd first originated a store in Charlottesville, Virginia where they gained the reputation of dealers in fine clothes. Stevens eventually bought out Shepherd and later sold their rights to Miller-Rhodes five years ago.

By spring the store hopes to increase the ladies sportswear department to occupy the whole second floor. This stock will be kept up to date by a large staff of buyers from Miller and Rhodes.

For the past week patrons have been registering for the grand drawing on Monday night when three prizes each will be given to men and women. Registration closes today.

Mr. Augustine hopes that this new store will help fill Carolina's coeds needs and wants for finer sportswear.

Construction Nears Finish On Robbins

Construction will be completed this week on the new $350,000 front to the J. B. Robbins store on Franklin Street which is being enlarged and remodeled.

The new display space will have 40 linear feet more than before and includes the buildings formerly occupied by the College Cafe and the University Florist. The windows will extend across the whole front of the building and will be made of glass and aluminum in the same style as the present front.

Robbins did the designing, planning and engineering for the remodeling job and is supervising the construction work. In the future he plans to increase the selling and display space on the interior of the store by some 900 square feet.

Opening lead: Ten of clubs.

How-do-ya-do Mister bridge player? If you were here last year you probably read this column and in spite of yourself and your frustrations, probably learned a little something more about the game. If you're new to this campus you'll soon learn that BRIDGE BY BESHARA will be coming to you several times weekly. We try to make the column a little amusing while at the same time knock some bridge sense into you. Before long you'll be wishing I was a Manx cat so you could chop my tail; in that event you can find me at the bridge tournaments every Monday night at Graham Memorial or teaching bridge there on Tuesday afternoons from four to six.

Bridge can become a dull routine when you pick up a hand similar to that held by West today. But before you go to sleep, cover the South and East hands and follow me! Put yourself in West's place. Your opening lead against the 6 no trump contract was the club ten. Dummy went down and declarer played a small club, East cashed the ace, South ditched the jack. Your partner returned a club which South's queen won. Now. Declarer proceeds to run five diamond tricks, what are you going to discard? Next declarer played the ace, king of spades and the club king, what are you going to play on those tricks? You should have three cards left in your hand, what are they? If somewhere along the line you threw away one of those minney hearts, you let declarer wrap up his contract for 1440 points right around that tail you wished I didn't have.

This hand was played by alumnus Bob Edwards at the recent Regional Tournament in Raleigh. His opponents fell asleep and he came through to cash in the seven of hearts for the twelfth trick. If you'll look close you'll see that East must ditch his hearts to protect the spades, hence, West must hold all of his hearts to keep declarer from making the seven good. That's a big eight of hearts West has.

Your Dollars Buy You More
BECAUSE OF ADVERTISING

Because Advertising

. . . brings you news about better products you need
. . . tells you where to get what you want when you want it
. . . makes lower prices possible through mass production and mass selling

Yet Picture How Little All This Costs

For instance, it costs less than 3/10¢ a package to advertise America's leading cereals.

Any other method of selling would cost the manufacturer more and therefore raise the price. Otherwise he wouldn't use advertising.

University Library Receives John Skally Terry Collection

The University Library recently received the private Library of the late John Skally Terry, official biographer of Thomas Wolfe. The collection was donated by Terry's sister and brothers as a memorial to the well known educator an d author, according to Library sources.

Included with the library of some 5,000 volumes, which includes many first editions of Wolfe's works, was an oil painting of Terry which was done by one of his close friends, Dr. Constant van de Wall, head of the Art Department of New York University.

Close Friendship.

Because of the close friendship between Terry and Wolfe, Terry was appointed the official biographer of Thomas Wolfe after Wolfe died in 1938. Terry was collecting material for this work when he died in Brooklyn on June 30, 1953. Wolfe, the writer from Asheville, is noted for other well-known novels.

In giving the books to the University Library, Professor Terry's sister, Miss Bessie Terry of Rockingham, spoke for the family: "Giving his books to his beloved University at Chapel Hill would have been the wish of John, and we are happy to do this in loving memory of an outstanding educator, kinsman and gentleman." Terry's two brothers, Harvey, S. Terry of Whiteville, and Charles G. Terry of Rockingham, and three of his nephews, Burton III, Herman D., and Beverly L., were co-donors of the collection.

Versatile Peerson.

As a teacher, editor, author and artist, Terry was a versatile person. One-man art shows of his work have been held here at the University and at New York University. Although away from North Carolina for over 30 years at the time of his death, he never lost interest in his native state. This is shown by the large number of his books which pertain to North Carolina. Terry was also interested in drama and had many books about the theater. One of his plays was produced at the University in 1920 by the Carolina Playmakers.

Terry was born in Rockingham, Nov. 19, 1894, the son of Edgar Burton and Jennie Skally Terry. He completed the ninth grade in Rockingham, the extent then of the school system there, and the 10th grade in Laurens, S. C., where he lived with his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Terry. He was then successful as a billing clerk in Rockingham and later as paymaster of the main railroad yards in Hamlet.

Entered University.

By 1914 Terry had accumulated enough money to enter the University, and in 1918 he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in English. While here he was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and the Golden Fleece, editor of The Daily Tar Heel and the Yackety Yack, and permanent president of the Class of 1918. He was also a member of the R.O.T.C. program, then called the Student Army Training Corps. In his senior year, he was also assistant editor of the Carolina Magazine, in which he published "The Black Bag," a short story by Thomas Wolfe.

First Love.

Terry then studied two years in the Medical School of the University of North Carolina before deciding to return to his first love, writing. In 1922 he was awarded the Master's Degree at Columbia University, New York City. From 1922 until 1934 he was editor of Schools, a publication for New York school teachers; and during 1928 and 1929 he was also co-editor of the Children's Book Club. From 1925 until the time of his death last year, Terry held the position of Professor of English at the Washington Square College unit of the New York University.

Terry was the editor and wrote the introduction of "Thomas Wolfe's Letters To His Mother"; he was co-editor of "Reading In Description And Narration" and author of "What College Offers." Also, he was a regular contributor to scholarly journals. The geat majority of his collection represents the type of books that one would expect a professor of English to collect, the classical literature of the world.

Carolina's FM Radio Station, WUNC, To Return To Air Soon

The University's FM radio station, WUNC, will return to the air next Sunday at 7 p.m., it was announced yesterday by Station Manager John Young. The station will inaugurate its third year of broadcasting from the Swain Hall studios in the Communication Center.

A special series of music programs are scheduled for the first week. The broadcasts will be called the "Festival of Music" and will include several features from the British Broadcasting Corporation, the French Broadcasting System and the WUNC library of recordings.

The long-time favorite program, "Evening Masterwork," will conclude each evening's broadcasts. Also, Norman Cordon's popular "Let's Listen to Opera" will be heard on Friday evenings.

The "Festival of Music" is being repeated following the wide approval of the idea when it was inaugurated during the past summer.

Regular programs will begin each evening on October 3rd.

WUNC is an FM station which broadcasts to the general public. It's programs are popular with students who have FM sets, although programs are not specifically directed to the campus. The station is on the air each evening from 7 until 11:30. It's power is 1,450 watts and it is found at 91.5 on the FM dial.

Many of the broadcasts heard last year will return to this fall's schedule. Several of these programs are from the network of the National Association of Educational Broadcasters, to which WUNC belongs. Several new local programs will be included, but the new schedule will not be ready for release until next week, according to Program Manager Claire Russell.

Yesterday, Assistant Station Manager Carl Venters announced a special meeting for students who would like to join the WUNC staff. The meeting will be held n Swain Hall Tuesday at 4 p.m., and anyone in the University is eligible, Venters said.

The operating staff of the station is composed entirely of Carolina students working voluntarily. In addition to Venters and Miss Russell, station officers include Joe Young, operations manager; JoEllen Wade, continuity manager; Jean Rayburn, promomotion manager, and Arnold Culbreth, traffic manager.

WUNC is looking for a news director, according to Assistant Manager Carl Venters. Any student who is interested should see Venters at Swain Hall. The news director is responsible for reporting and editing campus and wire service news.

GM, Aided By Combo, Wallace, Had Her Day

(Editor's note: Ron Levin, writer of this article, is noted for his outstanding trumpet work and general wit. He "sat in" on the combo's Saturday afternoon outing, turned the show into a jam session and ended up getting onlookers to sing "Hark The Sound.")

By RON LEVIN

Eightball in the side pocket, punch on the lawn and jazz on the porch. Yes, Graham Memorial had her day and had it well. Saturday afternoon saw the building full for the greater part of the afternoon with everything from a chess game going on inside to Jimmy Wallace rendering some mighty fine ragtime piano on the outside porch.

Students, new and old, came around to renew acquaintances or make new ones. Freshmen took a peek into many of the offices located in the building and filled out a very important though informal part of their orientation.

The billiard parlor downstairs was filled to capacity and the smell of chalk was in the air.

GM Director Jimmy Wallace made the cool combo that was playing down in basement come out on the porch and get hot. . . like everyone else.

Oklahoma and California were tossing the pigskin around on TV and the television room was packed.

A pocket calendar of events was distributed by student helpers, and these were readily welcomed by freshmen and upper classmen alike.

Later on in the evening couples streamed into the Rendezvous Room to beat the heat and their feet to the cool sounds of Jim Crisp and his combo.

Finally when most of the college Joes and Janes had drifted back to the dorms and houses, Jimmy Wallace looked around and gave a big sigh, but with a broad grin on his face for GM had truly had her day. . .and what a day.

CU Day Scheduled For Next Saturday:

Consolidated University Was Born In 1931

By RUTH DALTON

The Consolidated University of North Carolina started off as a bill in N. C.'s General Assembly some 23 years ago. Since then it has grown until now it is a huge educational network running from Chapel Hill to Woman's College at Greensboro to State College in Raleigh.

Growth of the Consolidated University will be evidenced next Saturday as students from all three schools will gather here in observance of Consolidated University Day.

Under Governor O. Max Gardner, graduate of UNC, the General Assembly in 1931 passed the recommendation for the merger of the University of North Carolina, North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering and the North Carolina College for Women. There were only three dissentvotes in the assembly.

At that time, the combined enrollment of the three schools was about 6,000 students. Today's enrollment at UNC alone, when tabulated, is expected to top that number and in 1948-1949 exceeded it with 7,603 here at Chapel Hill.

One of the earliest advocates of consolidation was Josephus Daniels, editor of The Raleigh News and Observer an alumnus and trustee of UNC. Daniels saw the need for a merger of the administrations of the schools to prevent duplication of courses and to strengthen the over-ail educational program. He gave the consolidation program only the support of his newspaper but his personal political support as well.

On Nov. 4, 1932, the Board of Trustees approved the recommendation of the Executive Committee and elected Dr. Frank Graham as the first president of hte Consolidated University.

Dr. E. C. Brooks was elected vice president in charge of State and Dr. I. J. Foust, vice president in charge of WC.

Among President Graham's recommendations to the board in 1933 was one asking that no freshmen or sophomore women be admitted to UNC and another that no men be admitted to WC. These are two policies that have continued to the present time with the exception of women in nurses' training.

Also during the consolidation process under President Graham, Robert Burton House was selected in 1934 to serve as Dean of Administration of UNC. In 1945, his title was changed to thoat of Chancellor of hte University of at Chapel Hill and Vice-President of the University of North Carolina.

Upon the appointment of President Graham to the United States Senate in 1949, W. D. Carmichael, Jr., became acting president. In February of 1950 our present president, Gordon Gray, was elected and assumed office in September.

Numerous new departments, divisions and physical plants have been added to UNC since the consolidation move, including the School of Library Science, the General College, Public Health and the Institute of Government. Among the new buildings are the Morehead Planetarium, North Carolina Memorial Hospital, Dental Clinic and Gravely Sanatorium.

Among the latest additions to the University is the FM radio station and television station WUNC.

Progress at the University under the consolidation plan has been so rapid and so farreaching that there can no longer be any doubt as to the wiseness of the move of the North Carolina General Assembly some years ago.

Carolina, WC, State Chiefs Against Hikes

Three University of North Carolina educators and one member of the state Advisory Budget Commission made statements yesterday on hints that Carolina students may have to pay more for tuition, room rent and other college facilities.

The three University men were President of the Consolidated University Gordon Gray, State College Chancellor Carey Bostian and Chancellor Edward K. Graham of Women's College. They and Advisory Budget Commission member LeRoy Martin were questioned by telephone yesterday.

What They Said.

President Gray, who last Wednesday at a meeting of the Commission and University officials said he felt "it will not be necessary to raise costs to the students," maintained the same stand yesterday. Asked if he knew any way money might be made available to build dormitories without raising student fees, Gray said "A comment from us now would be premature since I don't have any facts, figures or proposals to consider."

Wednesday Gray said it was a Carolina tradition to provide higher education which is as nearly as possible tuition-free, Chancellor Bostonian.

State College Chancellor Carey Bostian, questioned in Raleigh, opined that the Advisory Budget Commission will "do everything they can to help us go forward." On the 440,310 request for educational television facilities, tendered by hte North Carolina Radio and Television Commission for UNC, Chancellor Bostian said it would be "unwise to make a prediction.

He did say that the educational TV would "provide us a means of disseminating information greater than we had before." He said the Consolidated University's "fundamental responsibilities" were to distribute information, and that "television is the best medium" for doing just that "that has ever been invented."

"It would be a great help to the college and to the University," Bostian said.

Chancellor Graham.

"I strongly oppose an increase in tuition," said WC's Chancellor E. K. Graham. "The best investment the state makes," he said, "is in the education of its youth. To risk cutting off the opportunity of college for students who cannot assume a heavier financial load will simply mean that the state would cut itself off from a return on its best investment in the years ahead."

LeRoy Martin.

Advisory Budget Commission member Leroy Martin, questioned yesterday, said he didn't "think it would be proper to make any statement" on the proposed Consolidated University budget. He said the Commission would meet again a week from tomorrow and study the University's budget again.

When asked if the University stood any chance of getting the $129,263 it requested for the first year of the next biennium and the $188,255 for the second year, Martin replied that "if you did, it would be the first time."

Martin added that the Advisory Budget Commission would probably present a report and recommendations to the State Legislation—around Jan. 100, 1955.

What Happened.

The question about increased University fees came up last Wednesday at the University-Commission meeting in Raleigh. Commission member Martin asked State College Chancellor Bostian about the effect on Bostian's student body if tuition, room rent and other fees would be raised. The Chancellor replied that such

Henderson Reviews G.B. Shaw

Although he frequently leveled deadly machine-gun blasts at the Swan of Avon, George Bernard Shaw considered himself an "ardent Shakespearean—always supporting vehemently the production of Shakespeare's plays in their integrity."

This paradoxical reaction has been traced and recarded by Dr. Archibald Henderson, official Shaw biographer and professor emeritus at the University, who has devoted a half - century to studying the Shavian philosophy and works.

Dr. Henderson, in the current issue of the "Shaw Society Bulletin," reviews major findings in an analysis of Shaw's study of and comments on Shakespeare throughout his lifetime.

"As a judge of Shakespeare, both in the study and on the stage, Shaw had a long, rich and varied experience," Dr. Henderson says. "He read all of Shakespeare as a boy, could quote freely from any of the plays and knew almost all of Hamlet by heart."

Although from 1900 onward, for a quarter of a century, Shaw was publicly regarded as a self-professed rival of Shakespeare, he later turned to Shakespeare for intensive study before writing some of his own plays, Dr. Henderson found.

In attempting to analyze Shaw's real opinions of Shakespeare, Dr. Henderson says that the investigator must bear in mind "that Shaw is a free thinker of conspicuous originality and refractory temperament reacting strongly to mental and aesthetic stimuli.

"Shaw was not a scholar in the academic sense, an, until late in life, his reactions to Shakespeare were reflexes conditioned by the prejudices and prepossessions carried over from childhood and youth, and by his impressions derived directly from seeing performances, for the most part, unsatisfying, of Shakespeare's plays."

Dr. Henderson added that "historically, Shaw's aggressive campaign of Shakespeare - depreciation, began with the opening year of the present century. His critical expose of Shakespeare is devasting but easily answered, since he commits the cardinal blunder of attributing to Shakespeare the views of his leading characters, views carefully chosen to exhibit hedonism, pessimism, and the lack of any reasoned philosophy of life.

"Shaw was a race - betterer, a social meliorist, a wanderer in search of the Superman. As Shaw said for the future: 'Shakespeare is not enough.'"

Dr. Henderson, who is Kenan professor of mathematics, emeritus, is president of the Shaw Society of America and Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature.

We Go Literary

The late Margaret Mitchell and her Atlanta and William Faulkner and his Oxford, Miss. notwithstanding, Chapel Hill recognizes no peer—neither ville nor village—as the literary capital of the South.

What makes Chapel Hill so? Many elements, some intangible, contribute to Chapel Hill's standing as a haven for the literary. Maybe it's the neighborly climate and the academic soundness of heart. Maybe writers like to live here because of the weather. Every year marches in a scarlet fall, a crisp but benevolent winter, and a spring filled with bees and cherry blossoms. When authors can fend off the soporific doses these seasons tend to administer, they find they live in an atmosphere ideal for literary production.

Whatever the motivations, Chapel Hill is a town where assorted novelists — many writers of the olden days of becolumned mansions and of belles with flowers in their hair—collaborate for shop talk and tea with serious, bespectacled magazine and newspaper journalists who write racily about the face of the New South.

Chapel Hill is the spawning ground of the new peoples' theatre—the outdoor symphonic play. It is the posting point of scores of scholarly articles on such subjects as Chaucer's E's and what Shakespeare's handwriting might have looked like.

And of all of this fecundity, the University is the nerve center. With this in mind, the editors of the Daily Tar Heel have introduced to this page what we hope to make at least a bi-weekly occurrence—a bona fide lit'ry page. We will try to focus our attention upon this literary facet that is so lively a part of Chapel Hill. Aside from articles by two staff members, we are today presenting pieces from the pens of two professors who are in their own rights members of Chapel Hill's literary clan, together with Editor Jim Dunn's ideas on a reinvigorated Carolina Quarterly.

We hope that without further ado you will skip on across the page and see what we have to offer.

The Carolina Quarterly

Cheaper Than Beer & More Interesting

By J. A. C. DUNN
Quarterly Editor

As of last week, the Carolina Quarterly embarked once more on its yearly struggle for existence. Subscriptions were sold at registration by staff members carefully briefed to avoid searing off potential subscribers by using the word "literary;" A staff was organized and new members orientated; jobs were delegated, the ad men were started on their weary rounds. The Quarterly is now in business. So now what?

The Faculty Evaluation article which appeared in last spring's issue proved, with its stimulation of phenomenal stand sales, that if the Quarterly is ever going to raise itself to the point of being a respected campus publication by a majority of the student body, non-fiction is going to be an important factor.

This year the Quarterly has extensive non-fiction plans: the institution of an article in every issue, called "Closeup" and modelled on the New Yorker's "Profile"; an article on student life at Oxford and Cambridge Universities in England—how and where the student lives, how and what he studies, what he does in his spare time, in general how the British educate their young men and women. These and other non-fiction features, such as editorials, of which there has been an outstanding dearth in the past, will play a large part in the Quarterly

As far as fiction is concerned, the fiction editor, Bobbie Walker, is combing the campus for student-written short stories. The Quarterly Fiction Board has noticed recently a growing tendency of student fiction writers to turn out short stories of the introspective type-stories in which very little happens and the characters suffer agonizing internal struggles. The Quarterly now wants stories with some action, creative writing that creates something besides and overwhilming atmosphere of the murkiest gloom, fiction characters that come out as people, not the footballs of psychotic fate.

In addition, a special department of fiction is being devoted to freshman writers, and, under the auspices of the English Club, the best freshman writing of September and October, if worthy of publication, will appear in the first issue.

The poetry will continue on its past level of excellence under the guidance of poetry editor Bill Rivera, but efforts will also be made to appeal to a wider range of poetry readers.

Jim Graves, the Book Review Editor, is concentrating on reviewing books that the average person, from freshman to graduate student, will want to read.

Thomas Wolfe & A Woman From Danville

——— Louis Kraar

IT ALMOST scares you to find so much of yourself, your friends and surroundings in a book. That's the way it was one summer afternoon in Danville, Va. as I finished Thomas Wolfe's Look Homeward Angel on a train.

Wolfe's freshman loneliness, sophomore know-it-all, and senior sophistication were all there. The way he described Chapel Hill would make even Trustees proud today.

"In this pastoral setting a young man enabled to loaf comfortably and delightfully through four luxurious and indolent years," writes the 1920 editor of this paper.

Wolfe continues, "There was, God knows, seclusion enough for monastic scholarship, but the rare romantic quality of the atmosphere, the prodigal opulence of Springtime, thick with flowers and drenched in a fragrant warmth of green shimmering light, quenched pretty thoroughly any incipient rash of bookishness.

"Instead, they loafed and invited their souls or, with great energy and enthusiasm, promoted the affairs of glee-clubs, athletic teams, class politics, fraternities, debating societies, and dramatic clubs.

"And they talked—always they talked, under the trees, against their rooms, they talked—in limp the ivied walls, assembled in sprawls — incessant, charming, empty Southern talk; they talked with a large easy fluency about God, the Devil, and phliosophy, the birls, politics, athletics, fraternities and the girls—My God! How they talked!"

No doubt he'd have added Saturday classes to those conversation topics if he were writing today. He didn't omit anything else though.

I closed the book as my train sild into the dirty Danville station. I walked down a flight of stairs to a dreary-looking waiting room.

A tall, drawling woman asked me if I wanted a sandwich. "They're really supposed to be for servicemen," she said. And then she added sweetly, "But you can come in and have one too."

I went into the room they called a "service lounge"—a small place with a few leather chairs, magazines and a desk.

We ate pimento cheese sandwiches and talked. I mostly listened.

"Oh, you're reading Look Homeward Angel, she said eyeing the book in my hand.

I agreed I was.

"You know," she bubbled on in her best drawl, "I met him when I was studying at Carolina."

She went on, "He seemed to feel so deeply about things. I told him that I was working on my doctor's psychology. Wolfe said to me, 'My gosh, that's enough of that stuff. Why don't you quit?' Well, you know, I never did get my ooctorate, but that Carolina is a lovely place. So much going on and all."

"Yes, I know," I couldn't help telling her, "I'm there now."

"Your are? You're so lucky. I'll just never forget meeting Wolfe and all there. It was in '41 when I was there and met him. He died right after, you know."

The train came, and I left.

As it finally pulled out, I went back to my Wolfe book, flipping through the delightful passages about Chapel Hill. It must have been enice to meet Wolfe at the Hill in '41, I thought.

Then I turned to the brief biography. What I saw made me more sorry than ever that I missede the conversation between the young lady student and the chronicler of youth, loneliness and Carolina.

"Wolfe died in 1938," the book said.

New Faulkner Novel Expresses Faith In Man's Final Victory

By PROF. H. K. RUSSELL

(Prof. Russell is a member of the English Department here in the University. In the following article, he appraises William Faulkner's latest novel, A Fable, with the critical eye of a true critic and the humility of a scholar.—Editor.)

William Faulkner has always taken man's responsibilities seriously. Since "The Bear" at least, in 1942, he has been trying to see such problems in relation to what the Bible says about God's purposes and His troubles with mankind. Because Faulkner is a novelist, he is especially interested in the narrative parts of the Bible. And again because he is a novelist, he has to reconsider, even to rewrite these narratives in his own way, in line with his own thinking, before he can say what they mean to him, just as any thoughtful person has to work his own way through a problem before he really understands it.

In this sense, Faulkner wrote "A Fable" for himself. But it is for the rest of us, too, unless we already know all the answers. "A Fable" is not his best novel—the weight of the "fable" is too heavy for that—but it is his most important book, as his Nobel Prize speech is his most important public statement. (Passages from the speech are in the novel.)

There are two difficulties about the book that a reader had better discount from the start. One is the narrative method. Faulkner backs and fills like an engineer contouring a hillside; when he has the masses in position he begins to work them together and the pattern comes clear. With him you can't tell what the situation is until he thinks you have enough information to realize the significance of the situation when you do see it.

The other difficulty is hrader to discount. Anybody who sets up a parallel between the events of Christ's passion and events in his own time runs the risk of making his account seem presumptuous and inflated, even blasphemous. The idea of the story—a corporal in the French army, born on Christmas eve in a stable in the Near East, executed between two thieves, and with a crown of barbed wire, for his part in a mutiny during the last year of World War I—has about it something of the "colossal" ideas worked up in Hollywood and Beverly Hills.

When we have said this, we have said the worst that can be said about "A Fable." Faulkner himself may have been saying the same thing tactfully in the second dedication of the novel. Anyway, it should be admitted and discounted as machinery to support the meaning of the fable. The first dedication is to his daughter, and he has written a serious and reverent book.

The meaning of the fable is in the temptation, which Faulkner places on the night before execution, like Gethsemane. The corporal is offered freedom, power, and most precious of all, simply life, instead of martyrdom. The tempter is not Satan. In Faulkner's story he corresponds to God, the commander in chief and the father of the corporal. He believes "in man within his capacities and limitations"; he believes that man needs organization and discipline but that man will endure with his idealism, his irrational hopes. And the old general accuses the corporal of lacking confidence in man because he is acting as though his death were necessary to save man.

Stated over-simply, what Faulkner's characters are doing is testing two views of mankind: the authoritarian or practical, which assumes that man requires, as a soldier does, a frame of discipline to do his work in, that man should know his place as a limited creature and stay in it; and the individualistic or spiritual view, which assumes that man fully realizes his manhood when he follows his own moral commitments, that man has a right to state for himself the terms on which he will endure.

The corporal, the Christ-figure in the fable, insists upon dying to confirm his belief in a more abundant spiritual life for man in the world. If he does not accept the consequences of his mutiny he betrays the ideals for which he mutinied. The old general has authority to cancel the execution and thus to deny the son his martyrdom, as though Christ had been denied the crucifixion. He knows that by the execution he will establish forever the value of the son's life and sacrifice.

At the cost of confirming the significance of the mutiny and thus of weakening the authoritarian system he represents, the old general, the God-figure in the fable, accepts the son's sacrifice. He is proud of man's intransigent idealism, "his deathless folly." The temptation scene closes with the general's words: "Man and his folly—"

"Will endure," the corporal said.

"They will do more," the old general said proudly. "They will prevail."

A UNC Alumnus Chronicles General Stonewall Jackson

By Prof Walter Spearman

(Prof. Spearman is a leading member of the University's Journalism Department. His weekly column appears regularly in newspapers throughout the state and is known for its interesting book reviews — particularly on North Carolina authors. In this column, Prof. Spearman takes a critical look at "They called Him Stonewall," by UNC alumnus Burke Davis.—Editor)

"Roosting on the fence in the early May sun, he was more scarecrow than man," says Burke Davis in introducing the hero of his new book, "They Called Him Stonewall." (Rinehart and Company, New York. 470 pp. $5). General T. J. Jackson, "the grim, warring deacon," was sucking a lemon, as he so frequently did. He also took five-minute naps a dozen times a day. He stood to eat "to protect his internal organs." When he taught at V.M.I. the cadets called him "Tom Fool." He would not fight on Sunday if he could help it, and before engaging in battle he always went down on his knees to pray. He was so secretive about his battle plans that his most trusted officers never knew where or whom they would be fighting next.

In unorthodox fashion Author Davis begins his comprehensive biography not with Jackson's birth or his early childhood but on a spring day in 1862 near New Market, Virginia, in the Valley of Virginia, where General Jackson was facing Federal General Banks while Union armies were advancing on Richmond. He had already picked up the nickname of "Stonewall" at the Battle of Bull Run, but to many of his devoted men he was "Old Jack." For 87 pages Mr. Davis follows his military achievements in the Valley of Virginia showing why the Confederacy was beginning to believe that Jackson was invincible.

"The people of the South made him overnight into a legendary hero," says the author: "hardly one of them had more than an inkling of the true nature of the man behind the intriguing nickname."

During the remaining pages of his book Burke Davis tries to show "the true nature of the man." The pattern was to be one in which God, war and ambition were inextricably mingled." To get this picture, Mr. Davis has examined every available contemporary account of battles, memoirs of Jackson's fellow officers and soldiers, and innumerable private letters and official documents, as well as comparing the various histories and biographies that have been written.

What had Jackson achieved in his famous Valley campaign? "He had performed miracles of a sort. He had immobilized many Federal divisions on the Potomac, struck fear into Lincoln and his Cabinet, had saved Richmond, had marched his troops thirty-five miles on many days, and had accomplished all this with men who were largiely inexperienced."

What were his methods? "Always mystify. Mislead and surprise the enemy if possible. Never fight against heavy odds, if you can hurl your own forces on only a part of your enemy and crush it."

Where does his religion come in? It was never absent from his fighting or his planning. After Manassas he wrote his wife, Anna: "God made my brigade more instrumental than any other in repulsing the main attack." And just before his death, shot by nervous North Carolina troops, "my own men," he said. "It's all right. I always wanted to die on Sunday."

Like William Faulkner's recent A Fable, Mr. Davis' biography of General Jackson is based on a noble theme, has a noble character for a here and goes to great length to establish his point. Also like A Fable, the book becomes at times tedious, is filled out with too much detail, and never quite succeeds in making its hero a

'Brief Candles'

The current resurgence of interest in the fantastic and in science fiction will find a charming embellishment in Manning Coles' latest novel, Brief Candles, (Doubleday, 252 pages, $3.00)

The burden of Manning Coles' effort is the story of two mid-nineteenth-century revenants in Paris and its environs. Two cousins, one English, one American, fall prey to some Prussian soldiers at the close of the Franco-Prussian War and are shot in a French farmer's barnyard, where they are buried. The arrival of two of their cousins in 1953 (these cousins are married to one another) brings about their re-awakening, physical reconstitution, and a delightfully whimsical faculty for doing mildly outrageous things in a thoroughly Vicorian fashion. There adventures bring them into contact with bank robbers, confidence men, passport forgers, and the like. No harm comes of any of this, of course, and the ending is on the precise nostalgic note the story demands.

If we wished to cavil with this pleasantry, we might point out that Mr. Coles' knowledge of American slang (he is British) is faulty, but what he believes is American slang has its own obliqueness and pungency and might well be adapted in place of some of the hackneyed phrases that fall too often from all our lips. On the other side of the ledger, he keeps his story moving, he keeps his characters alive, and stops before he has told too much. Nothing serious here, but thoroughgoing amusement for the whimsical and romantic.

Today, after twelve years of writing during which time Manning Coles has published fifteen novels, he has come upon the literary world with a really new type of spy-ghost story, deftly wkritten with the cosmopolitan, sly humor that has become his special trademark. This new venture has securely established his reputation on both sides of the Atlantic.— John Bashera

Well, isn't Graham Memorial the student union? What's the diff, anyway? Besides, "Soo-ahb" is much easier to pronounce than "Gee-em-ay-bee," or is it "Gee-mab?" TV Writing

HATTERAS VILLAGE — Some notion of what television is looking for in ideas and writing was outlined during the North Carolina Writers Conference by a young man who has ideas himself, and can write about them: John Ehle.

A native of Asheville, young Ehle is an instructor in television writing and production in the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. He is also an actor, a director of motion pictures, and a continuity writer of merit. His remarks were out of experience with the media he discussed in "The Writer — Movies and TV."

"Television burns out writers and directors. It's for the young because only the young can stand the pace," he observed, at the end of the talk. In the beginning he advised the listeners, if they were interested, to write for specific shows. "Watch the show to get ideas, to get the number of acts and to observe the sort of material they use. A writer should ask: 'What am I looking at on the screen?' And a deaf mute should not only be able to appreciate television, but to actually enjoy television. When this can be done, the best audio-visual approach is being used; "the emphasis in television must be visual," Ehle stated.

He noted that "it is tiring to sit and hear nothing for an hour and a half. But it is not tiring to watch something for an hour and a half. Incessant chatter is not necessary. What's on the screen is what is important."

With the exception of CBS, all the other networks are buying free-lance scripts, Mr. Ehle reported. CBS is at present accepting only work from professional writers. "Studio One" pays $1,200 for a script, Philco Playhouse $1,000, and on down to $600 for "The Web" he said. The lowest dramatic show budget on the networks is $8,000.

"And remember one thing: What's bad on radio is terrible on television. Television writing is more difficult than short stories, and you have to be on the set at the time of production. But I have seen enough television plays in a week to make me believe that they will get better and that plenty of talent is around. There are many problems and much exploration in the future. But it is certainly stimulating to be a part of."—Wriston Locklair in The Charlotte Observer.

New Views On An Old Classic

——— Ed Yoder

I have heard several people of questionable orethought tell others that their reason for not reading fiction is that the chasm between literature and life yawns both too broad and too deep. No other statement seems more fallible to me. And I ran into a situation early this summer that illsutrated clearly that wide streams run directly from life into fiction.

I happened to be talking books with a medical student from a small Ohio town, Mt. Pleasant. I guess a question about Sherwood Anderson's classic collection of fictional skethes, Winesburg, Ohio was the natural thing. I asked if he had read the book.

Not only had he read Winesburg, I learned, but he told me moreover that his mother had taught sometime around the Sherwood Anderson era in the small village of Clyde, Ohio, the vintage for Anderson's sketches. I found myself wishing that his mother could be present, and that we could sit down over coffee and listen to her recollections of the Clyde residents who provided Anderson with hs fodder.

I'll not hedge further about the intentions of this column. I want to say something about my own views of Winesburg, Ohio. This undeniably masterful work of fiction has haunted me with its obvious cross-wires of intent and tone ever since I read it some time back.

The only way I can describe the impact of Winesburg would be to say that it comes in dichotomy. As a strong, lucid and colorful writer of English prose, Anderson's triumph cannot be disputed. But Anderson, I think, can be assailed upon his capture of the atmosphere of the American small town and of life in these United States in general.

He appears to aim at the tragic view of life. He burdens his characters with weights and leads them through labyrinths of fortune that are tragic. But he didn't leave me convinced—or, if I was convinced at all, I was indifferent. I could only ask the icy question: So what? Only readers who have, themselves, suffered incredibly bitter misfortune would discover the sorrows of the Winesburg world believable. I hope readers like that are scarce, for their own sakes. In the story Anderson calls "Godliness"—an excruciating episode in four-parts—misfortune hits apogee. Within two short paragraphs:

> . . Enoch, Edward, Harry, and Will Bentley all enlisted and before the long war ended they were all killed. For a time after they went away to the South, old Tom tried to run the place, but he was not successful. When the last of the four had been killed he sent word to Jesse that he would have to come home.
> Then the mother, who had not been well for a year, died suddenly, and the father became altogether discouraged.

Who could blame father? At the same time, who could blame the reader if a smile of incredulity came to his face. While I do not deny that the indicent could appen, I certainly would deny when a novelist who aims to attract the pity and fear of his readers to throws this out, he defeats his purpose. Certainly, the reader notes this sequence of bitter events. At best he accepts is undisturbed. At worst he has a hearty checqle. Whose sensibilities can digest such wholesale morsels of misfortune?

Some may protest that Anderson does not intend for his stories to inspire pty and terror in the reader, that he does not seek empathy of this sort. But successful friction of any type and an indifferent or incredulous reader are not good complements. Anderson has a genius for heaping burdens upon the people of Wnesburg. Often they have to stand aside and have dirt heaved on them from the world's shovels. But he provides no relief; so our emotions radiate off into a thousand and different directions.

Perhaps this judgment could be softened for the last half of the novel. The difference bobs up because two pronounced new threads—of humor and of hope — enter the fabric of the tale. A shift comes in the final pages of "Godliness"—the story I have cited to illustrate the excessive blackness of the Winesburger's fate. Jesse Bentley has hallucinations that he is King David, and that his small grandson is David. The ensuing scenes with his grandson touch a disturbing but clear humor—the same twisted humor that relieves the darkness and incredibility of Steinbeck's collections like Pastures of Heaven and The Long Valley. The last stories in Anderson's collection move toward concentration on George Willard, the central charater. Alone of all of those Anderson treats in Winesburg George Willard's vista is lit by a gleam of optimism. He has hope. For him the future may not be a dark passageway with the door shut fast at the end.

Sherwood Anderson possessed that quirk often to be found n meticulous workers — the desire to conceal the intensity of his labor. In The Apprenticeship of Ernest Hemingway Charles A. Fenton writes: "In his conversation—as, in his memoirs and reminiscences—Anderson enjoyed posing as a virtually automatic writer, one to whom his art was merely natural storytelling. Actually, of course, as the manuscripts of Winesburg, Ohio show, Anderson's stories frequently went through a series of complicated revisions. He successfully presented himself, however, as the romantic artist of instinctive creativity."

If I had to davance an explanation for Winesburg's split impact, I would suggest that the author sacrificed his credibility as a storyteller for technical perfection. Perhaps he ared too much for what ring his words gave the inclined critical ear and for how well his cadence mathed the critics' sense of rhythm. But at the same time, he smothered some intangible spark.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 18 (AP)—Sharp, smart ball-hawking gave Maryland the breaks it needed today and, with battering Charles Boxold and rapid Ronnie Waller paving the way, the Terrapins rolled over Kentucky, 20-0, in a football headliner.

Pass interceptions set up two second-quarter touchdowns for the Marylanders, picked up the preseason Associated Press poll to finish third in the nation this season.

A brilliant 29-yard punt return by Waller in the third set up the Terps' for their third score on the Kentucky 31.

But breaks or not, Maryland was equal to its opportunities and performed with the poise of another championship outfit when it rolled up its sleeves.

The Terps scored on a 23-yard romp by Waller, a one-yard quarterback sneak by Boxold and a 31-yard pass play, Boxold to Russell Dennis.

WAKE FOREST, Sept. 18 (AP)—Wake Forest struck 81 yards for a third period touchdown and addede a fourth quarter score on sophomore Dick Daniels 32-yard jaunt to defeat George Washington, 14-0, today in the season opener for both teams.

A sweltering crowd of 5,000 saw the dogged George Washington team hurl back two deep Wake Forest thrusts in the first half and then stage a futile 53-yard drive of its own in the third period before superior Wake Forest power began paying off.

In the third period the Deacons pile-drived from their own 19 to the George Washington 8. Reserve quarterback Nick Consoles then flipped a touchdown pass to end Ed Stowers. In the final quarter Daniels streaked around right end from the 32 to score standing up.

Gym Meeting

There will be a meeting of the gymnastics team in Woollen Gym room 304 Tuesday night at 7:30.

Connie Gravitte, right halfback, and Bill Kirkman, center, are the two seniors picked to captain Carolina in the State game this Saturday. Different captains will be picked each week.

Keller To Play Saturday

Kirkman, Gravitte Tapped As Captains For State Fray

Carolina's football veterans Bill Kirkman and Connie Gravitte have been named to captain the Tar Heels here next Saturday when they take on N. C. State in UNC's first game of the season.

The game at Kenan Stadium will begin at 2 o'clock.

Both Kirkman and Gravitte are playing their last season with Carolina. Kirkman, a big 209-pounder from Burlington, will handle the center chores in the State tussle while Gravitte, who hails from Roxboro, will go at the right half post.

Carolina will have different captains for each game.

Ken Keller, who was injured in Friday's scrimmage against Fort Eustis, has been announced fit for play against the Wolfpack. The fleet halfback sprained his ankle, but was walking today and will work out lightly in preparation for the game, according to the Athletic Department.

Yesterday the Tar Heels slacked off the contact work in contrast to the heavy practice schedule of the past two weeks.

Meanwhile, Coach George Barclay has made it clear that he has been sorely disappointed with his team's pass defense, and he has indicated that more work in that department will be one of the main items on the week's practice agenda. "There's no doubt about it" he declared at the close of last week's drills, "our offense is clearly ahead of our defense. We will probably have to spend the majority of practice the week before the State game on defense."

Also remaining to be solved are the problems of just who is going to be the starting quarterback and who is going to be the number one fullback.

Coaches thought they had solved the fullback problem last week when they shiftede senior Larry Parker to the deep position. However, sophs Don Klochak and Larry McMullen have been so impressive since the switch that the coaches are also considering them for starting duty.

At quarterback, the contest continues between junior Marshall Newman and senior Albert Long. Neither has been able to hold the upper hand consistently. The decision here may go right down to the opening whistle Saturday.

Wright Scores Two For VPI

Soph Marinkov Hits Twice For Losers

BLACKSBURG, Va., Sept. 18 (AP)—Howie Wright, a senior halfback from Dover, Del., touched off an explosive Virginia Tech attack here today to lead the Gobblers to a 30-21 victory over North Carolina State before 9,000 shirt-sleeved fans.

Wright accounted for two touchdowns and piled up 136 yards in 18 carries, collecting 7 of those yards on a touchdown run early in second quarter.

Statee, making its debut under new coach Earle Edwards, also had a brilliant runner in sophomore halfback George Marinkov, who tallied two touchdowns, one coming on a 93-yard kickoff return.

It was Virginia Tech's power on the ground that finally wore down the N. C. State club, which absorbed its eighth setback in a row over a two-season span. The Gobbler ground assault, finest unveiled here in a dozen years, netted 317 yards as coach Frank Moseley made full use of his two speed-burning halfbacks, Wright and little Dickie Beard. The Gobblers got only 21 yards passing.

N. C. State hit paydirt first, moving 87 yards late in the first period with Jack Zubaty moving the last four for the score. John Bagonis added the eextra point with just 10 seconds left in the period.

N. C. State	7	0	7	7	—21
Va. Tech	0	16	7	7	—30

N. C. State scoring touchdowns: Zubaty, Marinkov 2. Conversions: Bagonis, D'Angelo, Lowe.

Tribe Tops Tigers, 3-2, Has Flag; Giants Nearer, Beat Phillies, 9-1

The Cleveland Indians made it official today. They won the American League Pennant by defeating Detroit, 3-2, in the rain at Briggs Stadium, Detroit. The game was delayed 50 minutes in the eighth inning by the wretched weather.

Cleveland scored three runs in the seventh inning, highlighted by successive home runs by Dale Mitchell and Jim Hegan to capture the game and end the New York Yankees' five-year reign as champions. The Indians have been second to the Yanks the last three years.

The victory of the Giants was high-lighted by inside-the-park homers by Willie Mays—his 41st homer of the season—and Don Mueller. Mueller also singled to raise his total hits, to 200, first major leaguer to reach this mark in 1954.

The clubs played under leaden skies and from the moment Mueller hit his homer in the first it was neveer a contest. Don Liddle, until he issued 11 straight balls in the sixth, looked superb on the mound, and Marv Grissom promptly came to his rescue. Between them they pitched a three-hitter, Liddle giving up two and Grissom one. The single Phillies score was a homer by Willie Jones in the fifth.

Thus in all probability the World Series of baseball between the Indians and the Giants will open at the Polo Grounds in New York on Wednesday, Sept. 29, and, aftere two games, move to Cleveland.

The victory of the Indians has been a near certainty ever since last Sunday when they defeated the Yankees—who had won five straight world series—in a double-header at Cleveland.

There is still a slight element of doubt in the National League. The Giants are five games ahead of Brooklyn with seven to play. Any combination of three Giant victories or Dodger defeats assures the Championship for the New York team.

The bitter city rivals meet Monday night at Brooklyn, and play again there Tuesday and Wednesday. That should settle it. A third team is mathematically in contention, the Milwaukee Braves, but they now trail the Giants by seven games.

DTH Reporters Barred From IFC Meeting

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

SP Jumps On Anti-Secrecy Bandwagon

Creed And Kuralt Asked To Leave Fraternity Meeting

By Dick Creed

The Inter-Fraternity Council last night barred The Daily Tar Heel from covering its meetings.

Charles Kuralt, editor of the paper, and this reporter were voted out after Kuralt had given reasons why he thought the meetings should be open and reported to the student body.

"The IFC is a vital organization and certainly has nothing to hide," he said.

During an question-answer period between Kuralt and IFC members, one member said that in the past The Daily Tar Heel had given the IFC a "bad deal" and that he did not "trust the Daily Tar Heel."

Got Reports

Kuralt answered that in the past the paper had not covered the meetings but got reports from the IFC prepared by members.

One member asked why it would not be suitable to the paper to have the IFC give a written report of its meetings to a reporter or to have a member of the IFC write the story of what happens in each meeting.

Said Kuralt, "We would not know whether we were printing the news." Such an arrangement would be an "unhealthy situation," he said.

Tremendous Secret?

"If the IFC doesn't have a tremendous secret," said Kuralt, "what is the objection to having a reporter cover the meetings?

"The Daily Tar Heel has nothing against fraternities and will not have as long as I am editor," he said. "It is our responsibility to cover all branches of student government," he continued.

He pointed out that the paper covers meetings of the Intr-Dormitory Council and the Panhellenic Society: He said that the reason for They were informed in the hall that the council had voted negative.

Negative

After the discussion, IFC President Henry Isaacson asked both Daily Tar Heel representatives to leave the room while the council voted on whether to allow coverage of the further proceedings. They were informed in the hall that the council had voted negative.

A written report of the proceedings was later brought to The Daily Tar Heel office by an IFC representative.

President Tom Creasy told the InterFraternity Council last night that the administration's recenly offeed plan was "the best we can do" toward reestablishing an agreement for coed visiting in fraternity houses, according to a report given The Daily Tar Hell by an IFC representative last night.

According to the report, Creasy said that fraternities should accept the three-point plan and "do our best to uphold it." He said that fraternities could go to the Board of Trustees in an attempt to get an agreement more suitable to fraternities but that such a move would be "foolish."

The administration's plan sets up three requisites for establishing coed visiting:

1. Specific hours are set up during which fraternities may receive women visitors.

2. No alcoholic beverages can be consumed within or on the premises of a fraternity house while women visitors are present.

3. Faternities and individual students must accept the responsibility for upholding the conditions of the agreement "in letter and in spirit."

No distinction is made between coeds and imports.

The three points were set forth in a letter sent to fraternities and student govenment by Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver.

The letter states also that the University "disapproves drinking by students."

The coed visiting agreement was revoked by the administration last spring when President Bob Gorham declared that drinking in faternity houses would be approved.

According to the report of proceedings at the IFC meeting, Creasy recommended that the administration's plan be considered by individual fraternities. A majority of the chapter voting yes on the plan will mean it will be accepted by the IFC.

Weaver's letter states also that fraternities may appeal to the Board of Trustees for modification or withdrawal of the drinking ule.

By Richard Thiele and Louis Kraar

The Student Party last night jumped on the no-executive-sessionbandwagon started by The Daily Tar Heel—less than an hour after a reporter was kept out of an Interfraternity Council meeting.

SP legislative floorleader Jim Turner, a few minutes after hearing that the reporter, Dick Creed, was barred from the IFC meet, proposed to a full meeting of his party that the SP "negotiate with the University Party to draw up a Legislaure bill forbidding executive sessions of any student government organization." Turner pointed out that honor courts were an exception to this rule.

Committee

The party, at the suggestion of Gordon Forester, decided to appoint a special committee to report back to the SP within a week.

Aside from SP Chairman Joel Fleishman and Turner, none of the other party members knew that a reporter had been kept out of the IFC meeting. (The newspaper did not ask the SP to make its anti-secrecy move.)

Turner said that his party, along with "free-thinking students", is "shocked by this rank violation of freedom of the press."

"Long Enough"

Asked why the SP chose last night to spring their no-executive-session move, Turner said he thought the "situation has gone on long enough." He said, however, that the party had not planned to make the move until they heard about the IFC incident.

UP leaders Tom Creasy, Rueben Leonard, and Claude Pope could not be reached for comment on the SP move.

Telegrams

Four Legislature seats, vacated by graduating students, were also filled. Nominated by acclamation were David Reid, Lewis Brumfield and Bob Harrington.

Don Fowler, student body treasurer, welcomed all freshmen and newcomers to the party and uged them to participate in student government.

David Reid, SP vice-chairman, commented on the history and traditions of the Student Party, dating from its inception in 1938.

Manning Muntzing described the functions of student government and drew a round of applause from the ninety to a hundred SP followers present when

Rushing Underway

Sororities Started With GM Tea Thursday

Sorority rush week got underway rapidly with the tea at Graham Memoial Thursday, according to Rachel Brooks, chairman of the Panhellenic Rush Committee.

In order to avoid unfair rushing, the Panhellenic Council has established a "silence" period making this the first opportunity for the rushees and sororities to meet each other.

On Saturday and Sunday the girls visited the six houses to become better acquainted.

Monday and Tuesday evening will serve to help the girls narrow down their choice. Wednesday will be a day of rest. Then on Thursday and Friday the girls will continue to narrow down their choice.

On Sunday and Monday evening there will be dinner parties where the rushee really decides.

Tuesday between 9:00 a. m. preferential list.

Tuesday between 9:000 a. m. and 1:00 p. m. the rushees sign the preferential list in the Dean of Women's office. Each girl will receive only one bid to either the first, second or third sorority of her choice.

Inter-Fraternity Council Announces Rushing Slate

According to Rush Chairman Ed McCurry, rushees will pick up their invitations to visit fraternities on Oct. 6 and 7, and must visit all fraternities to which they are invited either on Sunday afternoon or Monday night, Oct. 10 0or 11.

"After visiting once the fraternities the rushee is asked to," said McCurry, "then he may visit the ones he is reasked to visit and the one he likes for the remainder of the week. No fraternities may ask a rushee to join until Wednesday night (Oct. 13).

"The rushee must not make committments to the fraternity until Monday, Oct 18, the last day of he rust period, and those making such committments shall be ineligible for pledging at that time."

Added McCurry: "There are rules and reguiations for rushing, and it is absolutely necessary that they be carefully observed to insure fairness above all to the individual rushee. but also to the individual fraternity.

"We are currently in a period of strict silence between new students, freshmen and transfers, and fraternity men. This means thee is to be no conversation on or off campus between these men other than saiutations, and this is to be interpreted literally—just salutions. Strict silence is to continue until Oct 10, when rushing proper will begin."

Post Accepts Dunn Fiction

The editor of the Carolina Quarterly, Jum Dunn has received word that a short story of his, "Caroline's Army," will be published in The Saturday Evening Post in the near future.

Dunn, 21, junior from Charleston, S. C., was named editor of the campus magazine last spring. The story the Post accepted will be his first work outside of campus writing, that he has published.

"Caroline's Army," Said Dunn, yesterday, "is about people our age." He said the story has "a college background," though readers will probably have some difficulty identifying any scenes from Chapel Hill.

The English major said he wrote the story during the past summer.

Only 13 freshmen turned up in seven hours yesterday to have their photographs made for the 1955 Yackety Yack.

The photographs, which are free to all underclassmen, are made in the basement of Graham Memorial from 1 to 8 p. m. Coats and ties are necessary for boys; a dark sweater and pearls for girls.

Phi To Name Vice-Speaker, Make Plans

The Phi Assembly, campus debating society, will start off a new year tonight at 8 o'clock in New East.

Old members were requested to make a special effort to be present for inauguration plans, report from the renovations committee and election for the office of speaker pro-tem, which is now vacant.

Lewis Brumfield of Yadkinville was elected last spring speaker of the assembly for the fall semester. Other officers elected in the sping were Dick Iobst, critic; Lawrence Matthews, Parliamentarian; Harry Whitlock, clerk; Frank Warren, sgt-at-arms; Jim Duvall, treasurer, and Bill Porterfield, representative to the Carolina Forum.

POCKET SIZE

Football guides of the 1954 season are now available at four sites on campus.

Distributed by Phillip Morris cigarettes, the pocketsize booklets include oll major college and professional football slates, with results of last year's games, stadium diagrams, predictions for the season and other useful information.

The guides are available locally at the YMCA, the Scuttlebutt, Book Exchange and Lenoir Hall.

There is no charge.

Three Men Room Situation 'Serious'

Approximately one out of every five men students enrolled this fall in the University is living in a three-man room, according to the University Housing Officer, James Wadsworth.

Nine hundred and eighteen Carolina men are living in the three-man rooms in ine dorms—Old East, Old West, Steele, Alexander, Whitehead, Grimes, Manley, Mangum and Ruffin.

Describing the situation as "serious," Wadsworth stated that assigning three men to a room was the only solution to this year's increased enrollment. Placing men in the three-man rooms has reduced the number of students living in Cobb basement.

The number of basement dwellers is now estimated at about 50, as compared to hundreds who had basement addresses last fall. Wadsworth expressed hope of moving the basement residents out by the end of the fall fraternity rushing.

The three-man rooms will have to be continued, Wadsworth said, until some other means to alleviate the problem is found. "Especially urgent, and embarrassing," he said, "is the necessity of having to put medical, law and dental students, many of them graduates, in three-man dorms."

Wadsworth expressed hope that the State Legislature would soon appropriate the funds necessary to provide "the dormitory space so urgently needed. In the meantime", he said, "I would like to thank all those who are living in three-man rooms for their patience and cooperation."

Di Senators To Start Year Tonight At 8

The Dialectic Senate will begin its 160th year of existence tonight at 8 o'clock, third floor, New West. Sen. Larry McElroy will introduce the bill of the evening.

McElroy's bill provides that "Those portions of Germany now occupied by France, Britain and the United States be granted full, unrestricted sovereignty, with no restrictions or rearmament." Guests are invited to attend and to paticipate in the debate.

The Senate was the first student organization formed on campus, having been organized as a literary society in 1795. From it have grwn practically all of the student organizations on campus. Its portrait collection includes such distinguished former members as President James Knox Polk and Dr. Archibald Henderson.

In addition to a portrait of William E. Davie, founder and first president of the University, plans have been completed for a portrait of Dr. Frank Graham. The year just past also saw the renovation of Dialectic Hall, including the installation of 50 new desks and a complete repainting and refinishing.

UNC Picks Its 3 CU Day Finalists

The three finalists in the Consolidated University Day Queen contest for UNC were chosen yesterday at the preliminay round held in Gerrard Hall.

The girls will be among the nine contestants from the Consolidated University competing for the crown of Miss CU Queen.

The queen will come from the final judging to be held Saturday at Consolidated University festivities here.

During the State-Carolina football game Saturday afternoon the nine contestants will be seated on a special row. At half-time the CU Day Queen will be announced. Judges making the final decision will be Mr. and Mrs. Kay Kyser and N. C. Secretary of State Thad Eure, who will announce the winner.

Woman's College of Greensboro has chosen five of 18 finalists to represent them here, while State College of Raleigh has a presidential appointee for the final judging.

As of last night, State College's appointee was not known.

Burt Veazey, junior from Raleigh, will serve as chairman of CU Dayq. Veazey said yesterday that a complete schedule of the CU Day festivities will be announced later.

Other contestants in the UNC semi-finals were:

GM Concerts Start Oct. 3

Graham Memorial's Director Jim Wallace yesterday announced the opening of the petites musicales sented by arrangement with John Beshara, director of special events for Graham Memorial.

The petites musicales will be concert series which will be presented every other Sunday evening this year in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial.

Seven outstanding artists will perform on the program during the first semester. The opening recital is scheduled for Oct. 3, and features Helen Masloff, lyric soprano, who will be brought here direct from New York appearances for this performance. Dr. Walter Golde, pianist, will accompany her.

Other concerts scheduled this semester include Carol Sites, pianist, Oct. 17; Jan Saxon, coloratura soprano, with Dr. Golde, piano, Nov. 14; William Klentz, cellist, Nov. 28; David Phipps, baritone, with Ronald Andrews, piano, Dec. 12, and Tom Nichols, piano, Jan. 16. A concert will also be held on Oct. 31.

The programs will be presented in the main lounge at Graham Memorial, at 8 p. m. The concerts are designed to include both classic and popular music. Following each recital, refreshments will be served in the lounge. Both students and townspeople are invited to attend the series and reception free of charge.

Chapel Hill Concert Series Sets Programs

The Chapel Hill Concert Series will sponsor four programs for the 1954–55 season which will be presented in Memorial Hall during the year.

Appearing this year will be the American Chamber Orchestra (formerly the Vienna Mozart Orchestra) under the direction of Robert Scholz on Oct. 20; the Salzburg Marionette Theatre, Feb. 15; Walter Gieseking, pianist, March 21, and Jan Peerce, tenor, April 15.

Tickets may be obtained by mail from Chapel Hill Concert Series, Box 30, Chapel Hill.

The cost of a regular season ticekt is $6. The cost of student tickets, which will go on sale today in Y-Court, is $5 for students of UNC only.

Because of the limited seating capacity of Memorial Hall, only 1,800 tickets will be sold. There will be no reserved seats.

Support for the series is especially needed this year as it is the first year of the concert series. To enable the series to become an annual event, it will be necessary for the entire community to give its wholehearted support, said promoters of the series.

One Out-Of-Starter Is On Medical School Rosters

Only one out-of-state student is included in the 1954 freshman class of 66 men and women enrolled in the Medical School, according to enrollment figures.

Dean W. Reece Berryhill of the Medical School yesterday released the names of the almost 100 per cent Tar Heel group which has completed its orientation and begun the first of four years study of medicine.

The group, which includes three women, will be the fifth four-year medical class at the University.

A New Yorker; Michael P. Cap of Yonkers, is the lone out-of-stater in addition to the group of 65 North Carolinians.

Annual Space

All organizations and societies desiring space in the 1955 Yackety-Yack should send a representative to the Yack office in the basement of Graham Memorial between 2 and 5 p. m. throughout the week, said Yack Business Manager Tom Spain yesterday. Spain said those failing to make contracts will receive no coverage.

Nixonism (Huron, S. D. Brand)

Richard Nixon (the vice president, unfortunately) is vaulting March-Harishly along the Congressional campaign path. He paused at Huron, S. D., the other day to say that Democrats had been planning, even before their defeat in 1952, to "socialize medicine, housing, power and agriculture."

Most of Nixon's hearers, we are confident, will consider this statement and dismiss it shortly on the weakness of its bold-faced absurdity. But, continuing his stilted war-cry, Nixon went on, saying, "Having made no compromise with communism, we ("we" refers, we guess, to the Republicans) are just as determined that there will beno compromise with socialism. Both of these diseased ideas came from the same Marxist virus."

We don't know what source should bear blame for this addendum. Perhaps his "Marxist virus" idea as the origin of socialism came from amongst the Gothic spires of Duke, where Nixon was "educated." Perhaps Checkers confided it to him. In any case, someone's vaccuum of historical knowledge is showing.

Socialism, both as name and as economic system, long predates Marx's Scientific Socialism or Communism. The word, Socialism, according to Edmund Wilson in "To the Finland Station," a history of the rise of Socialism, gained currency in France and England about 1835. We would remind Mr. Nixon that this was 13 years before Marx and Engels collaborated to issue "The Communist Manifesto" in 1848; it was almost a half century before Engels completed and published for the dead Marx the last volume of "Das Kapital." Not only has Nixon betrayed his lack of tutoring in world history; sadly enough he apparently knows little American history.

". . . Robert Owen came to America in 1824 and started an Owenite movement: there were at least a dozen Owenite communities; and Albert Brisbane, who had brought Fourierism back from Paris and had been given a rostrum by Horace Greeley in The New York Tribune, propagandized for it in the 1840's with such success that more than forty groups went out to build Fourierist phalansteries (which included Brook Farm in its secondphase)." All of this activity, of course, was going apace in America before what Nixon calls "the Marxist virus" of Communism had really stirred out of the intellects of its authors.

We wonder if Nixon and McCarthy know that Karl Marx and Frederich Engels were contributing theoretical articles to the pages of an American newspaper some 100 years ago. As we face their monotonous hue and cry from day to day, we can at least draw some comfort from the fact that people of their stripe seem to know so little of the truths of history. If they knew them and still retained their attitudes, who knows what would befall us?

Gracious Living VIII

Sorority rushing, in glamorous progress since Thursday, is closed, of course, to all except the rushers and the rushees. The only external manifestation visible to males is the choir of coeds present each night on sorority front steps airing innocuous ditties, rehearsed until the lyrics click together like legs in a chorus line.

Musical comedies are available for smaller prices than sorority dues. We'd guess prospective sorority members would welcome genuine friendship and interesting conversation for more than a nightly, and phony, extravaganza. At least one sorority, Kappa Delta, has scrapped the procedure. We'd suggest this course for others as a stride forward toward Gracious—and unpretentious — Living on the pan-hellenic front.

The Daily Tar Heel

Carolina Front

Special Group Appointed To Study Motion

Louis Kraar

"WHAT ARE they trying to to us?"

I was eating breakfast and he came over and asked me this. He was a fraternity leader.

"I don't quite understand why everyone is down on the fraternities. Last year, it was fire escapes. They cost plenty. Then the Student Party started with this business of delaying rushing. And now it looks like we'll have to pay for these garbage houses.

"Are they trying to run the fraternities off campus?"

I SAID that I hoped they weren't And then I wondered exactly who they were. After thinking it over, it would seem htat the current discomfort—financial and otherwise—of fratenity row comes fom a number of sources.

The town of Chapel Hill pushed for the fire escapes, later enforcing their rule only on the Greek-letter organizations but not other private dwellings that housed perhaps as many students. (Old East and Old West just got fire escapes last spring.) The present garbage house requirement also comes from the town, and officials contend it is necessary for sanitary reasons.

THE ISSUE of delayed rushing—without a doubt—is going to be a big one this year. Certain Student Party leaders have expressed the desire for a revised rushing system. They have not said whether they mean delayed rushing or not. Currently, a committee, appointed by President Tom Creasy, is supposed to be discussing the problem,

DEAN WEAVER was, for a while last spring, the bad wolfe at the dors of fatentiy ow—as far as the fratenities themselves were concerned. The drinking discussions, in which Weaver was not as candid as he might have been, irritated the organizations.

Now weaver has asked for house mothers for the near future, several years away at the most. But I think, although he is to be criticized for his lack of candor on the drinking problem, that Weaver—like most thinking people on campus—realizes the vital role that fraternities fill at Carolina. And he has said so.

"Fraternities constitute an important sector of campus life and student government. Some say that the yare inherently unsuited for self-government because the tendency always is for loyalty to the chapter to take precedence over loyalty to anyhting else. Perhaps this is a limitation on effective fraternity-wide self-government.

"But we have recently seen evidence of the capacity to overcome that limitation. Greek Week this year has demonstrated that the fraternities wish to serve hte campus as a whole. This, to my way of thinking, is the secret of success for fraternities."

'Simmons

It is a common superstition that persimmons are not fit to eat until frost has taken the pucker out of them. Yet trees that yield a non-puckering persimmon are not uncommon around C. Hill. There is one at the rear of Caldwell Hall that ripen fruit of a succulent flavors every September. 'Simmons are rich in vitamins. Also the yellow flesh indicates carotene, which is the substance that makes carrots recommended.

Modern Misconceptions: The Fables of 1954

By Dr. Edward Kidder Graham

(Dr. Graham is chancellor of Woman's College in Greensboro. The following is an excerpt from a speech, "The American Student And The American Tradition in 1954," which Dr. Graham delivered to the National Student Association convention in Ames, Iowa, on August 22.—Editor.)

Along with dramatic issues and events, 1954 is characterized by a few remarkable fables. The fables relate to casts of thought that bear upon the American tradition, and then point up the urgent necessity for clear-headedness in a time of exceptional complexity. Here are a few of these fables of our times.

The first fable is to the effect that what we need more than anything else is tolerance. This is doubtful. Tolerance is a sort of round-eyed and self righteous word at best. When I use it, I do not mean that I am really tolerant of differences or anything of the sort. What I am afraid I mean is that I am asserting a sort of moral ascendancy, that my views toward my fellow men are better than the ideas of someone else — who, of course, I infer is intolerant and therefore inferior. What we actually need is toleration, a more powerful but less self-assertive quality and one that has almost a religious base; a quality that makes allowances for difference without being thin-lipped about it; a quality that gives to other human beings a margin for error as well as for difference in recognition of the fact that we may similarly be in need of margin.

A second fable is almost a corollary to the first one. This fable is to the effect that we ought to move on virtually every issue "without regard to race, creed, or color." I suppose that phrase is all right if you like negativism, and if you are resigned to the idea that a negative approach is the only one through which all Americans can be assured first-class citizenship. Actually what we are trying to achieve is something quite different—a state of natonal mind, will, and spirit, wherein all of our people are recognized for all that they have accomplished, wherein pride in the contributions that all of us have made to the greatness of our country makes it a privilege gladly to give equal opportunity to all — with honorable and proud regard for race, creed, and color, and for what America means to these not the least of our brethren.

Another fable for our time is that there is virtue in non-conformity. The fabulous idea here relates not to virtue, which generally regarded as an acceptable quality even in 1954, but rather to the supposition that non-conformity exists. Everybody conforms to something—even if it is to non-conformity. If you want to get a classic example of wholehearted, vociferous agreement, all you have to do is get a room full of self-admitted non-conformists talking on a subject on which they profess not to conform. From what little I know about them, one of the most conforming and non-individualistic splinter groups in the country is something that goes under the name of the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists. A conservative has been defined as a person who worships dead liberals. A non-conformist can worship live ones, but has to avoid being one. Non-conformists do not exist, except in their own imaginations.

The American tradition does not have very much to do wth the grade labels of 1954 such as non-conformity, intellectualism, and the various other labels that we hang on ourselves or on other people as a short cut to confusion. The grade labels of 1954 are pretty anemic anyway, even if they meant anything. They just don't make them the way they used to. Think of some of those out of our past, like the "one-gallus boys," "wool-hats," "know-nothings," "sons of the wild jackass." As a matter of fact, "egg-heads" is the only grade label with any hair on its chest that has come along in recent years.

What we are really talking about, when we are speaking of conformity and non-conformity is the tradition of independence, the right of dissent, and those effervescent and liberalizing ideas that once belonged to the American frontier in its physical and historical sense, and now belong to the modern frontier in terms of the social, economic, and political climate of 1954.

One final fable for our time. This relates to the idea that the major objective in any situation is to be regarded as thoughful and judicious, that all roads have a middle, and that the right approach to any given problem is to get in the middle and stay there. The catch is that all roads do not have a middle. It is understandable in an election year that, on a basic issue related to the decency and integrity of the United States Senate, many of our statesmen may look wistfully for the middle of a road that has no middle—a road in which the side of right and the side of wrong can and should be readily distinguished by measuring known facts against a standard of decency and honor, under due process.

The Ram Sees

Freshman in a three-man room reports it's so crowded that when he's studying he has to ask one of his roommates to walk out into the hall so he can turn a page in his textbook. He went to class barefoot the other morning before he realized he had put his shoes and socks on a roommates feet.

The Ram Sees where Dean Fred Weaver is playing ostrich again this year and is going to pretend like he really believes all these drinking rules of his can be enforced. The students laughed at the so-called "visiting agreement" this past summer, and we believe they'll be laghing again this fall, even with a functioning student government, if the rules get too strict.

We hate to ze skeptical, but we must raise an eyebrow when President Gordon Gray says it is a University tradition to provide higher education as nearly possible tuition would be going down, instead of the direction it took a couple years ago and the way it seems to be heading for the next biennium. We appreciate Mr. Gray's sentiments, but the tradition just ain't there.

'A Fellow Can't Remember to Take Everything'

'Star Performance': Ballet By A Tar Heel

John Beshara

STAR PERFORMER editorial

UNC alumnus Walter Terry is the author of the recently released delightfully enchanting book of the world's great ballerinas, Star Performance. (Doubleday and Company, New York, 224 pp, $2.95). From the first professional dancer, Mademoiselle Lafontaine, who held the heart of Paris in the seventeenth century, to the present "Prima Ballerina" of dance, Margot Fonteyn, Queen of the Sadler'sWells Ballet. Star Performance takes the reader on the grand tour of the dance world. And it is in reality almost a fairy tale world, even today. Take for example the Cinderella story of Moira Shearer. Here is a girl who in one year rose from the ranks of the dancing chorus of the Sadler's Wells Ballet to the position of ballerina and then after starring in the motion picture The Red Shoes became an international star better known even than the Sadler's Wells company for which she worked and its reigning prima ballerina Margot Fonteyn. And presently she is starring in Shakespeare's comedy "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. A present day Cinderella girl indeed.

Star Performance is a Doubleday edition designed for junior adults, but makes pleasant, easy reading for anyone who would like a back stage glimpse into the world of ballet and balletomanes. In addition the book is chock-full of illustrations which were done by Marta Becket, a professional artist, singer, pianist, composer and dacer, and has a glossary of ballet terms and their pronunciation.

Walter Terry is a recognized authority in the dance field. In 1939 he joined the staff of the New York Herald Tribune to become the third dance critic on a major American newspaper. Since then he has remained on the staff as dance critic and dance editor, except during a three year period when he served as a master sergeant in the Air Force during World War II .

While an undergraduate working on a dramatic arts degree here, Terry first became interested in dance. During that time he roomed for a year in Manley dorm with Foster Fitz-Simons who, too, became a well known figure in the dance world and author, and is now teaching drama and dance in the Dramatic Art Department. Both of them studied with Mrs. E. Scott Bar, better known as Phoebe, who taught privately while her husband was working on his doctorate in physics.

According to Foster Fitz-Simons, Terry was also a DTH staffer while here. He graduated in 1935 and since then has returned at various times. His last trip to the campus was in 1950 when he came to visit the Fitz-Simons' and to see Paul Green's play, "Tread the Green Grass," which he reviewed for the Tribune. He has written one other book, Invitation to the Dance.

Labor To Be Probed From Hell To Breakfast

WASHINGTON — Ike advisers are at sixes and sevens about the Hell-bent-for-headlines probing of Labor scheduled for this fall. One probe, by the House Labor Committee, has been carefully billed to open in Los Angeles tomorrow simultaneously with the A. F. of L. convention.

The Congressmen who are staging the hearings figure that now's the time to embarrass Labor and scare Labor's political contributions away from the Democrats. It may be possible, they figure, to create the impression that political contributions are coming out of welfare funds.

Whether right or wrong, three probes of Labor welfare funds and alleged Labor racketeering are being held this month. They are:

1. The House Labor Committee's probe of welfare funds opening in Los Angeles. The Committee, which is one of the most reactionary in Congress, has had investigators in Los Angeles for some time trying to dig up dirt in advance, has been working especially hard against the teamsters.

2. The Senate Labor Committee's probe of welfare funds. This is a more careful and less headlined probe under Senator Ives of New York, who, now that he's been nominated for governor, will have little time to devote to the investigation.

3. A welfare-fund probe by New York State which has already been making headlines.

It seems much more than a coincidence that these three investigators of Labor should be sheduled for exactly the same time right in the middle of an election campaign.

Note—Top Labor leaders, including George Meany, Walter Reuther, Dave Beck, all welcome investigations of welfare funds if they are conducted on a fair non-political basis.

Summer White House

The President now looks better than he has in a long time. He's beginning to feel he's mastered the difficult job of politics —especially getting along with Congress . . . reports of political unrest don't disturb him nearly as much as they do his advisers. He's watching his public relations much more carefully this summer, wants to avoid the impression that he's spending all his time at golf and trout. VP Nixon hasn't seemed able to get back completely into White House good graces. Ike's got wise to the fact that Nixon was a McCarthy appeaser, now realizes that if he'd taken a strong stand on McCarthy some time ago, he would have been much better off. Instead he listened to Nixon.

Nixon's Advice

Vice President Nixon, a real expert when it comes to campaigning, whether with or without checkers, gave some advice to GOP Sen, Dworshak of Idaho the other day.

"I suggest you run a high-level campaign. Stick to the issues," Nixon told Dworshak, who faces a tough fight with Democrat ex-Sen. Glen Taylor, who once ran for Vice President on Lte Henry Wallace ticket. Nixon then went on to suggest that Dworshak form a "Democrats for Dworshak" group to do the dirty work and smear Taylor on his former association with Wallace.

Dworshak, however, was skeptical. He didn't think he could find enough registered Democrats in Idaho to form a protest group. Nixon, however, was reassuring.

"You'll only need two or three," he said, "just enough to give them a name."

Note—Nixon used similar tactics in California when he ran for the Senate in 1950 against Congresswoman Helen Gahagan Douglas. It was one of the dirtiest campaigns in California history with Mrs. Douglas called everything but a communist. Nixon masterminded the whole thing, though keeping himself reasonably aloof. It will be interesting to see whether Dworshak follows his advice.

Ike's New Dealism

If General Ike is not careful, people will start putting him in the category of Henry Wallace. Wallace was one of the few government officials who ever tried to migrate across the U. S., but now Ike has decided to do something—at least in a very modest way. Though it will by no means eliminate repetitions of the "Grapes of Wrath" it will help.

What's happened is that Secretary of Labor Jim Mitchell managed to squeeze $50,000 out of Congress to set up an interdepartmental committee at least to study the problem of migratory workers.

When the word "squeeze" is used, it really means squeeze. Small as the $50,000 appropriation was, Mitchell almost didn't get it. Reactionary Republicans did their best to kill it.

Mitchell wanted the oakie-arkie study because in his own state of New York thousands of migratory apple pickers are constantly exploited. Even worse conditions exist elsewhere. So he proposed that Congress appropriate $100,- to study the question.

Old-Guard Congressman Fred Busbey of Illinois, however, said no. And when Fred says no, it's important because his reactionary legs stand athwart the appropriations Subcommittee passingon Labor Department spending. He cut the oakie-arkie appropriation out altogether.

At this point, another Republican, Sen. John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky, came to the rescue and managed to put the money back in the bill, only to have it cut in half later to appease Busbey. However, with $50,000, at least a start can be made.

Note—Golfing at Burning Tree during the closing days of Congress, Indiana's Charlie Halleck, GOP House Leader, sorrowfully mused: "I just don't know what we're going to do about Fred Busbey. He simply won't cooperate."

Quote, Unquote

It is chronicled in the Tar Heel that "an audience of ten people heard Dr. Robert Pretlow speak Thursday night on the religious situation in Russia," one of the ten being the Tar Heel reporter. There is nothing more uncertain than what will draw a crowd here in Chapel Hill. A preacher or a teacher may meet a complete frost; but again, sometimes a lecturer on religion or philosophy will look out on not a single empty seat, and the very next week an "attraction" that would naturally be supposed to have a far stronger popular appeal brings out perhaps a score or so of people. Once a distinguished visitor had a total of five hearers in Gerrard Hall. No men are more deserving of sympathy than those whose task it is to arrange public speeches and escort the speakers to the hall. I had the job once and I know. That sinking feeling you have when you approach the door with the guest, in fear of finding row upon row of empty seats—it is somethin' terrible.—Louis Graves in the Chapel Hill Weekly, Feb. 19, 1925.

Backfield Aces Hurt Against Virginia Tech

By Bernie Weiss

N. C. State's slim chances of breaking its seven-year losing streak to Carolina this Saturday took a drop today when it was announced that Don Langston and Eddie West, the two top men in the State backfield, would see little or no action in the game.

Both men were injured last Saturday when State dropped its opener to Virginia Tech, 30-21.

Langston, the No. 1 fullback and team captain, had averaged five yards per try on five carries when he was removed from the contest early in the first quarter. He injured his knee in a pile-up, and it is assumed that he will be out of action for two or three weeks.

West, operating at quarterback, sustained a severe hip displacement later in the game. According to State officials, West will not practice at all this week, bu tif he is feeling well enough by Saturday he may see limited duty.

Starting in place of Langston at full will be sophomore Harrison MacKeever, just off the last season's freshman squad where he was rated the best backfield prospect. West's probable replacement is Billy Franklin, also up from the frosh.

Tar Heel fans will remember well Langston's performance against Carolina in '53. The six-foot, one-inch, 18-pound senior was State's biggest ground-gainer. He picked up 58 yards in 11 tries, and also scored the only Wolfpack touchdown as Carolina won, 29-7.

Ken Keller, injured slightly in Friday's scrimmage against Fort Eustis, did not participate, but will be ready for the game.

The game is scheduled for two o'clock.

"Tougher Competition"

Returning Lettermen And Promising Sophs Boost Cross-Country Hopes

Seven returning lettermen and sophomore Jim Beatty will carry the fortunes of the Carolina cross-country team this season, according to Coach Dale Ransom.

John Barden, the Tar Heel's No. 1 man last season, will be back for more action; teamed with Beatty, the top frosh runner last fall, the pair should give the Carolina squad the best one-two punch in several years. Both Barden and Beatty set several records last year.

Albert Marx, the team's No. 4 runner last year, does not plan to complete and Ransom is quick to point out that his loss will be a hard blow to the team.

Tony Houghton and Don Wright will co-captain the squad. Houghton copped second place in the Atlantic Coast Conference outdoor two-mile run in the spring. Glenn Nanney, who placed fifth in the same race, will be competing for the first time in the cross-country races.

Letteman Boyd Newman is the ACC out-door half-mile champion. Other returning veterans are Hugh Hester, Geoge McGehee and Edward Vogel. Besides Beatty, last year's freshmen team will furnish eight good runners for the cross-country jaunt.

The Tar Heels have been going through their daily paces on the Fetzer Field layout and after the first few workouts Ransom believes that he has a vastly improved team. "However," the veteran mentor emphasized, "the competition should improve a great deal too."

The 27-man varsity squad opens the season with North Carolina State on November 2. The frosh will also run against State the same day. Ransom has issued an invitation to all distance runners to come out for the team.

'Relations' Is Subject For Confab

Plans were announced here today for an Institute for employees of the North Carolina State Employment Security Commission to be held in Chapel Hill Thursday through Saturday.

National Mag Uses Report Of UNC Research Institute

The complexities of the Soviet's "vast industrial machine, organized under the most highly centralized government in all history," is revealed in an article in the current issue of "Automotive Industries," based on a documented report recently completed by the Institute for Research in Social Science of the University.

The article is entitled "Soviet Industrial Planning for Mobilization."

It is one of two articles "Automotive Industries" has abstracted from the Institute's study which was directed by John A. Parker, head of the Department of City and Regional Planning and Research Professor in the Institute.

Major authors of the study were Valentin I. Esanev and Maurice F. Parkins, research associates. Dr. Demitri B. Shimkin, of Washington, D. C. served as consultant Barclay G. Jones and Martin J. Rody, graduate students in city planning, prepared the graphic materials.

The current article describes the general industrial pattern and illustrates how every phase of it is operated under a ruthless system of rigid autocratic controls and surveillance, thereby destroying individual freedom and initiative from management down to the lowest level of worker."

Th esecond installment, to be published in an early issue of "Automotive Industries," will describe the manufacturing facilities of the huge automotive industry, which is the leading branch of the Soviet machine and upon which the other industries depend for their mass production techniques.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1 Club	1 Spade	Pass	Pass
2 Clubs	2 Spades	3 Clubs	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of spades.

South managed to get into a messy 3 club contract by rather unorthodox, but not illogical bidding. He could afford to be a bit quaint in his bidding methods, so long as he played the hands with such Savoir-Faire. But just for the record, South should double 1 spade, not bid 2 clubs. A double in this situation tells his partner that he By doubling, they would end up in the preferred 3 diamond contract.

A bridge player would find himself minus a couple hundred points if he played today's hand carelessly or agressively. There are some situations in which it is to your advantage to let the opponents play the hand for you. The secret of playing today's 3 club contract is to adapt the attitude of a bridge stoic and let the opponents bring home the contract.

Declarer won the opening spade lead with the ace and since he had nothing he particularly wanted to lead, he returned his small spade. West won the trick but found himself embarrassed for an exit card. He finally decided on the top diamond in the hope that he might get a chance to trump one later. This is where South showed his mettle as a bridge player, he played his ace! rather than take the finess of the jack. South did this on the assumption that East would not have led away from the king since th efinesse was almost sure to lose, it was best to hop-up with the ace and exit with the diamond jack which would again force West to lead up to South's holding.

West didn't like the spot he was in, he couldn't lead a spade or a club, he was equally afraid to lead the heart or diamond. He decided the lesser of all evils was the diamond, East trumped, declarer overruffed. The rest was clean-up work for declarer; he laid down the club ace and another club which West's king won. Now West was forced to lead a heart, East won with the ace and after declarer won the return heart with the king, the dummy was good.

Pulpit Players Announce Tryouts

Louise Lamont, recent drama graduate of the University, and director of the Pulpit Players, announces that there will be open tryouts for their first production, Christopher Fry's "The Boy With a Cart," on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday nights, September 19-21, at the First Baptist Church. The Pulpit Players Company is non- denominational and tryouts are open to all.

Opening date for the first production, to be performed in the pulpit of the First Baptist Church, is set for October 24th, and the touring performances of the Pulpit Players Company will be held each succeeding Sunday night thereafter throughout the state.

"This is the deeply moving poetic drama that was recently performed for the World Council of Churches in Illinois. It has twelve richly drawn characters in the cast, and we feel Fry's play to be worthy vehicle to be presented in the churches," Miss Lamont said.

Hillel Foundation Holds Get-Together Buffet Danc

The Hillel Foundation held its annual get-together buffet dance Saturday night. This dance is held each year in cooperation with the chapters at Duke and Women's College.

The dance was held in the main lounge of the Hillel House. Sunday afternoon at five o'clock a reception was held for the Hillel members. At this time the members were invited to have dinner at the homes of some of the townspeople members during the year.

he called members to "help make this the biggest year in party history." He also pointed out the fact that there will be about twenty-five out of the fifty legislature seats up for election this winter.

Graham Memorial Director Jim Wallace wound up the meeting with a colorful talk on the Student Party's part in the students' life. He said that the SP is the "party of the discontented, the rabble-rousers, and the people who want a change, not for the sake of change, but for the good of the students."

Commenting on the anti-secrecy resolution brought up earlier in the meeting, Wallace said that The Daily Tar Heel tried to inject the resolution without the party members knowing what it was all about, and that the party "swallowed the bait, sank in the stream and drank the water."

University Party Members Say They're Victims Of Bad Publicity

The University Party emphasized the need for more campus political publicity at its kickoff meeting last night in Roland Parker Lounge ni Graham Memorial.

Tom Creasy, president of the student body, in opening last night's meeting welcomed the frsehmen and new students present. The UP prexy said that an effort should be made to inform new students and freshmen as to the purposes of the party and its position in university life.

Rollie Tillman expressed gratitude for work done on the Orientation program and stamped the project a great success. Charlie Yarborough, senior class president, urged "all members to work for all the students."

The matter of closed campus meetings and Monday's barring of a DTH reporter from an Inter-Fraternity Council session brought up considerable debate.

Several party members expressed the opinion that the UP was being "misrepresented in some circles" and that it sometimes is made the victim of unfavorable publicity "from different sources." A motion was brought up to ask members to contribute to a publicity fund to promote wider publicity for the party. Dissatisfaction with campus newspaper coverage was also expressed. "We can't fight tre Tar Heel all the time," said one.

At that point Tom Creasy arose again and cautioned members "not to go into this thing too fast. Don't put any people on the spot," he warned.

A motion was passed to appoint a committee to study the situation and report its findings next week. UP chairman Reuben Leonard said that the committee, composed of Jack Stevens, (Chairman), Charles Ackerman, Bill Ragsdale, and Jim Wilkins, will be asked to "look for the best possible solution, and not jump to conclusions, but get the facts of the matter for all concerned."

Attorney General Ed McCurry said later in commenting on the matter that it "deserves a lot of consideration. I feel that the whole issue is above the level of politics, and should not be used for purely political purposes. Let's keep this," he said, "above the mud, mire and muck of campus politics."

Unseated Baptist Gets Church

RALEIGH (AP)—The Rev. James W. Ray, who served as state secretary of the Baptist Student Union until he and two others, among them the Rev. J. C. Herrin of Chapel Hill Baptist Church, were fired by the General Board of the Baptist State Convention last March, has accepted a call to serve as pastor of a new church here.

The Rev. Lee Pridgen, secretary of the Raleigh Baptist Assn., which is sponsoring the new church, said formal organization of Ridge Road Baptist Church will occur in about two months.

The Rev. Mr. Ray, along with Rev. Herrin and the Rev. Max Wicker of Duke University, was dismissed in a secret session of the General Board in Greensboro. The action grew out of an issue in the State Baptist Convention centered around the question of whether too much liberalism prevailed in student affairs.

Prexy Creasy Looking For A 'Good Year'

Student Legislature will have its first meeting of the new school year tomorrow night at 7:30 in the Phi Hall of New East.

As the legislative branch of student government commences its duties, wishes for a successful year were expressed by student body President Tom Creasy.

"I am looking forward to a good year," said President Creasy. "The executive and legislative bodies will work together with the aid of the coalition cabinet." (The coalition cabinet is a new feature of the Creasy administration.)

Added the president: "There is an exceptional group of legislators this year."

Among the officers of the group are Speaker Martin Jordan, Parliamentarian Joel Fleishmna, Speaker Pro Tem Manning Muntzing and Clerk Caroline Davis.

Chairmen of the standing committees include Bob Young, rules; Bill O'Sullivan, elections; Tommy Bennett, finance, and Sonia Bergen, ways and means.

The Student Party will have virtual control of student Legislature this year, with a 39-11 majority of seats over the University Party.

Through the legislative branch of student government, approximately $100,000 was spent last year for the financing of student activities, such as Graham Memorial, The Yackety-Yack, The Daily Tar Heel, Carolina Forum, Debate Council and Carolina Quarterly.

A total of some 130 statutes was passed. Outstanding among them was the raise in student block fees from $15 to $18 per student per year.

Dormitory social improvements were brought about when the student Legislature passed a bill giving dorms between $200 and $300 each.

The student Legislature meeting tomorrow night will be open to all students.

There will be a meeting of all students interested in working on the Tarnation magazine this afternoon at 4 o'clock. The meeting will be held at the Tarnation office in the Basement of Graham Memorial.

"Anyone really interested in working will be given a chance," said Editor Rueben Leonard. "We need writers, cartoonsits, typists and all-around help. There are numerous posts to be filled." The first issue of the humor magazine is slated to hit the campus the latter part of October.

Wadsworth Says One Third Of Dorm Men Live In 3-Man Rooms

University Housing Officer James Wadsworth said that as of yesterday about one third of all men living in dorms on the campus lived in three-man rooms. They are among the almost 1,000 students who share rooms with two roommates.

The 40 basement dwellers living in Cobb basement may be assigned to rooms by "about Friday," Wadsworth stated. There are still appoximately 25 students living in dorm advisors' rooms, the housing directo added.

Wadsworth said that about 40 dormitory vacancies have been located so far-rooms of people who went to summe school and failed out, some who were married, and those who preregisted and were drafted.

Dozens of students, Wadsstated, moved into private homes because they just couldn't stand living in three-man rooms. Typical among the domments of these men was that of Linwood Peoples, Louisburg, who said "after serving five years in the Air Foce and living in baracks, I sue won't do it in college."

'The Oneness Of Mankind'

Baha'i Meeting Tomorrow

An informal lecture on the "scope had significance of the Baha'i world faith" will be delivered in Gerrard Hall, Thursday night at 8 o'clock.

The lecture, to be presented by Walter R. Wootten, student promoter of the faith on campus, will occur on the "anniversary of its teachings on the American continent."

Wootten was asked to comment briefly on this religion. He said that the Baha'i Faith is "a relatively new and independent world religion, now embracing over 229 countries and dependencies."

When asked whether or not the Iron Curtain countries are included within these 229. "No. The Baha'i's, before the Communist movement spread through that region, were established and organized," he said, "but quickly they were either liquidated by the Communists or exiled to Siberia and disappeared. Their new temple in Ishkabad was confiscated, made property of the State, and converted into a museum."

He said that this "fast-growing religion" had its birth in Persia in 1844, but that its influence shifted to 'Akka and Haifa, Palestine during the turn of the century and has now virtually covered the planet.

When asked whether or not the Baha'i Faith is a sect of Mohammadanism, Wooten replied that "it definitely is not. "Its status is independent," he said. "Just as Christ and His Faith emerged out of a Jewish civilization, so did Baha'u'llah in this Day appear within the Moslem world, but it is no offshoot or sect of Islam," he continued. "Mohammadans continue to be the chief persecutors of the Baha'is. Over 20,000 Baha'is were martyred by the Moslems."

Wooten continued that the primary objectives of the Baha'is are "to promote the Oneness of mankind, the fundamental oneness of revealed religion, and the purpose of religion as to educate and unite men in peace, not to cause superstition, division, rivalry and bigotry." The Faith teaches "the necessity of all nations' federating within the orbit of a world commonwealth, the interdependence of science, reason and religion, the interdependence of capital and labor and the application of spiritual principles to the economic problems.

Heart Disease Connected To Man's Activity,

A direct relation between coronary heart disease and physical activity is indicated by studies conducted in recent years in England, according to Dr. J. N. Morris, director of the British Medical Council's research unit, who spoke this week here.

Dr. Morris, who appeared as a guest of the Department of Medicine of the UNC School of Medicine, was introduced by Dr. Osler L. Peterson, clinical assistant professor of medicine and director of Program Planning, Division of Health Affairs. Dr. Ernest Craige, assistant professor of medicine, presided at the program.

Dr. Morris explained one study chart which showed that the incidence of heart disease among a group of business and professional men was almost three times that of a laboring group, which included coal miners and construction workers.

In a discussion of "Occupational Factors of Coronary Disease," Dr. Morris said that despite modern health improvements, the higher comparative death rate of middle-aged males over females has steadily increased from 12 to 83 percent in the last 100 years. "This higher mortality in men is caused mainly by coronary heart disease and cancer of the respiratory tract."

Annual Space

All organizations and societies desiring space in the 1955 Yackety-Yack should send a representative to the Yack office in the basement of Graham Memorial between 2 and 5 p.m. throughout the week, said Yack Business Manager Tom Spain yesterday. Spain said those failing to make contracts will receive no coverage.

The Right Of The Student To Know His Government

The Inter-Fraternity Council is included in the Student Constitution as an official student government organization. As such, its business is the students' business. That, in brief, is The Daily Tar Heel's position. That is why the eviction of a Daily Tar Heel reporter from the IFC meeting Monday night does not close the case.

This newspaper believes it is the right of all students on the campus to know what is going on inside organizations which are a part of their government. This right — THE RIGHT TO KNOW—is far more important than the right expressed in the familiar phrase, "freedom of the press," although the former is dependent on the latter.

The Daily Tar Heel may be free to print anything (within the bounds of libel and good taste), but without the freedom to obtain the information to put into print, the freedom to print it is worthless.

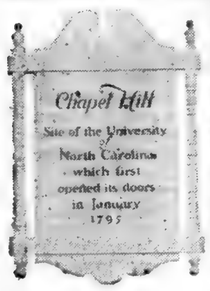
The Student Party, upon hearing of the unsuccessful attempt to report on the IFC Monday night, came up with a hurried "anti-secrecy" measure, which may come before the student Legislature. This was admittedly a bit of political opportunism; but the plan, which would forbid executive sessions of student government organizations, is a good one.

Whether it takes a legislative act, whether it takes a constitutional amendment, whether it takes an act of God. The Daily Tar Heel will continue to press for the right of the students to know until the Inter-Fraternity Council and any other "secret" organizations which is a proper student government body eliminates its secret meetings.

Yankee Poets Please Note

"The melancholy days are come,
The saddest of the year;
Of wailing winds, and naked woods,
And merdows brown and sere,"

That is William Cullen Bryant's picture of autumn, and it may have been a true picture for a September of the last century in Great Barrington, Mass., where Bryant did his writing.



We wish the great poet could have come to know a Chapel Hill fall; were he here on this first full day of autumn, 1954, he might be exalted beyond cold winds and naked woods and dead fields to sing a happier song. Lover of nature that he was, Bryant might have enjoyed a stroll toward Franklin Street from Old East, under the maples and oaks that will be aflame with color before the month is over.

He might rest on a bench in the Arboretum; the birds that leave Great Barrington on the arms of the wailing winds come to Chapel Hill in September, and the Arboretum's elms have not yet heard of the change in seasons.

Old William Cullen Bryant might even be persuaded to walk through the beauty of Kenan Woods to the stadium next Saturday, sit in the cheering section on the Carolina side, and hear the precise opposite of his own sad rhyme to the season—a new generation of college students greeting the coming of the fall.

Carolina Front

Why Student Leaders Voted For Integration

Louis Kraar

LARGELY through the efforts of UNC leaders, the National Student Association adopted a desegregation plan at its Congress in Iowa last month.

It would seem to this reported who attended the Congress, that the students acted more to achieve a very practical purpose than to show off their liberalism at a national meeting. The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled out segregation in the public schools, and—as was evident to these Carolina students—we can either try to work out peaceful integration of the races or secede from the union. The South tried the latter solution once. It didn't work.

This was, perhaps, the spirit in which Martin Jordan, Chal Schley, Norwood Bryan, Jim Turner, Manning Muntzing and Anne Huffman pushed a plan calling for "the immediate ending of all segregation in institutions of higher education in all geographic areas."

STUDENT body Vice President Jordan seemed to epitomize the Carolina view when he declared, "It is up to us as students to equalize the rights of all humans as God wishes, I am sure."

I felt that Jordan's words were in the other students' minds when they accused the Congress of dodging the issue of racial integration in schools. The group had an important plan to congratulate the Supreme Court for its ruling. That was all.

At the insistence of Carolina—urged on by alumnus Al Lowenstein—a special committee was formed to work out a way to implement the Supreme Court's ruling. It met for two days and two nights, continuing usually until dawn and adjourning only so that its members could sleep a few hours. Jordan was on the committee, and Lowenstein headed it.

THE committee urged immediate integration on the college level in all geographic areas. It called for less speedy integration in primary and secondary schools in Southern states.

"Committee" is, I am sure, too impersonal word for the group that made this suggestion. Here is the way the group itself described the decision:

"THIS committee met one night nine altogether. A white Mid-Westerner and a Chicago Negro; a white Western girl; a white Southerner from Texas, and one from Georgia; a Southern Negro, a white North Carolinian, and a white New Yorker who belongs to the NAACP. The chairman was a North Carolinian Jew.

"Together, we sought agreement on this, the greatest social problem in America's past. A decision was reached, unanimously, described above. There were feelings of guilt, of anxiety, of fear. But more important was the willingness to face the problem realistically, and this led to the decision.

"We strongly affirm the signal value of this decision. We strongly affirm its implication that a solution to the problem posed by integration can be found by consent.

"There is no painless way; the task ahead is the tortuous one of struggle to find more acceptable uncomfortable alternatives of slight moral and practical advantage. We have done this, acting in good faith, and with mutual respect. We point to this, and cite our example to those who seek solutions of their own."

THE DAY after the Congress approved the committee report, a Japanese friend who was visiting the meeting said he was happy the NSA had backed such a move.

"I heard before I came here that there were in the South of your country laws that required black races to sit in the back seats of buses and whites to sit in the front. This didn't sound like the democracy that your country has given Japan.

"Besides, I was worried about where I would sit. I thought, probably, in the middle."

The Open Door

AEC Should Be Investigated

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON.—With the next war likely to be one of Trans-Atlantic rockets, and with Russia reported to be well ahead in the rocket field, the Navy is months behind in its construction of a rocket-launching platform at Dahlgren, Va.

The Navy htasdone some amazing pianer work in developing rockets. But you can't launch rockets without launching-platforms, and the platform for the latest super-secret rocket and guided-missile program is now nearly six months behind schedule. It was due to be finished on March 28, but it is still not completed.

Here is the inside story of what has been happening. The track that carries the rocket on its initial course must be absolutely straight. The rocket travels at a speed of two to three times the speed of sound and any vibration due to variation in the track might shake the launching base apart.

But the battleship admirals were not willing to spare enough nickel steel for the launching track. Instead, the nickel steel has been used for armor plate. In other words, it's the old story of the rivalry between the battleship admirals and the air admirals all over again.

Curtis Builders, who got the contract from the Navy for $1,668,7007, sublet the job of machining the track to Parkersburg Die and Tool Co., of Parkersburg, W. Va. As early as March 22, 1953, more than a year ago, however, Loren Thompson, head of the Parkersburg Company, wrote a letter to the Navy.

"For the time being and until further examination can be made," he warned, "we are advising you that the material as furnished is unsuitable for rocket launcher track as designs and blue prints now specify."

What he referred to was the fact that U. S. Steel had supplied a commercial grade of stainless steel instead of nickel steel, as orilgually specified. However, the Navy had pre-empted the nickel steel for armor plate.

Interesting Alibis

Checking on reasons for the long delay in building a vitally important installation, this column got the following comment:

Stephen Nesbitt, spokesman for the Parkersburg Company: "You can't make a launcher out of bum steel. We write the Navy and ask them how to proceed, and they don't answer."

John Krytusa, head of Curtis Builders: "I can't comment. I couldn't tell you anything until I talked to the Navy."

Comdr. H. L. Haworth, speaking for the Navy: "I won't comment. You have no call to write anything about this for at least three months. Then we'll know what mistakes we've made.

"If this story gets out," he added, "It will cost the taxpayers money. We'll have to write letters and answer questions. It will just add to the confusion around here."

However, the months continue to drag by and one of the Navy's most important test projects also continues to drag. So perhaps it would be better to have the Navy use up a little stationery answering letters and thereby help get to the bottom of things. At least, the Navy won't have to pay for the postage.

Probe Of AEC

Two supersecret agencies hitherto beyond the pale of investigation are the Atomic Energy Commission and the Central Intelligence Agency. For obvious reasons many of their secrets must always remain secret.

However, Gen. Mark Clark, one of the ablest of our retired military officers, is now making a confidential survey of CIA, and it might be a good idea if there was a probe, not of atomic secrets but of atomic efficiency and honesty in the Atomic Energy Commission.

For instance, the AEC has been caught in flagrant disregard of other government agencies, also in flagrant disregard of the truth. It did not and would not give the Tennessee Valley Authority a copy of the vitally important Dixon-Yates contract until Acting TVA Chairman Harry A. Curtis publicly blasted the AEC for withholding it. The TVA is required to sign the Dixon-Yates contract, yet highhanded Admiral Strauss and the AEC not only negotiated secretly for the contract which TVA had to sign, but withheld a copy.

On top of this, the AEC has new been caught in a cold lie regarding concessions to two other private power companies.

Most people think it is a new thing for the AEC to buy private power in the Tennessee Area. But it isn't. One year ago, Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper asked Senate permission for the AEC no only to buy 5,500,000 kilowatts of power from the Ohio Electric Corporation and Electric Energy, Inc., but to raise the limit on the amount of money the government could guarantee these companies if AEC later bought its power elsewhere.

At that time, Senator Morse of Oregon asked whether the two private were being given quickie tax amortization by the government. He felt that if they were being given the privilege of writing off the cost of new plants in a hurry, they should not be given a government guarantee on the building of new plants.

AEC Covered Up

To this, the Atomic Energy Commission replied in a letter to Senator Hickenlooped:

"No certificate for rapid amortization under the Revenue Act of 1950 has been issued to either OVEC or EEI (Ohio Valley Electric Corp., and Electric Energy Inc.). The utilities have indicated that they have no plans to request such a certificate. The contracts with OVEC and EEI provide for amortization of the new generating stations and transmossion lines on a 25-year basis . . ."

However, all Snator Hickenlooper had to do was go down to the office of Defense Mobilization, as this reporter did, to see that the Atomis Energy Commission was not telling him the truth.

The Ram Sees

Yack Editor Cornell Wright has put out the word that the uniform for coeds getting yearbook pictures taken this week is dark sweaters and pearls. One gal complained because she doesn't have any pearls. Cornell told her that if she left the sweater off, too, nobody would miss the pearls.

That the Administration's attitude toward drinking is clearly hypocritical is most dramatically illustrated by the fact that while Dean Fred Weaver piously says women can't drink in fraternity houses, it is perfectly all right for a coed to guzzle all the beer she wants IN PUBLIC in the suds emporiums along the Franklin Street main drag. How silly can we get?

One of the Ram's coed friends (and he hasn't got many—not with his reputation) says it'll be a cold day before she gives Reuben Leonard a date, after his performance under Polgar's hypnosis on Saturday night. She says when you're in a trance like that, that's when your true character comes out. Reuben says every man's got a right to a few suppressed desires.

Reaction Piece

David Mundy

REACTION PIECE has prospects of being a regular Wednesday and Friday column. As will soon be discovered, any resemblance between opinions expressed here and those expressed elsewhere in The DTH is purely coincidental. It is likely to be the first time in several years that any decided differences have existed on the DTH editorial page.

ADVICE TO FRESHMEN: Here is some abbreviated dope on Carolina's Honor System, Politics, and Drinking. Please note absence of advice on women—there ain't none.

THE HONOR SYSTEM was the subject in almost every speech you heard during Orientation Week. Most departments do use it, but you had best beware of some ROTC and chemistry classes. When taking tests in the latter, for example, you will be instructed to sit in alternate seats "for obvious reasons." The important tests will be given at night to everyone, at the same hour, "for obvious reason." Can't recommend it, but you might decide to play the course the same way the department does, with your own modified version of the honor system. A good plan would be to join a fraternity with a good file of completed lab experiments. Best of all, choose a fraternity that has a lab instructor as a member. You might even be in the half of the class that passes the course (I did, i.e., pass.)

POLITICAL ADVICE that you received was probably almost non-existent, although you were deluged with material on the campus organizations, all hundred-odd. The profusion and variety of extra-curriculars does suggest that a great number of students takes part in them. There still, however, is the charmed circle of "Leaders." Practically all of them, especially those in Law School, have already set the date when they are going to run for the governorship. They are "real pros," but don't fear the competition. They generally aren't too bright. The ambition of all the BMOCs, of course, is to have an office in Graham Memorial. If you would like to meet them, just come around some weekday afternoon. You'll find them in hte basement, on the first floor, on the mezzanine and upstairs.

DRINKING is currently top campus topic. It also furnishes you with the greatest moral lesson that you will learn at Carolina; the value of hypocrisy. The Trustees have ordered the faculty to discipline or dismiss from the University students known to engage in drinking intoxicating liquors, gambling, etc. Supposedly, the rule has been enforced—or else a flagrant dereliction of duty. At the same time however, the Souht Building officials are in difficulties with fraternities, just because they won't allow women at fraternity beer parties. Enforcement of the rule would mean tar and feathers, and a refusal to enforce would méan no jobs. The faculty won't request an end to the drinking ban, so apparently the student government must begin a war of attrition with the Trustees. Might be called the Carolina Whiskey Rebellion of '54.

Meanwhile, you might as well get drunk; it will be a long, dry wait.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others. — Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was slumped against a tree outside Swain, watching the progress of the workmen building WUNC-TV's executive suites and studios.

"A noble project," he observed when he could ignore my presence no longer, "our TV program; and more power to the good right arms of them who are directing the destiny of our effort. But I would hate to foot the expense bills."

Well, but weren't they normal and usual expenses?

"Listen, WUNC-TV is carrying more Monday Quarterbacks than Notre Dame has of first-string quarterbacks," The Horse nickered. "I don't know how many experts they got building the deal and setting up the educational programs; but they got easy twice that many sideline experts telling how every step shoulda been done. I do hope, howsoever, that they are taking into consideration the time element in their future programs."

What did The Horse mean, time element?

"Well, over the weak-end when I was feeling especially weak, I audio-visualized myself in on a program coming in from Roanoke. Who was it but Mamie Pandit, the Un-American Indian, talking to some inquiring youths! Yup, and the time element had Mamie snafued."

Mamie Pandit? Was she, like Mrs. Ike, also named Mamie?

"Whenever I read her name," The Horse explained, sucking on a thoughtful hoof, "she is called Mme. Pandit. Ain't that short for Mamie?"

It was not. It was an abbreviation of Madame. It was Mrs., only in French.

"Well, I'm usually in Dutch with my My Missus," The Horse shrugged, "and it's been that way so long I'd have to get a passport to operate under any other nationality of relationships. And whilst Mamie Pandit was smarter'n all get-out, though not the eyeful that Mamie Chiang is, she just simply didn't have time. No matter what they asked her, there just wasn't time, see?"

No, I didn't see.

"Well," The Horse burped, his eyes crossed in interest on Something in Black, pre-Dior, that was leoparding past, "a youth would ask, 'What is India's view on Russia?" or something of the sort, and Mamie Pandit would say, 'I do not have time to go into this question fully.' Or some she-youth would say, 'What is your angle on Indo-China and the future of Rice-Crispies?' and Mamie would again state, 'I do not have time to go into this." It did the program no good at all, I assure you."

I had been forced into that program myself, as a listener and as a watcher. Didn't Mamie — excuse, please — Madame Pandit say she couldn't understand American pre-occupation with Russians?

"She's right, too," The Horse said. "Like a dog is about fleas, no nation is pre-occupied with Russians until it is occupied by them, or about to be, versively or subversively. Un - American India should right now be arranging with Doc Vine, our local and famed veterenian, for a dunking into Sheep Dip, or equivalent. For if the Russkies ain't already moved into Un-American India, there are some very misleading noises emanating therefrom."

Did The Horse actually think India was Un-American?

"Now, don't get me wrong, Roger," The Horse protested, "I am using that name only to differentiate from the American Indians. Any resemblance to the real Un-American thing is purely coincidental as far as I am concerned. I do not presume to speak for Mamie Pandit, however. In fact, I find I do not have the time."

"Wump!" came Mr. Wump's low-level-vision comment on what The Horse did have time for...

Editor:

The Daily Tar Heel believes that it was unfairly barred from the IFC meeting and the IFC in turn feels that its privacy was encroached upon. Both have good reasons for their feelings but the DTH was wrong in its action.

This University has many functional groups and organizations which run and administer their own affairs. The right to gather and discuss pertinent problems is inherent in the history of society. The fight to prevent external parties from interfering with the internal workings of these organizations can be compared with events as large as the World Wars and as small as the friction between management and labor. The IFC is one of the groups that has a right to meet without interference.

In no manner whatsoever does the IFC have anything to gain by coloring or distorting the minutes of meetings which they would present to The Daily Tar Heel. It is inconceivable that the IFC should allow a campus publication to print facts which the IFC had given the DTH and then act in a contradicting manner. But there seems to be a certain undertone of thinking, regardless of what pacifying statements the DTH editor might make, of anti-fraternity thinking by The Daily Tar Heel.

The IFC certainly has the right to ascertain who may attend their meetings and who may not. Since their decision has been to exclude the Tar Heel, then let the editor recognize the rights of privacy and remain a gentleman in his frustration.

Tar Heel Sports

By TOM PEACOCK

THIS IS THE TIME of year when coaches are optimistic without putting themselves on the spot, cordial to reporters without saying anything. The last is especially important now since it is well known that football is the money sport at most colleges and universities, and good press means good crowds.

My favorite reporter, Hildegarde G. Nose, had an interview with the coach at his almas madre the other day and left thusly enriched:

"Uh, coach, how does the team look this year?"

"Looks good, very good. Lot of hustle, lot of spirit, in the best shape they've ever been. We lost a lot of good boys, though, a lot of good boys."

"I'm sure you did. What kind of season will we have?"

"Well, the team's much better, but so is the opposition. Old Hard Tech, our arch rival, hasn't won a game in four years, I know, but they're sleeping. Look how long they've been playing together!"

"I know coach, but how many will be win and lose?"

"Well now, that's hard to say. With a few of the breaks we didn't get last year we could have the best season yet. We should do better than last year's team, and we will, unless of course we get some bad breaks and meet all those improved teams on their best day like we did last season. Or unless Crumcheck gets hurt."

"Crumcheck! How has he been looking, Coach?"

"Great, just great. I'm sure he will make All-America this year. He had that trouble last year, you know, and the year before that I guess was too soon to start pushing him."

"What happened about that trouble?"

"Oh, we got an interpreter. Seems like after we sent him to prep school three years and two years in the service he could have learned English."

"Was he really in the service those years, Coach?"

"Of course—you don't believe those stories about Canadian ball, do you?"

"Getting back to the team Coach, how is the line?"

"Looks fine. We've got a bunch of real hustlers, and they're in fine shape. We need a little work at end, the tackles aren't too deep, and the guards are somewhat slow, but boy do those boys have spirit!"

"Center's OK, huh?"

"Well you can't expect to replace someone like Behomoth."

"How about the backfield?"

"Good shape in the backfield. Those boys are really fighting. I've never seen such hustle, and the spirit out there gets you here."

"Ar you pretty deep, Coach?"

"That's what's been bothering me. You never know when you'll need that ninth team."

"Well, you should break even, shouldn't you?"

"Oh yes. Of course, if we don't get any breaks, and the way those other schools have improved—well, we've really got the spirit this year. You should see. . . ."

"Thanks Coach."

Hildy wrote the same story one reads every day about almost every team. Carolina is fortunate in having some outspoken coaches who try to keep the school and fans informed on how things are going on the field. Coach Barclay, along with Jake Wade, is even going to have a weekly radio show in which he will try to bring Carolina sports fans much closer to the team.

TV, Radio May Be Basis Of Lawsuit

Ford Frick And Major Owners Defendants

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 21.—A group of minor league baseball club owners, idkel over declining attendance and revenue, was reported today to be planning a 50 million dollar damage suit against Baseball Commissioner Ford Frick and the owners of the 16 major league clubs.

The Knickerbocker News, in a story by Sports Editor Charles Young, said the invasion of minor league territory by telecasts and radio broadcasts of major league games would be the basis for the suit. Young said the suit definitely would be filed.

Frick, in New York City, said he had not heard of the proposed suit and declined comment.

In Columbus, Ohio, George M. Trautman, president of the National Assn.' of Professional Baseball Leagues the minors, also declined comment.

Young quoted an unidentified source as saying "our leaders in baseball have done nothing to save the minors from being ruined."

Young wrote that a representative of the minor league clubs had been negotiating with an attorney and that an announcement of the filing of the suit might be made during the World Series, which begins Sept. 29.

When asked where the suit might be filed, Young replied only that "it's a long way from here."

He said funds to finance the suit were being contributed by the clubs invilved. He did not name the clubs.

At Portsmouth, Va., Frank D. Lawrence, owner of the Portsmouth baseball club of the Class E. Piedmont Leogue, disclosed he is the key figure in a move to institute the multi-million-dollar suit.

Lawrence's statement followed publication of the story in Albany, that such plans were afoot. He said release of the story was premature, and tha furtther statements on the matter would be issued by his attorney.

He would not say the suit would be for 50 million dollars, as reported by the New York paper, but indicaed it would be in the millions.

Lawrence said, "I have contacted 83 independent baseball owners and a majority are with me. Defendants will be Baseball Commissioner Ford Frick and the 16 major league organizations."

Young quoted his source as saying "They're the majors afraid of tangling with the government. They say they cannot stop the telecasts and broadcasts of major

Albert Long, senior of Durham, is running a close second to Marshall Newman at quarterback on the Carolina squad, and will be seeing a lot of action Saturday against State. Long is probably Carolina's best running quarterback and is also a punter.

Pass Defense Still Emphasized As Opener Against 'Pack Nears

With the season's opener with N. C. State just three days off, pass defense continues to occupy a sizeable portion of the Carolina daily drills.

Yesterday afternoon at Navy Field, this phase of practice was first on the list of activities. Coach Georg Barclay had his freshman team run State pass plays against varsity backs for nearly an hour. Varsity quarterbacks Marshall Newman and Al Long tossed from State's T formation and single-wing set-ups.

A brief punting drill also took the spotlight with Long, Larry Parker and Don Klochak doing the chores.

The Tarheels wound up their activity at Navy Field with a short dummy scrimmage, after which they moved into Kenan Stadium to butt heads.

State yesterday announced that Saturday, thereby increasing Carolina's chances of stretching its win streak over State to eight games.

The two top Wolfpack backs, Don Langston and Eddie West, would not be available for fulltime duty.

The University Day contest is slated for Kenan Stadium at two o'clock.

'Severing Harmony'

Bert Bell Of NFL Blasts Big 10 Officials As Being 'Selfish Men'

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 21.—Commissioner Bert Bell of the National Football League today blasted Big 10 athletics officials and others as "isolationists and selfish men" intent on severing years of harmonious relations between college and professional football.

Bell said Kenneth Tug Wilson, Big 10 commissioner; Theodore B. Payseur, Northwestern University athletic director; Tom Hamilton, Pittsburgh athletic director, and Fritz Crisler, head of athletics at Michigan, are the ring leaders in an attempt to cause a rift between college athletics and professional sports.

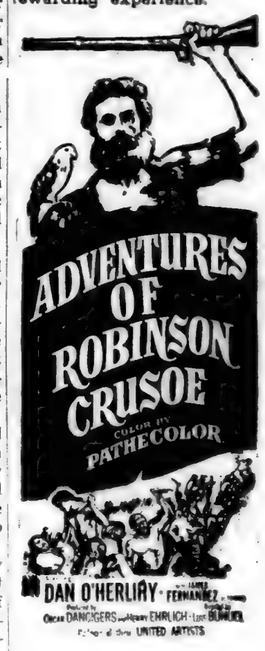
"They're not kidding us. We know what the real reason for their attack on pro football is our eloborate nationwide television program. They're sore because we televise on Saturday nights.

"Well, we're going to televise on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. We went through a lawsuit alone for eight weeks in federal court at a great expense. We won and we're going to give the public all the television we can," Bell said.

The portly commissioner said Wilson, Payseur, Hamilton, Crisler and the rest are afraid to allow unlimited television in college football "because they figure Notre Dame would sell their games coast to coast year in and year out, freezing the rest of them out of the picture.

"Those selfish men have banded together to keep Notre Dame in the same boat with them. They hide behind that 'protect the small college' stuff, but you don't notice them scheduling small colleges to help out, do you?"

Bell's ire has been aroused by a letter from Wilson and a report he received on the conference of conference meeting at Purdue University last June 13-14. The session discussed ways and means of sharply differentiating between college and pro sports.



The NFL commissioner said:

Wilson and his Big 10 colleagues recommended that colleges bar pro scouts and officials from press

Major League Roundup

Giants Win Once More; Small Crowds Recorded

BROOKLYN, Sept. 21 (AP)—Clinching the National League pennant didn't halt the New York Giants who rode over Brooklyn today 5-2 on a five-hit pitching job by Ruben Gomez and Jim Hearn. The Giants eliminated the Dodgers last night, but all regulars except Hank Thompson and Wes Westrum started against lefthanded Johnny Podres.

Bobby Hofman, filling in for Thompson at third base, hit a home run with the bases loaded following singles by Don Mueller and Willie Mays and a walk to Monte Irvin in the first inning. It was the Giants' seventh grand slam of the season, tying their own club record of 1951 but three under the major league record of 10 set by Detroit in 1938. The National League high is nine by Chicago in 1929.

Mays, who took over the league batting lead from Brooklyn's Duke Snider during last night's clinching ceremonies, held tight to first place with two hits in three trips. He bowed out for Eric Rodin, a rookie from Nashville, in the seventh. The two hits sent Mays' average up two points to .346 while teammate Don Mueller moved to .340 along side Snider.

After the first inning outburst against Podres, it was all over. The Giants rubbed it in a little when Gomez hit a home run off Podres in the fifth inning for their other run.

Gomez, a sure fire series starter against Cleveland, went five innings and allowed only thhree hits.

NEW YORK, Spt. 21 (AP)—Bob Gim became the New York Yankees' first 20-game winning rookie since Russ Ford in 1910 as he held Washington to four hits today for a 3-1 victory. Pete Runnels' wild throw let the Yanks break a tie in the eigth inning. Only 1,912 fans, an all time low for Yankee Stadium, watched the game.

Tied at 1-1 going into the last of the eighth, the Yanks had two out before Gil McGougald walked. Mickey Mantle followed with a single and Yogi Berra grounded to Runnels who made a good stop but threw high to second base, pulling Jerry Snyder off the bag. McDougald scored from second on the play.

Washington scored first in the fifth on walks to Jim Lemon and Snyder and Wayne Terwilliger's single. The Yanks tied the score in the sixth on a walk to Hank Bauer, Snyder's wild throw trying for a double play and Mickey Mantle's single.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 21 (AP)—Joe Nuxhall fired a six-hitter at the patched up Milwaukee Braves today as Cincinnatti posted a 5-0 victory before 10,001 fans, smallest paid attendance of the year at County Stadium.

The victory was Nuxhall's 12th against four losses and his first shutout of the season. He scattered the six singles through ifve innings, the Braves putting two on only in the ninth. Three double plays pulled the veteran lefthander out of any threat of trouble.

The Redlegs jumped on Chet Nichols for three runs on one hit in the third inning. Andy Seminick walked and when Nuxhall sacrificed, Nichols threw high to second on the force and both runners were safe. Bobby Adams then banged a triple to right for two runs and scored himself on Roy McMillan's sacifice fly.

Got a Lucky Droodle in your noodle?

SEND IT IN AND MAKE $25

MAN PLAYING TROMBONE IN TELEPHONE BOOTH

SHIP ARRIVING TOO LATE TO SAVE DROWNING WITCH

Want to pick up $25?—Make up a Lucky Droodle and send it in. It's easy.

If you want to find out just how easy it is, ask Roger Price, creator of Droodles. "Very!" Price says. Better yet, do a Droodle yourself, like the ones shown here.

Droodle anything you like. And send in as many as you want. If we select yours, we'll pay $25 for the right to use it, together with your name, in our advertising. We're going to print plenty—and lots that we don't print will earn $25 awards.

Draw your Droodles any size, on any piece of paper, and send them with your descriptive titles to Lucky Droodle, P. O. Box 67, New York 46, N. Y. Be sure your name, address, college and class are included.

While you're droodling, light up a Lucky—the cigarette that tastes better because it's made of fine tobacco . . . and "It's Toasted" to taste better.

Max Shulman Column Starts On Thursday

Max Shulman, author of a lot of books and short stories(Barefoot Boy with Cheek, Feather Merchants, Zebra Derby) and some plays and motion pictures will be writing a column a week for us beginning with Thursday's issue.

Squat, moon-faced Max Shulman was born in Minnesota, grew up in St. Paul, and attended the University of Minesota. There he met and married a coed classmate.

Shulman says, turn to page 3 Thursday, snap open a pack of Philip Morris and light up while you read 'On Campus with Max Shulman'. It's got to be a Philip Morris because they're paying the freight to print my vintage prose here. Besides, what other cigaettes offers you just the right amount of sun and rain?"

be taught throughout a universal education system, the elimination of racial, religious, class, political and economic prejudices, the urgency of investigating truth independent of the fettering influence of tradition and parental biases; the equality of opportunities and privileges of men and women; the purification of the human heart and the attainment of a sincere consciousness of love, understanding and absolute humility before God and men."

These and many more are the aims of the Baha'is, Wootten said.

It was recalled that at a public Baha'i meetng here last March, a statement by a Baha'i speaker was made to the effect that Baha'u'llah was the Promised One anticipated by Christians. When asked to comment on this, Wootten asserted, "Yes, and not only anticipated by Christians, but by Moslems, Jews, Zoroastrians and the faithful of all mankind. He is the Prophet anticipated to usher in a millenium of world peace, unity, justice and brotherhood."

Wootten urged that "all give ample attention by investigating thoroughly such a claim as this, for it is in such days as these that religions perish and the new one is born, and that it would be truly regretful to miss the Promised One when He appears."

Furgol did not play in enough tournaments, but was invited to particiapte anyway in the competition, whose proceeds go to under-privileged younsters.

Ham said Furgol wired back: "I'll be thee. I used to be a poor kid myself."

The Open champ will compete in the Celebrities division of the tournament, which will be for 36 holes Saturday and Sunday, the final two days of the tournament. The winner gets no money.

Ham recalled that Furgol, who overcame an am defect to win the Open this year, astonished the golf world by tipping his caddy $1,000 when he won the Open last June.

The "World Series of Golf" is an expansion o fthe National Celebrities tournament, which is played annually in Washington. It marks the windup of the summer golf tour and will match all the year's leading money winners. These are Bob Toski, Livingston, N. J., $65,240; Jack Burke, Jr., Kiamesha Lake, N. No one has a chance to overhaul Toski as hte No. 1 money winner, but whoever collects the $10,000 first prize here will have second place for the year.

Two Durham Men To Stand Trial For Carrboro Theft

DURHAM.—John Byrd, 43, and Henry Lamm, 34, both of Durham, are scheduled to stand trial in Middle District Court here next week for the July 28 robbery of the Carrboro banch of the Bank of Chapel Hill.

Judge Johnson J. Hayes of Wilkesboro will convene court Monday morning and court officials say the trial is expected to be one of the first to be heard.

Byrd and Lamm, arrested eight days after the bank was held up and $9,865 taken, have been held in jail in lieu of $25,000 bond each. They first were jailed in Greensboro and later were transferred to Winston-Salem.

Two local women, Elsie Wicker McKee, 25, and Hazel Smith McKee, 28, were taken into custody as material witnesses the same day as the two men were arrested. The women were released upon their own recognizance to appear in court here.

Byrd and Elsie McKee were arrested by FBI agents at Carolina Beach. Lamm and Hazel McKee were taken into custody at a roadblock near Wlison. The FBI said $7,466 of the money taken in the holdup was recovered.

Byrd and Lamm were indicted on two counts by a Federal grand jury Sept. 13 at the Rockingham term of Middle District Court.

One count in the indictment alleges that the men stole the money by "force and violence" and the other that they "put in jeopardy the lives of Hubert Neville and Juanita Sturdivant by th euse of a dangerous weapon, that is a pistol." Neville is manager of the bank and Mrs. Sturdivant a teller.

If convicted of the charges, Byrd and Lamm face a maximum of 25 years in prison and a fine of $10,000, or both.

The law provides for a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than 20 years, or both, for bank robbery. Federal law provides for a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment of not more than 25 years, or both.

Byrd was released from Alcatraz Prison in 1950 after serving a portion of a 20-year sentence he received for the robbery of a bank at Candor in 1938.

boxes; refuse to hire coaches from the pro ranks until one year after their pro affiliation had expired, bar mention of professionals on college radio and TV programs, bar radio and TV commentators who broadcast pro games from broadcasting college contests, ban college coaches from coaching in all-star games against pros, prevent college registrars from giving eligibility information to the pros, do away with the senior bowl game, refuse to loan college football films to the pros.

Bell said that although the conference of conference approved thes eand other measures aimed at these and other measures aimed at professional sports in general, the NFL planned no retaliation.

"We welcome college players, officials and coaches into our ball parks any time they want to come. I'd like to remind Wilson that if registrars of Big 10 colleges refuse us information and we thereby make a mistake in drafting a player, say like J. C. Caroline of Illinois, it will be the college's fault, not ours. That's why we check the registrars, so that we won't pick players with college eligibility," Bell said.

league games into minor league league cities but their contracts with sponsors stipulates, for instance, that telecasts of Saturday games involving the Cleveland, Philadelphia and Chicago American League contests cannot be made into a major league city.

"If the major league cities can be blacked out, why then can't the minor cities?"

Young said he was told the independents would stress that point in their suit.

Frick, at a meeting of the Metropolitan Sports Broadcasters Assn. Sept. 8, said that mnor league ball was being killed off by unlimited television, and that major league baseball in turn would suffer.

He proposed a meeting of representatives of his office, the radio and television industry and the majors and minors.

"In two weks' times," he said then, "I will guarantee you that we can come up with a solution to the radio and TV problem that will be happy for both sides. I don't know if the happy solution will please the Federal Communications Commission but I do know it can be satisfactory to all of us."

Limited Reporting On IFC?

Frat Group's Chief Says He May Have Key

The President of the Inter-Fraternity Council indicated yesterday that he thought limited press coverage of IFC meetings by The Daily Tar Heel might be the answed to the hassle between the I F C and the newspaper.

IFC President Henry Isaacson said that the IFC should have "some form of coverage by the press" but that "the IFC, like a great many other organizations" on campus and "in our national government," must "restrict its publicity so that the information which reaches the public will be authentic and unbiased."

'Censorship'

Daily Tar Heel Editor Charles Kuralt said that if such restrictions were instituted "it would appear to be the organization itself (IFC) which would decide what the student body has a right to know."

"This," said Kuralt, "is censorship, and The Daily Tar Heel can not agree to it."

"However," added Kuralt, "no plan has been presented to the newspaper, and we stand willing to discuss with the president and the IFC any plan they may have by which The Daily Tar Heel may fulfill its responsibility of covering campus news."

Executive Sessions

It has been suggested by various IFC members that they might be willing to allow coverage of their meetings if they could hold closed executive sessions in which to discuss matters which they did not want reported to the student body.

President of the Student Body Tom Creasy yesterday said that "for the good of the student body I would uphold the right of any or-

Young Republicans Meet

Carolina's Young Republicans will hold their first meeting of the year tonight at 8 o'clock in Roland Parker Lounge number three, Graham Memorial.

David Mundy, president of the club, said yesterday he would like to see all Republicans and "other persons of a conservative bent" on the campus to attend the meeting. "We've been a cell -sized organization long enough," said Mundy.

Mundy requested the officers to be present a few minutes before 8 o'clock for a brief meeting of the executive committee.

He said membership cards are now available. Dues are 50 cents a year.

Girls May Visit Dormitories On Football Days

An administration-approved plan whereby coeds can visit men's dormitory social rooms on Saturdays when home football games are scheduled was announced yesterday by Manning Muntzing, pdesident of the Inter-Dormitory Council.

Dorm social rooms will be open to dates and visitors for two hours before and two hours after each of the home games this fall, said Muntzing yesterday.

"The IDC feels that the working out of this visiting agreement is a very significant step forward in the development of dormitories as social centers," said Muntzing.

Holsten Comments

Roy Holsten of the Office of Student Affairs negotiated with Muntzing and IDC officials earlier this week to work out a visiting agreement. Holsten said yesterday the present agreement was for football season only, but that it "may or may not be" the first step in a permanent plan.

Holsten said that both the administration and the IDC were aware that no permanent plan could be worked out now, since some dorms do not have sufficient facilities for entertaining coed visitars except during certain hours and under certain conditions, such as the hours before and after football contests.

No Drinking

The agreement states that there will be no drinking and that "as soon as possible and where feasible, powder rooms shall be set aside during the hours mentioned."

According to the agreement, "in each dormitory the advisor shall assume the responsibility of host until officers have been elected."

What Does Mail Mean To Girls? Everything, 18 Out Of 18 Say

By BOBBIE ZWAHLEN

900 girls on the UNC campus, it means everything. When asked why they rushed to their mailboxes the first thing every morning, the answer was always the same. All girls feel that letters are a vital part of their college life and college would be a total loss without those postcards and letters coming in every day.

Why? One girl stated that it "keeps you in contact with home and other people." It keeps you from feeling that you're in an ivy covered tower away from places miles away.

Another said, "It perks up the day when it seems to lag. It makes you feel that you're still important enough to be remembered."

Most of the coeds seem to feel that a letter from that all-important boy is the one that really counts. They like to hear what other boy friends are doing. One even expressed it this way:

"When a boy takes out enough time to write me a letter, it's as good as a date to me."

Next in line was the letter from home. Most girls seem to worry when they don't hear from home. They want to feel that they still belong to their families even though they are sometimes hundreds of miles away from the home town. And of course they need to make plans for those all-important week-ends.

Naturally there are those typical, typical female gossip columns from their gal friends.

Yes. Just ask the other 882 girls on the campus how important mail is to them.

By the way, do males like mail?

'Rocket' Makes Special Runs

Special performances of "By Rocket to Mars" have been scheduled by the Morehead Planetarium for Saturday to accomodate football fans coming here for the Carolina-State game and other Consolidated University activities.

In addition to the regular 8:30 p.m. daily show, special space trip excursions to Mars will be held at 1 p. m. and immediately following the game.

The show, which reproduces with amazing illusion of reality a fascinating rocket trip to the solar system, requires only 50 minutes.

The Planetarium management yesterday announced that the rocket show will continue for two more weeks, through Oct. 4, enable thousands of Tar Heels who have not seen the colorful show to do so. Because it is a Planetarium policy to have a space trip show to a different destination each summer, the Mars show will not be repeated for several years.

Already more than 10,000 persons have climbed aboard the "rocket" for Mars, said the Planetarium management.

Legislators, Trustees To Have Luncheon Here

The State General Assembly and the full Board of Trustees will be the guests of State College and the University at a luncheon here preceding the State -Carolina game Saturday, William C. Friday, assistant to the president, announced yesterday.

The luncheon will take place in the Morehead Building from noon until 1:30 p. m.

Today Last Day For Frosh Pix

Today is the last day pictures of freshmen will be made for the 1955 Yackety-Yack, according to an announcement from Yack co-editors Jackie Park and Cornell Wright.

The free pictures will be made in the basement of Graham Memorial from 1 to 8 p.m.

Sophomores and law students will be photographed for five days starting tomorrow and continuing Monday through Thursday of next week. Juniors and graduate students follow, with seniors beginning Oct. 8.

The editors urged students to come early for photographs. There will be no extension of deadlines, they said. Required dress is coats and ties for men; dark sweaters and pearls for girls.

ANNUAL SPACE

All organizations and societies desiring space in the 1955 Yackety-Yack should send a representative to the Yack office in the basement of Graham Memorial between 2 and 5 p. m. throughout the week, said Yack Business Manager Tom Spain yesterday. Spain will receive no coverage.

Educator J. W. Lasley Used To Slip Out To The Old Well

By CHARLES CHILDS

"What are you going to do with that little boy?" the lady called from her porch.

"I'm going to enroll him in the University," came the man's reply, and the 14-year-old boy moved close to the side of his father. The lady called again, "Better give him to me . . . he's too small."

That was the boy's first day at the University in 1906. Today, nearly half a century later, the same small boy is the senior University faculty member and an outstanding Chapel Hill citizen. His name is John Wayne Lasley Jr. Yesterday, he was 63 years old.

Undergraduate

Lasley is the lightest student on record to enter the University. He weighed 72 pounds when he was admitted, and he tells about the time while a freshman his weight saved him from a "blacking."

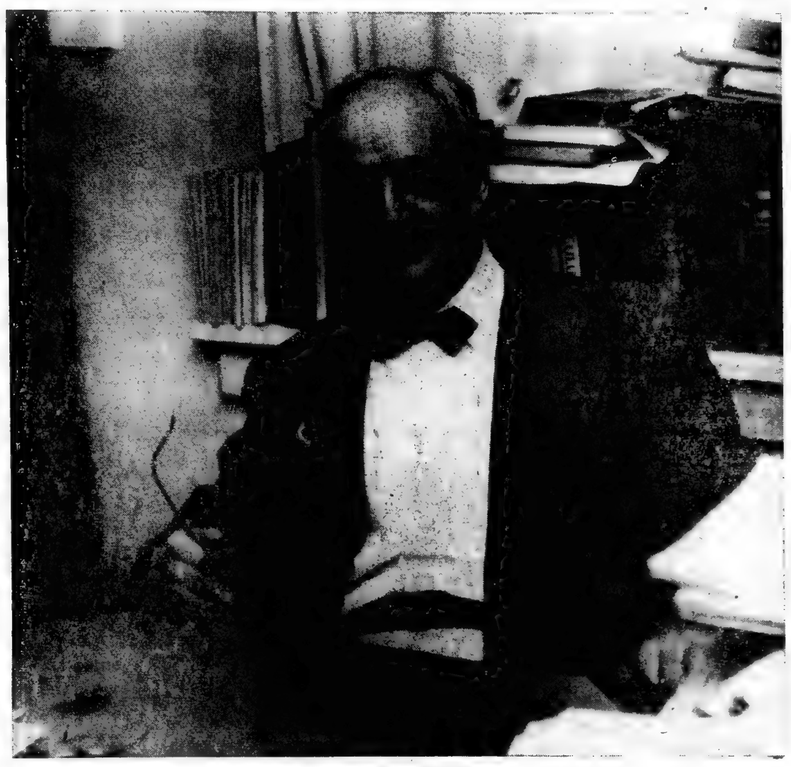
It was a custom then to blacken freshmen with shoe polish. "Boy," he said, "When they blacked them, they really blacked 'em."

It all happened late one night when Lasley was returning to his room. Just as he was nearing the place where the Post Office now stands, he noticed a group of students. He knew immediately what was up and tried to "high tail it out of there," but he was caught. The leader of the group looked him over and told him to be on his way, that they wanted men. He promptly told the leader, "Thank you, boss," and then he really "high tailed it" to his dorm.

This was only one of the things which happened to Lasley as an undergraduate, and his roommate provided some other interesting experiences.

Dr. Hyman, now dean of the University of Tennessee's Medical School, was Lasley's roommate while Lasley was an undergraduate. Dr. Hyman was always bringing frogs and lizards into the room and keeping them there. But in spite of the zoo, "Sap" (Dr. Hyman), and "Kid," (Lasley), would always play tennis in the afternoon and chess at night. "It was a wonder that both of us made Phi Bete," Lasley said in a serious mood.

One night "Sap" went to the Old Well, got a drink of water, returned to the room, and the next day he did not remember a thing about it. "Sap," it seems, had a habit of walking in his sleep, and "Kid," it seems, had a habit of keeping a baseball bat beside his bed.



Student life consumed a part of Lasley's time. He was a member of several student organizations, and among them were the Di Society, YMCA, Press Association and the Athletic Association.

His managing the tennis team brought him a compliment from the 1910 Yackety-Yack: "We congratulate ourselves everytime we see him as there would have been no Tennis Team if he had gone somewhere else." It was in the same Yack that his roommate, the Yack editor, played one last joke on Lasley by printing that he 'is afflicted with the hallucination that he can sing, but it is hoped that he will recover from it."

Before he became interested in pure mathematics, he seriously considered becoming a journalist while he was a member of the University's first journalism class. He went so far in this field that he become sports editor of The Daily Tar Heel and part time editor of The Burlington News, his home town newspaper, during summers.

Awards And Positions

In 1910 Lasley received his A.B. from the University and joined the faculty. One year later he was awarded an A.M. in civil engineering. John Hopkins University made him a fellow by courtesy in 1915. He returned in 1916 to Chapel Hill and remained here until he received another honor by being appointed a fellow at the University of Chicago in 1919. He received his doctorate there in 1920.

UNIVERSITY'S LIGHTEST STUDENT—JOHN WAYNE LASLEY, JR.

It was at the University of Chicago that Lasley an dE. T. Brown met. They reached over and shook hands in a class after learning that they were neighbors; Lasley from North Carolina and Brown from Virginia. They have occupied the same desks, in the same office, at the same university for the past thirty-two years.

In 1924 Mr. Lasley was appointed professor of mathematics and thereby joined two of his former teachers, professors Archibald Henderson and Thomas Hickerson.

His ability as a teacher and author is illustrated by a few of his accomplishments: 1936—president, North Carolina Academy of Science; 1942—chairman, comprehensive Examinations; 1944—his and Brown's book on introductory mathematics adopted by 19 institutions; 1944—chairman, Southeastern Mathematics Association; 1944—chairman, Division of Natural Sciences.

Lasley's speech, "Mathematics and the Sciences," which he delivered when retiring as president of the North Carolina Academy of Science, was nationally acclaimed. It was published in "Mathematics, Our Great Heritage" (Harpers) and in the 1941 report of the Smithsonian Institute.

Personality

The best way to obtain an insight into Lasley's whole personality and outlook is to see him and his wife together. They have just recently celebrated their 30th wedding anniversary. When asked how he and his wife appeared as if they had been married for only two years, he replied with a big smile and youthful eyes, "It just seems like two years."

Although he has received his Ph.D., he makes a point to tell each class that it should not worry about any fancy title. "The highest title in the world is 'Mister' and that's what I want to be called."

Perhaps the most notable attribute which Lasley possesses is his slow, easy manner in which he lives from day to day. "The world is too tense," he explained, and it needs to take things slower. From his speech and actions, he practices what he preaches.

When he was a student with Frank Graham, Lasley "would slip out at night, go to the Well, pull up the bucket and drink from it." There was no drinking from a fountain. There have been many changes since he was a student around the Old Well, and he added that he liked the New Well, but he prefers "a little less planning."

"Teaching young people is the only way to keep young," Lasley happily tells his students. If records are any indication of his interest in students, he has every grade book and quiz back to his first class in 1910. One student remarked that he had collected more final quizzes than all fraternities combined, and Lasley responded, "Well, I should have, for I started earlier than they did."

Although he has been teaching 45 years, Lasley is "not keen on retiring" at the end of his 50th year. The field of mathematics will always provide an interesting challenge, because "it is unbounded." But he is not looking at the future with any regrets for three reasons.

The three reasons for a bright future are: Mary Ann, Johnny and Jimmy, his grandchildren. John, Lasley's only child, at times appears to run second place in popularity when Lasley takes Mary Ann and Johnny to a baseball game. When Mary Ann gets tired of carrying her doll, her grandfather can be seen carrying it in his arm, holding it as if it were a real baby. He says there is no greater pleasure than his grandchildren.

Students' Thoughts

Looking over Lasley's awards, his interest in students, appealing personality and his ideal manner of taking things easy, his former students say that it brings to mind a term which can be defined but rarely illustrated. The term, they say, is "A True Southern Gentleman." And in their minds. Mr. Lasley meets every standard of "A True Southern Gentleman." They, like members of the faculty, feel that the University is most fortunate in having a man of his unusual caliber.

Lasley will always be in the memory of his students after they leave Chapel Hill, nad htey hope that his young, encouraging smile will greet them each time they return.

Dr. Lasley Of Phillips Hall

We hasten to congratulate, a trifle late, Dr. J. W. Lasley on his 63rd birthday and the beginning of his 45th year as a teacher of men.

Today in The Daily Tar Heel, you may read something of the life of Dr. Lasley; but a column of type cannot convey the significance his work has had for the Department of Mathematics, much less the significance his profound and patient character has had among those who know him in this community.

Through the years, he has fallen victim to neither arrogance nor pedantry, those twin diseases which often beset those who spend their lives as teachers. Quite the contrary, Dr. Lasley calls constant teaching the best preserver of a youthful outlook.

We commend Dr. Lasley on his own outlook toward his job. His story is on page one.

Segregation Under The Spire

Western North Carolina Methodists opened their annual meeting in Asheville yesterday, with the question of racial segregation first on the agenda. Something must be said on the subject, the Methodists agree. A stand must be taken. What will it be?

There should be no doubt, if white Protestants are to practice what they preach—universal brotherhood.

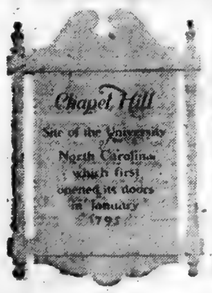
Jews in the South advocated an end to segregation long before the Supreme Court decision on schools. The position of the Catholic Church is simple: There is no segregation before God.

North Carolina Methodists and Protestant church members everywhere in the South should ponder the words of Dr. Benjamin Mays, the great Negro president of Morehouse College in Atlanta:

"It will be a sad commentary on our life and times if future historians can write that the last bulwark of segregation based on color was God's church."

Gracious Living—IX

Ia Fontaine, 17th Century fablist who wrote tales in verse, in a poem, "The grasshopper having sung all summer," (you know the rest of the tale) invited disfavor for the lethargic grasshopper and glorified the ascetic ant.



In the dorms, these days, boys are more inclined to sympathy with the ant's happy-go-lucky singing cousin, than with the ant itself. A grave predicament has arisen and the tiny red marauders are making camp along the stripes of repp ties, in the valleys and on the fuzz of rough bath towels, and even between the hallowed bedsheets.

Wild tales come to us out of the living halls about the ingenuity of the ants. One desperate dorm resident, we hear, seeking to foil the ants right down at the wire, placed each leg of his bed in cans of creosote. He located the bed, on which he perched a can of goodies, in the middle of the floor. Up the side wall and halfway across the ceiling marched a filed phalanx of ants. From a point on the wall directly over the food, down dropped the ants, like pin-head sized parachutists, onto the bed.

The Daily Tar Heel, always eager to promote the interests of Gracious Living in Chapel Hill, calls upon the South Building brain trust to declare a full-bloom DDT war on these insecta non grata. Three-man rooms are already upon us and sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

Dorm Visiting Moves Ahead Another Step

Louis Kraar

THIS WEEKEND coeds and girl friends of dorm dwellers will visit in the dormitory social rooms on a limited basis.

The Inter-Dormitory Council has moved one more step closer to what soon may be a permanent coed visiting agreement for dormitories. After a lagging committee toyed with negotiations for such an agreement last spring and got nowhere, many were discouraged. But now the IDC has taken the initiative to do something, and the dorm social situation has moved ahead.

VISITING THIS and other football weekends, with the exception of the Duke game that will occur over the Thanksgiving holiday, will be from one to two o'clock and from four to six o'clock.

There are, of course, other problems to be ironed out before South Building will grant a more complete visiting plan for dorms. The biggest berrier at present is the need for a social room setup that is apart from the living quarters, as this reporter pointed out earlier.

DORM VISITING and social problems seem to be topics I hear about a great deal when ever there is an election coming up. But after the election is over, the promises fade like last year's girl friend.

One campus political party, the Student Party, holds a powerful majority in the Legislature. Last spring it used this power to buy television sets for dorms wiht a surplus accumulated from student fees over several years. While TV is pleasant, it would seem that this is little of a "social" improvement.

There is nothing social about a TV set. In fact, I would say that a voluminous video in a social room could make things pretty anti-social at times. The pleasure of good company—of both sexes—and interesting conversation are still the greatest social things.

POLITICAL PARTIES with ambition, both to serve the campus and win elections, might concentrate on helping the IDC move ahead with its visiting rather than buying up TV sets.

There was little need for the Legislature's action in purchasing TV sets for dorms last spring. If it's votes that you political parties want, give the dorm boys the girls—not twenty-inch screens with disturbing loudspeakers.

THE DEBATE over executive sessions and the IFC barring this newspaper from its meeting shifted to the Y Court this week as did news of what went on after the reporters was kept out

The 22-11 vote to bar Daily Tar Heel reporter Dick Creed was among the information drifting around the Y.

Although there are times when any government group must hold closed sessions, the IFC should realize that what it does is of interest to the rest of the campus.

This paper can be counted on for fairness in dealing with the IFC or any other group. In turn, IFC members should not be ashamed of their views, even to the point of seeing them in print.

COEDS WHO like the new Dior "flat look" ought to be housed in a men's dorm, giving them ample chance to study the shape which they are so diligently trying to copy.

Why some panty-waist fashion designer, i.e. Christian Dior, has to make our women look like men I can't understand. In a world where we are becoming more and more ashamed of feeling strongly about anything (How many people would you tell—without prompting—that you liked them?), this seems the last straw. Not only are we ashamed of our emotions (even down to the underplay of voices in the "Dragnet" programs), but now it seems we are ashamed of the shape of our women's bodies.

Free Fun For FPC

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON. — The Federal Power Commission opened hearings yesterday on natural gas rates affecting the housewives of Michigan, Wisconsin and other northern states. Simultaneously certain commission members have become palsy-walsy with gas and electric lobbyists.

In contrast to previous years, FP commissioners today think nothing of going on free junkets paid by the gas and utility industry in a manner that never could have hapened when Sen. George Norris was watching the power lobby.

And since one of President Truman's assistants, Don Dawson, reaped headlines for getting his hotel bill paid during a visit to Miami, it might be a good idea to scrutinize the Federal Power Commission, whose members influence the nation's economy far more more than a White House assistant.

Last year, the three Republican members of the Power Commission were taken on a grand tour of the Southwest by the Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association — all expenses paid.

The Commissioners who took the trip were FP Chairman Jerome Kuykendall, appointed by Eisenhower, Seaborn Digby, also an Eisenhower man, and Nelson Lee Smith, a Republican holdover. Along was Willard Gatchell, FPC General Counsel who had ear trouble and couldn't fly. So while the others flew, the Gas Company hosts went to the trouble and expense of carrying Gatchell separately by auto.

Asked about the trip, Chairman Kuykendall explained that if he had been the guest of the company only he would have gone. But he said he considered it was proper to take the trip as the guest of the entire industry.

Democrats Abstain

Power commissioners of previous years, however, would never have let themselves get indebted to the gas industry, the electric power industry or any other industry. And it may be significant that Commissioner Dale E. Doty, appointed by President Truman, and Commissioner Claude Draper, who has been on the commission for more than 25 years, did not attend.

Kuykendall claims he wasn't keen about going to this party and told his wife to decline it on the grounds that they had another invitation. However, the Morleys changed the date, after which the Kuykendalls felt they had to accept. At the party were the other Republican commissioners—Nelson Lee Smith and Seaborn Digby.

Big Power Lobby

At the party also was Ed Falck, one of the most active power company lobbyists in Washington. And after the cocktail party the Kuykendalls and the Digbys allowed themselves to be taken to diner by the big utility lobbyist.

The activities of lobbyist Falck are so amazing that they will have to be taken up in a separate column, except perhaps for his social activities which can be touched upon briefly here.

Significantly, Falck flew to Chicago with Chairman Kuykendall a year ago to attend the National Association of Railroad and Utility Executives, though Kuykendall says it was pure coincidence that they happened to be on the same plane. The government paid Kuykendall's fare.

In Chicago, however, he admits that lobbyist Falck threw a dinner for members of the Executive Commttee. After another Executive Committee Meeting at the Raleigh Hotel last January, lobbyist Falck invited the members to his home for a party. Kuykendell and Commissioner Smith attended.

Note—What the Power Commission is now considering is one of the most important cases in the nation—the price rates to be charged for the transmission of natural gas north from Texas and Louisiana. The Commission previously held that it had no power to regulate the rates, but the Supreme Court reversed them. They how have to decide what these rates should be and obviously should not have their judgment warped by the same kind of free hotel bills or social favors for which the Trumanites were criticized.

McCarthy-Go-Round

The junior Senators assigned to investigate Senator McCarthy had to be drafted for the job. Sen. Frank Carlson, Kansas Republican, made a final appeal to Sen. Gene Millikin, Colorado Republican, to head the investigation but Millikin used his senority to duck out . . . Senate Majority Leader Bill Knowland of California has been excusing McCarthy for taking $10,000 from Lustron on the grounds that other Senators write articles and make speeches for pay. Knowland apparently has forgotten the circumstances under which McCarthy accepted the $10,000. The check from Lustron was dated Nov. 12, 1948. Exactly seven days before the Senate Investtigating Committee launched a probe of Lustron. In other words, McCarthy was paid by the company that his committee was investigating . . . but that isn't all. As Vice Chairman of the Joint Housing Committee, McCarthy had been barnstorming around the country, boosting Lustron's product—prefabricated houses — No wonder Lustron's president, Carl Strandlund, boasted he had "powerful friends" in Congress. This boast, made a few days after the $10,000 paymen tto McCarthy, is a matter of record at the RFC

McCARTHY

.. . Speaking of the past, the story has never been told of how McCarthy tried to bamboozle Montana's shy Ex-Sen. Zales Ecton out of an assignment on the powerful Appropriations Committee. Both had equal seniority, so lots were drawn for the Appropriations post. McCarthy and Ecton each drew a sealed envelope, one of which contained the appropriations assignment. McCarthy hastily tore open his envelope, broke into a broad grin, then walked over to Ecton and "sympathized" with him for losing. Dejectedly, Ecton tossed his envelope in the wastebasket without opening it. Later, a committee aide opened Ecton's envelope, discovered he had actually won. McCarthy, as usual, had been bluffing.

The Yack's still having trouble. Only 13 freshmen turned up in seven hours on the first day to have their pix made for the yearbook. What Jackie and Cornell had better do is put up posters all over the campus with a big headline: "FREE FREE FREE." That never fails to attract attention, at Carolina or anywhere else.

Ramblings

Ron Levin

So you don't have a room. Here, take my handkerchief. I know exactly how you feel. But this is Chapel Hill, and there's really not much you can do. There always seems to be this mechanism of compensation creeping up on you when you look for a place to hang your hat. If it's a big room, there's no shower. If the location is good, the room is too small. If the neighborhood is quiet, the guy upstairs roller skates every night. . .in the room. Either there is not hot water, or it is so hot that it makes the bristles on your hair brush sag like last year's football team. If the rent is low, the roof leaks. If the bed is good, there is no heat in the winter . . . and so on.

What's that you say? Something should be done? You're not serious really? There never have been any "good" rooms in Chapel Hill, unless you are lucky enough to have an apartment, or trailer, or are lucky enough to enjoy the luxurious facilities of a dorm. . .but such is the life of a college joe. Grin and bear it for the next four years. It will make a man of you. It says here. . .

And don't complain about there not being enough dorm space. Do you want people in this town to starve? If there was enough dorm space for all, then I know many families that would have to leave, because their sole or primary source of income is what they make from roomers. You see, there's more to this than meets the eye. (No, not of the horse.)

So, I have a suggestion. Buy a pup tent and pitch it on the top of South Building. You'll have running water. . when it rains. The location is great. You can meet your eight o'clock by yelling "Geronimo" and jumping down into Y Court. And you'll never have to worry about sleeping through that early morning class. The little bell that rings ever so gently wakes up the people in Pittsboro, and they don't even have classes over there.

So if you are bemoaning your fate about a room, then come see me and we shall go have a beer and drown both our sorrows in the mug. I room near the Porthole in a manhole for one. Not very nice, but think of the location.

(Come to think of it, I know a guy that went to med school just so he could get to room in Whitehead. After he got in Whitehead he found out it wasn't what he wanted, but he grew to like med school and today is an outstanding doctor. You never know.)

Let's go up to New England for a few words of wisdom by the venerable Ralph Waldo Emerson. You know Henry David Thoreau lived out at Walden Pond which wasn't too far from Emerson's place. In the winter when it got too cold for Henry, he'd come in and sit by the fire with Ralph and his wife and they'd all drink hot cocoa and discuss the plight of the world on those New England wintry evenings. Many times he would come in when Ralph was away touring the country giving lectures, and. . .well, you know people, talk. . .especially in those days.

"College is not an education. but the means of an education." —Emerson.

"All life is an experiment. The more experiments you make the better. What if you do fail and get fairly rolled in the dirt. Up again you shall never be so afraid of a tumble."—Emerson.

One day Thoreau was out at Walden Pond watching the ants as usual when some guy comes along from Concord and demands that he pay his poll tax. Ol' Henry refused and was promptly taken to jail. At his arrival at the hoosegow, he was told that if he paid the tax he could go free. He told them what they could do with their poll tax; whereupon they clapped him behind bars. He'd probably still be in there if some of his friends hadn't come and bailed him out. They really had a hard time of it in those days.

Thomas Wolfe On 3-Man Rooms

Upon reading in The Daily Tar Heel's news pages of the donation of the library of John Terry to the University, along with its wealth of material on Terry's friend, Thomas Wolfe, we were moved to thumb through the copies of The Tar Heel published under Wolfe's editorship. Anyone who takes down the blue-backed bound Tar Heels of 1919-20 is sure to be struck by the facts that campus problems, campus controversies and movements, haven't changed much from the days when Wolfe edited this newspaper.

"It becomes evident that the enrollment for this session will be an approximate of 1,300, some 200 larger than ever before. Every available rooming space in Chapel Hill is not merely filled, but crowded. The order of the day seems to be three men to a room.

"...The very fact of three men rooming together bespeaks an unconscious conspiracy against study... Our campus need is evident. It is new buildings, more of them, and soon, for it is evident our enrollment will increase, not merely steadily, but swiftly. Indeed, 2,000 students is a prophesy to be fulfilled, we think, at no distant time."

Quadruple the figures, add 35 years, and you have President Gray pleading the case for new buildings to the state Legislature's Advisory Budget Commission. And dormitories yet unbuilt in Wolfe's day filled—with three men in a room.

The Presbyterian Wall

Editor Thomas Wolfe, we suppose, would have had a field day with the architectural styles of the new hospital. The Presbyterian church was being built in 1919, and on December 13, Tom took jovial offense:

"In the process of erection along with the church is a unique gray stone wall which surrounds the church yard on all sides. We are unable to analyze the arhitecture of this wall; it smacks strongly, however, of the pre-Sing Sing period. It has an undeniable architectural atmosphere that reminds one strongly of the walls to be found around jails and penitentiaries. Simple, of course, but a symbol of strength. It was such a wall, no doubt, that Dante referred to in his remarks of his stay at a certain well known winter resort. Over the gate, perhaps you will remember, was the following inscription: 'Abandon all hope ye that enter here.' But . . . perhaps the wall is needed to keep chickens out..."

The 'Ism' Of 1920

"The Goody Shop Cafe — Unquestionably We Feed You Better." The ad appeared in the Jan. 17, 1920 edition of Thomas Wolfe's Tar Heel. Foister's was advertising pillows and pennants; Kodak selling was a sideline. In the editorial column, Wolfe went internationalist. He headlined his lead editorial, "What Will Hiram Say?

"The University has voted overwhelmingly on the adoption of the League of Nations Covenant without reservations. We have undoubtedly brought down upon us the scathing invective of Messrs. Lodge, Borah, and Hell-Roaring Hiram Johnson. We are un-American. These men stand for Americanism... Growth is an evil thing to them. To be great is to be criminal.

"And now our University has become un-American. For we sent our men to the war (they didn't all come back), and we have capped the climax by endorsing the Covenant. It was a dastardly thing to do. And now we rouch down in our little neck of the woods and hope hatt Mr. Lodge and Mr. Borah and Hiram won't hear about it. And if they do — what will Hiram say, Hiram with his calm temperament and his nobly restrained speech? What will he say?"

What would Mr. Knowland have said? Or Mr. McCarran? That doubtful "Americanism" did not die with the victory of Lodge and Borah over the Covenant and over the opinions of men like Thomas Wolfe.

Wolfe On Autumn

After reading the Wolfe of The Tar Heel days, we placed the volume of newspapers back in the file, and picked up a sample of Thomas Wolfe's later writings, "Of Time And The River," in which he was not concerned with crowded rooms or Hiram Johnson, but a subject on which he became, not long after leaving Chapel Hill, a poet: Here is Wolfe as Author Wolfe, on autumn, the season now two days old in our town:

"There is a smell of burning in small towns in the afternoon, and men with buckles on their arms raking leaves in yards, as boys come by with straps strung across their shoulders. The oak leaves, big and brown, are bedded deep in yard and gutter: They make deep wadings for children in the streets. The fire will snap and crackle like a whip, sharp acrid smoke will sting the eyes, in mown fields the little vipers of the flame eat past the black, course edges of burned stubble like a line of locusts. Fire drives a thorn of memory in the heart.

"The blade of grass, a forest of small spears of ice, is thawed by noon: Summer is over, but the sun is warm again, and there are days throughout the land of gold and russet. But summer is dead and gone, the earth is waiting, suspense and ecstasy are gnawing at the hearts of men, the brooding prescience of frost is there. The sun flames red and bloody as it sets, there are old red gluntings on the battered pail, the great barn gets the ancient light as the boy slops homeward with warm foaming milk. Great shadows lengthen in the fields, the old red light dies swiftly and the sunlight barking of the hounds is faint and far and full of frost: There are shrewd whistles to the dogs and frost and silence — this is all. Wind stirs and scuffs and rattles in the old brow leaves, and through the night the great oak leaves keep falling."

:Barclay, Wade, Become Radio Luminaries

The medium of radio has finally come into its own. Radio announcers thaught they had reached the millenium some 15 years ago when the National Press Club officially recognized radio newscasters bona fide members of the "press corp," as it is called.

But it was on a recent date that the wireless was conceded full maturity, was recognized as an influencing medium, and most importantly, was recognized as a convenient means of turning electricity into gold.

This recognition reached flower when Coach George Barclay of the Carolina football team, with the full approval and benign best wishes of the Carolina Athletic Association, became a Radio Personality. Barclay will be teamed with a pioneer in this exciting field of informing the public, Jake Wade, sports publicist for the University, and a recognized member of the "corp" and a Radio Personality for seemingly decades.

They are not filling in for Laurel and Hardy as has been suggested. No, these two men will go out on a network of 44 licensed deseminators of static in a new sports show. Their qualifications are unquestioned.

And in an ostentatious show of virtuosity, the athletic department has also recognized a comparative infant in the field of public enlightenment, the Powerful Picture tube, or Television. Whether this progressive move is to make up for past conservatism or because it is recognized that though TV is young, it sure is rich, is not a point. Attempts are being made to make not only Coach Barclay a TV Personality, but also the whole Carolina team. In this case Barclay will play a supporting role on the sidelines taking the spotlight only when he throws his hat.

GEORGE BARCLAY
Laurel . . .

Seriously speaking, while there seems to be less actual radio and TV coverage of Carolina than there has been in the past, what coverage there will be should amount to the most constructive and satisfying yet enjoyed. On game Saturdays Ray Reeve and Bill Curry on the Tobacco Sports Network will do a play-by-play going out to about 50 stations, the largest hookup of its type in the area. Then on Sundays Wade will corner Barclay with a tape recorder and find out just what happened on that option play. Also on the show will be the scout who watched the following Saturday's opponent, and strategy of a sort will be discussed. Jake we presume, will talk when no one else has anything to say.

Jake and George will be heard on 44 stations, the time determined by each Individual station. WCHL will carry the games and then follow with the rationale on Wednesday.

JAKE WADE
. . . and Hardy?

The TV, after a slow start which allowed Duke to ace Carolina out, seems to be a certainty. One of the Goldust Twins, Frank Wallman, who is a mogul over at WUNC-TV, will have the Tar Heels' games recorded on film and then shown on the station. Those unfortunates who cannot make it to Kenan will still be able to see the team perform. Duke, however, has sold its filmed games to a state TV group, and is making lots of money for doing nothing. Carolina we hope, can do the same thing.

Back in the good old days it was hard to find a place to put all the radio men. Announcers practiced for weeks so they could get a long run by Charlie Justice down pat, and they were packed in so tight they were using each other's microphones. And since that was back in the dark days before technological improvements and Barclay-Wade, I suppose the equipment was much bulkier and harder to handle.

Unfortunately, Carolina lost WPTF this season, a 50,000 watt station in Raleigh that plays music. It was a feather in the press box to have WPTF, an NBC station, droning out the kilowatts, and they weren't too decent about it either—they joined the network carrying the Duke games.

Stengel Gets Two Year Contract With Yanks

Passing Strong As Tar Heels Aim For State

With only two days remaining before the season's opening kickoff, Carolina's football squad divided yesterday's practice session between passing and defensive work, in preparation for the offensive minded North Carolina State eleven.

The Tar Heels are still operating without the services of star left halfback Kenny Keller who severely sprained his ankle last Friday. Trainer Fritz Lutz and Coach George Barclay believe that Keller will be ready for the State contest. However, according to Lutz, "Keller's ankle is coming along slowly." Keller watched yesterday's workout from the sidelines.

The passing of Len Bullock was one of the highlights of the afternoon. Bullock playing with the third team looked sharp and hit his receivers with constant accuracy. Quarterback Marshall Newman, Barclay's starting choice Saturday, and Al Long threw the ball well, too.

After the Navy Field workout, the Tar Heels worked behind the closed gates of Kenan Stadium, placing most of the emphasis on defensive patterns and kicking.

With the exception of Keller, the team is in top-notch shape for the State opener at Kenan Stadium Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The boys are in good shape," Barclay said after the workout. "we're just trying to level off now and let them get a little life back in their legs."

Billiards Team

RALEIGH, Sept. 21. (AP)—North Carolina State College is developing a billiards team and hopes to enter intercollegiate competition on a basis similar to that of football and other sports.

Plans for State's entry into the sport were announced today by the college union, which this week is sponsoring a series of demonstrations and lectures of billiards by Charlie (Pete) Petsron, billiards authority and former world champion.

Stengel "Surprised" He Didn't Beat The Indians

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. — Casey Stengel, surprised that he failed to win a sixth pennant, today signed to manage the New York Yankees for a fourth two-year term through 1956 and promised to rebuild the club.

The grizzled old manager, now 64, will remain the game's highest paid manager at "exceptional money." Neither Stengel nor the Yanks would nail down the exact figures, but it was believed his basic salary is $75,000 a year with a profit sharing pension plan and a bonus edging the figure close to $95,000. Stengel had managed the Yanks to five pennants since 1949 until beaten by Cleveland this year.

Although the Yanks won more than 100 games in its second place finish to the Indians, Stengel left no doubt many changes will be made.

"Our farm system isn't dead," he said at a press conference. "We came up with Bob Grim and Bill Skowron this year and we may have two more next year.

"We've got to fix our hitting and our pitching. When you get a setback you have to rebuild. Anybody interested in any of the New York Yankees can get in touch with Mr. Weiss, General Manager George Weiss by phone. With the exception of Yogi Berra and Mickey Mantle I'd listen to talk about any others."

In the next breath, Stengel was talking about his three solid pitchers—Bob Grim, Whitey Ford and Tommy Byrne. "You can't tell, Harry Byrd might be better next year," he added. "You ask me what I am going to do first? Well, you fellows ought to know. You've been writing all year that my pitching was lousy.

"Well, they finally did catch up with us. After five years, I found out I forgot to win 140 games. I've got to find some way to catch Cleveland and so do six other clubs."

Remembering that Stengel said recently he ought to be fired if he didn't win the pennant, a writer asked Casey if he still felt the same way.

"By God, I'm surprised I lost it," he said. "I didn't expect to lose it until we left Cleveland."

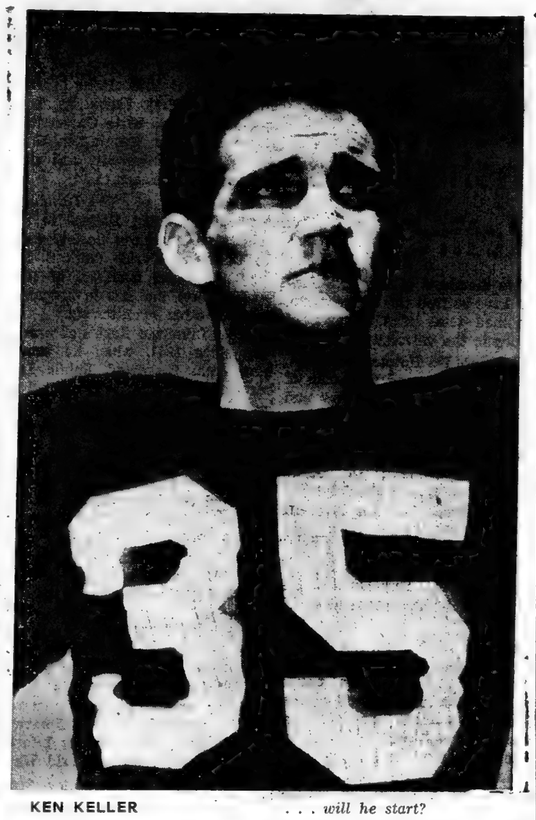
UNC Pits Defense Against State

Revamped Line To Play Heavy Part In Battle



Deficiencies on defense were big contributing factors in Carolina's loss of six games while winning four last season, and Coach George Barclay looks for his 1954 team to be sharply impoved in that department.

He stands to find out Saturday when the N. C. State College Wolfpack invades Chapel Hill for the season's opener. The Wolfpack, with its new "multiple offense" under Coach Earle Edwards, showed last week against Virginia Tech that it had a fine offense. The Tar Heels will have to be good defensively to keep their long winning streak over the Wolves.

State's fine fullback, Don Langston, may not be able to play against the Tar Heels as the result of a knee injury sustained against Viginia Tech but the other State "cripples" likely will be ready. State has numerous other backfield threats, including sophomore halfback George Marinkof, a dangerous operative in any game, and its attack, with the shift from one formation to another, will be something the Tar Heels have never faced.

Every team except Washington and Lee scored on the Tar Heels last year. The Tar Heels faulted on many occasions on defense, especially against passing. This year they have a revamped line which is believed to be superior to its predecessor, on both offense and defense, and there is hope that the secondary has improved, especially the line backing.

The Tar Heels have been working hard this week in perfecting defenses against the tricky State attack. More emphasis has been laid on defense than offense as the team has indicated in scrimmages that its offense is well prepared. With Marshall Newman greatly improved at quarterback and with his top understudy, Albert Long, also apparently ready, the Tar Heels have excellent runners in Keller, Connie Gravitte, Larry Parker, Don Klochak and Larry McMullen, to mention a few.

KEN KELLER
. . . will he start?

Saturday's game will be in celebration of Greater University Day with many colorful features planned, in addition to the game itself. Andy Griffith, the famous night club entertainer, will give his "What it was, was football" routine just before the kickoff. Griffith, a North Carolina graduate, will be in the stadium which inspired that bit of comedy which sold more than half a million records.

West Rejoins State College For Practice

West, who suffered a hip injury in Saturday's Virginia Tech game, was released from the college infirmary today and took part in a passing exercise in full equipment.

The squad worked on offensive and defensive maneuvers against the State freshmen, who open their season against Clemson Friday night in Riddick Stadium.

The punting of halfback John Zubaty of Blairsville, Pa., was a highlight of the drill. Also in the first team backfield were sophomores Billy Franklin, Harrison Makeever and George Marinkov.

Dr. Jordan Speaks On Study Tonight

Dr. A. M. Jordan, Professor of Education, will speak on the topic, "How to Improve Your Study Methods" tonight at 7 o'clock in Lenoir Hall.

The meeting is particularly for freshmen, though others are welcome. Dr. Jordan will deal with specific methods of studying Social Science, Language, Mathematics, etc., and will be prepared to answer questions from the audience.

The meeting will be held in the 2nd floor front dining room of Lenoir Hall. Those who wish may go through the cafeteria line about 6 p.m., carry their food-trays upstairs and eat with the goup. Dr. Jordan will be present for the supper. Afte the meal, Dr. Jordan will speak, followed by a question period.

Dr. Jordan, a UNC professor in Educational Psychology, has written a book on "How to Study", published by Christopher Publishing Company. Among his other writings are: "Measurement in Education", published by McGraw-Hill, about testing and construction of tests; and "Educational Phychology" published by Henry Holt. The latter book is in its 3rd edition, and has been printed in Japanese.

Gary Nichols, chairman of the "How to Study" Committee of the YMCA Freshman Fellowship, which is sponsoring this meeting, said in making the announcement, "This meeting is for all those who are interested in learning better study habits and techniques. We hope a large number of students can come."

Five UNC Instructors Retired

Five members of the UNC faculty have retired this year with a combined total of 119 years of service to the university.

There are Dr. Howard W. Odum, Kenan Professor and Chairman of the Department of Sociology and anthropology, after 35 years here; Prof. Edward James Woodhouse, after 29 years in the Political Science Department; Dr. Susan Grey Akers, Dean of the School of Library Science, here for 23 years; Dr. Daniel Houston Buchanan, after 19 years in the School of Business Administration; and Charles Everett Rush, Director of Libraries, who has been here 13 years.

A native of Georgia, Dr. Odum's contributions to humanity have been of many kinds—in public welfare, in community and regional development, in race relations, in research and publication, in sociological theory, in teaching, and in animal husbandry. In recognition of his distinguished faculty service to the state and nation he was awarded the O. Max Gardner Award in 1953.

In 1920 he founded the University Department of Sociology—later expanded to include anthropology, which now has a nationwide reputation for excellence.

One of the most popular teachers at UNC, Professor Woodhouse has taught a large number of courses, including U.S. history, some economics, and in the Political Science Department courses in city, county, state, and American government. His lectures have not been limited to classrooms, but have also been held under the trees, at Danziger's at the Coffee Shop, over tea at home and anywhere else quiet enough for the human voice to be heard—on any subject related to the efforts of people to govern themselves.

For three consecutive years he was voted King of Student-Faculty Day. Recently a handsome portrait of him was presented by friends and admirers to the Graham Memorial Student Union.

Since 1931 Dr. Akers had been director of the School of Library Science at UNC and dean since 1942.

In 1950-51 she was American Consultant, Library Science Workshop, Civil Information and Education Section, Department of the Army of the U.S.A., Tokyo, Japan. She is author of "Simple Library Cataloging," now is its fourth edition. The first edition was translated into Chinese in 1929 and the third into Japanese in 1951. She is also a contributor to library periods.

Dr. Buchanan has been teaching social science, economic history, economic theory, and international economic relations at the University here since 1935. Prior to that he taught at Keiio University, Tokyo, Japan, Ohio State University, Harvard, George Washington University, Fisk University, and the University of Chicago.

He is author of "The Development of Capitalist Enterprise in India" and American Society and the Changing World" (with C. H. Pegg and other members of the UNC faculty), and has in preparation two other manuscripts.

Under Librarian Rush's stewardship since 1941, when he came here from Cleveland Public Library, the UNC library's book holdings have nearly doubled, from 386,390 volumes to more than 661,377 now.

He guided and directed the library's first addition, dedicated in 1952, which more than doubled physical facilities and which placed the library at the forefront in the southeast in facilities for research, special investigation and creative scholarship. He organized the appeal to two legislatures in winning $1,615,000 in appropriations for the enlarged building and stimulated a large number of exceptional gifts and bequests.

He supervised the development of the "Friends of the Library" and organized the Library Information Center during World War II.

UNC Grad, Dr. Kelly E. Bennett Named NC Pharmacist Of Year

Kelly Edmond Bennett, now serving his 14th year as mayor of Bryson City, has been designated as North Carolina's "Pharmacist of the Year." He will receive the annual "Mortar and Pestle Award" of the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Assn. at a banquet in his honor at Bryson City next Tuesday.

W. L. West of Roseboro, president of the state association will preside at the dinner, and principal speakers will be W. A. Ward of Swannanoa, past president; R. C. Sisk of Asheville, president of the Western North Carolina Drug Club; and S. W. Black, president of the Bryson City Bank.

A pharmacist, the son of a pharmacist, with a daughter licensed to practice pharmacy in the state, Dr. Bennett was born in Bryson City Feb. 8, 1890, and graduated from the University of North Carolina Pharmacy School in 1912. He was licensed as a pharmacist and became a member of the state association the same year.

Currently serving as chairman of th State Parks, Parkway and Forest Development Commission, he has been described as a "one-man chamber of commerce for his mountain region."

ganization to go into executive session so long as they do not violate this right by using it to withhold from the student body information which it has a right to know."

The practice of holding executive sessions, he said, "is a practice and a right held by our national and state governments" and that "it is also a practice that we should respect and protect on campus."

Creasy met yesterday with IFC and student government officials to "talk over" the controversy. He declined to comment on the meeting.

Kuralt said he agreed with the President "that executive sessions are occasionally useful to organizations."

Not Secret Group

Said Isaacson, "The IFC is not a secret organization and does not hold secret meetings." He said that "it is an organ of student government and should have some form of coverage by the press so that information which is interesting and concerns students will reach them."

"I do not know whether executive sessions is the answer to this problem," he continued, "However, I can see no reason why an attempt cannot be made to solve this problem for the good of everybody concerned, and this definitely includes the entire student body," he said.

Conceal Actions

Kuralt had said that "The Daily Tar Heel is opposed to secret meetings of regularly constituted organizations within student government" and that it does not "believe that branches of student government have the right to conceal their actions from the student body by denying the newspaper entrance to their meetings."

The IFC Monday voted to refuse The Daily Tar Heel permission to sit in on its meetings for the purpose of reporting proceedings to the student body.

The IFC will hold a special meeting tonight to discuss further the matter of coed visiting in fraternity houses. Asked whether the meeting would discuss further whether to allow the paper to cover subsequent sessions, Isaacson said that it was not on the agenda but that "I would not rule it out of order if it came up."

There will be a meeting tonight of all fraternity intramural managers in room 301-A, Woollen Gymnasium at seven o'clock.

I WAS AWARDED A RIBBON AND PROMPTLY PUT IT IN MY TYPEWRITER

First of all—how come?

How do I come to be writing a column for Philip Morris in your campus newspaper?

I'll tell you how come:

It all began on a summer night. The air was warm, the sky was full of stars, and I sat in a cane-bottomed chair on my verandah, peaceful and serene, smoking a cigarette, humming the largo from Death and Transfiguration, and worming my dog.

Into this idyllic scene came a stranger—a tall, clean limbed stranger, crinkly-eyed and crooked-grinned, loose and lank. "How do you do," he said. "My name is Loose Lank and I am with the Philip Morris people."

"Enchanted," I said. "Take off your homburg and sit down." I clapped my hands. "Charles!" I called. "Another chair for Mr. Lank."

Obediently my dog trotted away and returned directly with a fan-back chair of Malayan rattan. He is the smartest dog in our block.

"I'm sorry I don't have a Morris chair," I said to Mr. Lank. "That would be rather more appropriate—you being with Philip Morris and all."

Well, sir, we had many a laugh and cheer over my little witticism. When we had finished laughing and cheering, we wiped our eyes and Mr. Lank pulled out a fresh package of Philip Morris. He yanked the tape and the pack sprang open with a fetching little snap.

"Did you hear that fetching little snap?" asked Mr. Lank.

"Yes," I said, for I did.

"Cigarette?" he said.

"Thank you," I said.

We puffed contentedly for three or four hours. Then Mr. Lank said, "I suppose you're wondering why I'm here."

"Well," I replied, my old eyes twinkling, "I'll wager you didn't come to read my meter."

You can imagine how we howled at that one!

"That's a doozy!" cried Mr. Lank, giggling wildly. "I must remember to tell it to Alice when I get home."

"Your wife?" I said.

"My father," he said.

"Oh," I said.

"Well," he said, "let's get down to business . . . How would you like to write a campus column for Philip Morris?"

"For money?" I said.

"Yes," he said.

"My hand, sir," I said and clasped his. Warmly he returned the pressure, and soft smiles played on our lips, and our eyes were bright with the hint of tears, and we were silent, not trusting ourselves to speak.

"Cigarette?" he said at length.

I nodded.

We lit up and puffed contentedly for eight or ten hours. "I understand you've made quite a study of college students," said Mr. Lank.

"Yes," I said, blushing modestly. "I have been collecting them for years. I have over four thousand students in my basement right now."

"In mint condition?" he said incredulously.

"Students don't come in mint condition," I explained. "They go to great expense to acquire the 'beat-up look.'"

"How interesting," he said. "Tell me something more about them—their feeding habits, for example."

"They are omnivores of prodigious appetite," I said. "It is wise not to leave food about when they are present. Their favorite food is a dish called the Varsity Gasser—one scoop raspberry ice, one scoop raw hamburger, leechee nuts and maple syrup."

"Fascinating," said Mr. Lank. "And what are students interested in chiefly?"

"Each other," I replied. "Boy students are interested in girl students, and girl students are interested in boy students."

"This seems to me an admirable arrangement," said Mr. Lank. "But is it true even in these parlous days of worldwide tension and dreadful armaments?"

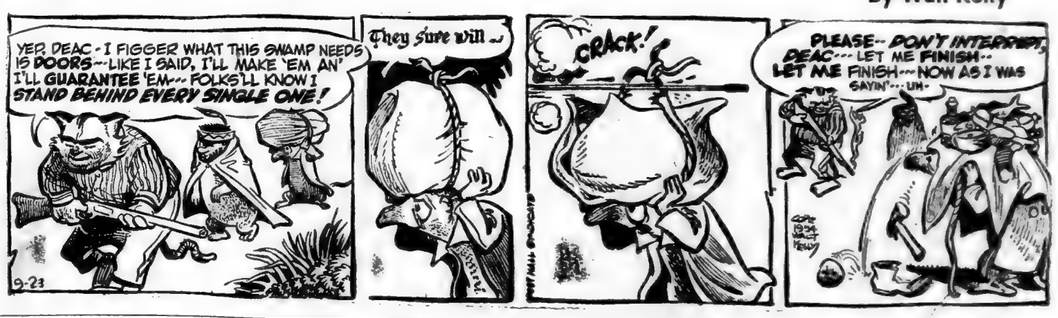
"It is always true," I said. "It isn't that college students don't know what's going on in the world. They know all too well. They're perfectly aware of the number of lumps waiting for them . . . But meanwhile the limbs are springy and the juices run strong and time is fleeting."

"What will you write about in your column?" asked Mr. Lank.

"About boys and girls," I said. "About fraternities and sororities and dormitories and boarding houses and dances and sleighrides and hayrides and cutting classes and going to classes and cramming for exams and campus politics and the profits of bookstores and convertibles and BMOCs and BWOCs and professors who write new texts every year and the world's slowest humans—the page boys at the library."

"And will you say a pleasant word about Philip Morris from time to time?" asked Mr. Lank.

"Sir," I replied, "I can think of no other kind of word to say about Philip Morris."



We shook hands again then, and smiled bravely. Then he was gone—a tall silhouette moving erectly into the setting sun. "Farewell, good tobacconist!" I cried after him. "Aloha, aloha!"

And turned with a will to my typewriter.

Coeds And Imports Will Help Fill Social Rooms On Game Weekends

Muntzing Warns Men's Dormitories As Coed Visiting Weekend Nears

Interdormitory Council President Manning Muntzing warned a meeting of dormitory advisors that "We've got to be on our toes" because if the recent coed visiting agreement with men's dormitories this weekend "goes off right we can expect visiting on other game days to follow."

(The visiting pact, drawn up earlier this week, provides that coeds and imports may visit men's dorm social rooms on home football weekends one hour before and two hours after each game. The agreement was effected by administration-IDC conferences.)

Affairs office Ray Jefferies asked Affairs office Ray Jeffries asked the dorm advisors to "act as hosts during the visiting hours, which are from noon to 1:30 and from 4 to 6" tomorrow. He added that there was no worry about powder rooms for coed visitors at the present time, but that if a need arose for such facilities, the group would make further considerations.

Opinion

A rapid poll of all dormitories on the campus, both men's and women's, showed general approval of the visiting agreement. Results of the poll are shown below. Reporters spoke to only one person at each dormitory.

Men's Dorms

Alexander—"Personally I think it's a good idea, because the freshmen know exactly when they can or cannot bring friends in. It's embarrassing to keep a date or mother waiting in the car."

Aycock—"If you can keep the guys that don't have dates quiet and presentable, it's fine."

Battle—"I think it should be allowed at any time during the weekend except late at night, in the social rooms of course."

Cobb—"Doggone, I like it myself, because it gives them a chance to meet people, if the other guys will keep the noise down and co-operate."

Conner—"It doesn't matter one way or the other."

Everett—"I should think so if the boys keep presentable, but then that could be supervised by the dorm advisors."

Graham—"Heck, I'm all for it."

Grimes—"Being a frat man, I wasn't interested, but I think it's a darn good idea. It's a step in the right direction."

Joyner—"I think it's one of the best things that's happened around here recently."

Manley—"I think it's a good idea."

Old East—"I think it's okay myself."

Pettigrew—"I don't think there's much to it myself."

Stacy—"I think it's a good thing. We have a good social room so people might as well use it."

Steele—"It's a nice thing if it's run properly."

IFC Votes To Accept Drink Plan

The InterFraternity Council, in a called meeting last night, voted unanimously to accept Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver's proposed fraternity visiting agreement .

Word o fthe meeting and the decision came to The Daily Tar Heel by an unimpeachable source, present at the meeting. IFC President Henry Issacson, questioned by telephone, after the meeting, verified the source's report.

Dean Weavrr's proposal, in the form of a letter to student government and fraternity leaders, was issued a week from last Wednesday. In it, he stated the three conditions of his plan:

(1) There shall be certani hours for women visitors in fraternity houses;

(2) There shall be no drinking "within or on the premises . . . while women visitors are present," and

(3) Students shall accept the responsibility for upholding the policy.

In an IFC meeting last Monday, from which a Daily Tar Heel reporter was barred, the Interfraternity Council 'considered' Weaver's proposal. According to reputable sources, the group referred the matter back to individual fraternities at their chapter meetings Wednesday night and called for the special meeting last night.

Frosh Plan Averett Trip

Last Sunday a delegation from Averett girl's college was entertained by members of the Freshman Fellowship of the YMCA. The reception included a Planetarium show, followed by a social hour at Graham Memorial.

As the girls embarked again for Averett College, Mrs. Phyllis Marshall, dean of students, offered a standing invitation for all freshmen to attend the Averett College dance on Saturday, Oct. 2.

The following Monday, the Freshman Fellowship Steering Committee elected a Deputations Committee to take care of the plans for this dance. This committee was composed of Mitchell Borden, Joe Clapp and Stewart Colson. It was decided that the deputations committee, plus Jerry Mayo, chairman of the steering committee, Bob Leonard, chairman of the programs committee and Jim Turner, steering committee advisor, would go to Averett College today to help plan the dance. Upon their return, they will have all the information about the dance.

'Unethical' Contract Draws Discussion In Legislature

Washers, TV's Will Be Ready In Few Weeks

The two questions of an "unethical" action by last spring's Publication Board and three dormant washing machines in women's dorms kicked off the Legislature last night to a quiet, but controversial, start.

The Publication Board issue arose when a University Party legislator, Max Chron, questioned Jim Turner, Student Party floor-leader and chairman of the board, about the Yackety-Yack printing contract negotiated last spring.

Turner said that even though a Northern firm gave a low bid, the contract was given to the previous printer of the annual—after the old printer was shown the low bid and agreed to equal it.

"Garamond Press of Baltimore offered us a price that was $2,500 lower than our former printer, Lassister Press. But at the insistence of the old Yack editor, we told Lassister the price of the competitor's bid," Turner said.

"This was considered by many as an unethical thing. I put it before the board. The board voted that it was ethical and gave the contract to the old printer, Lassister," he added.

Washers

The question of three new washing machines in Smith, McIver and Spencer Dorms that can't be operated until coin boxes are installed came up as Manning Muntzing (SP) was giving the report of the Social Improvements Committee. Muntzing's group was responsible for purchasing the washing machines and 15 television sets for other dorms.

Muntzing reported that the summer school student government was told to take care of the coin

The University's Big Day:

Final CU Plans Announced

Final plans have been announced for Consolidated University Day tomorrow, when students from the Greater University of North Carolina's three branches will gather in Chapel Hill.

A Consolidated University Student Council meeting, a luncheon and the annual Carolina-State football game will highlight the day's activities, according to CU Day chairman Burt Veazey, UNC student from Raleigh.

In addition to an expected 3,000 State students who will accompany their football team to Kenan Stadium, approximately 35 busloads of WC students are expected to arrive in the early afternoon. Special sections on both the UNC and State sides of Kenan Stadium have ben reserved for the girls.

Student Council Meeting

Consolidated University Day's first big event will be the Student Council meeting, scheduled for 10 a. m., with Council President Mary Owens Bell, WC student from Fayetteville, presiding .

Luncheon

At noon the Council members will be among guests at a luncheon in Morehead Planetarium Building, at which President Gordon Gray will speak. Others attending will be Gov. William B. Umstead, members of the State Legislature and Trustees of the Consolidated University.

CU Queen

UNC, State and WC finalists for the title of Miss CU Day will be judged tomorrow at a closed meeting, and the winner will be announced at the football game by N. C. Secretary of State Thad Eure.

State College yesterday announced its candidate for the title, 19-year-old Miss Marilyn Evelyn Collins, sophomore in textiles at State. The pretty brunette was appointed by State student body President Lloyd "Doc" Cheek.

Woman's College entrants in the competition are Misses Jo Ann Beasley, Salisbury; Vesla Johannasen, Norway; Carol Epstein, Baltimore, Md.; Clarajo Lovette, Asheboro, and Nancy Childress, Washington, D. C.

Three coeds will represent Carolina in the contest. Misses Bobbie Lee Moretz, Barbara Stone and Martha Crowell will compete for the title.

"Deacon" Andy Griffith, UNC alumnus and well-known entertainer, will open the afternoon festivities in Kenan Stadium with a pregame rendition of his "What It Was, Was Football" routine, a hit recording last spring.

Kickoff time for the game is at 2 p. m., with acrowd of some 25,000 spectators expected. The N. C. State Marching Band will present an exhibition at the half.

Halftime activities will include an official welcome from President Gray, and crowning of the Consolidated University Day Queen by Secretary-of-State Eure.

Post-game entertainment has been planned, with a reception at which CU students will meet the President, chancellors and deans of the three institutions. The reception will be held at 5 p. m. in front of Graham Memorial.

Tickets for the Consolidated University day dance which will be held from 8:30 until 11:30 Saturday night, will go on sale today in Y-Court.

The tickets will be sold by the Order of the Grail from 9 o'clock this morning until 1 p. m. Couples will be admitted for 75 cents stag girls for free and stag men for one dollar.

Pep Rally Here Tonight

The South Building bell will ring for 15 minutes—from 7 until 7:15—summoning students from their desks and the Arboretum for the rally, the first of the year.

Through cooperation of radio station WPTF, the rally will be transcribed for presentation on the air from 8:30 to 9 o'clock tonight. WPTF, which broadcast the rally last year, will lead off its program with a recording from State, switch to Chapel Hill, back to State and so on until 9 o'clock.

Head Cheerleader Jim Fountain and the University Club said yesterday they "wish to thank" the Pan-Hellenic Council for cooperation in changing rushing hours and allowing coeds to attend the rally, along with station WPTF for its cooperation "without which the broadcast would not have been possible."

'Sold On The University Community . . .'

Dr. Andrew Horn 'Didn't Hesitate' In Accepting Job

By ROBERT W. MADRY
Director, UNC News Bureau

Had Andrew H. Horn not soldiered at Camp Butner during World War II, he would probably not be the new librarian at the University today.

It was during the several months that he was stationed at Butner as a medical technician that he came to Chapel Hill for several visits, including tours of the University's big Library.

"I was so thoroughly sold on the University community during those visits that I didn't hesitate about accepting he job here when the offer came last spring," said Dr. Horn, who arrived recently to assume his duties as director of libraries and chairman of the library division of the University. He succeeds Charles E. Rush, who recently retired.

Dr. Horn comes from the University of California at Los Angeles, where he has been associate librarian for the last two years. Prior to that he was head of special collections and assistant librarian.

"The opportunity here appealed to me strongly," he explained. "I had known for a long time that the University not only had one of the best university libraries in the South, but one of the foremost in the nation. And the Friends of the Library (the organization that gives much voluntary support) is regarded as tops among librarians everywhere," the new librarian commented.

Dr. Horn, who has just passed his 40th birthday and looks even younger, looks like the man who can do a first-rate job. At first glance you would take him for a first-class salesman, rather than a scholar.

He has an easy, friendly approach, a warm smile, and gives the impression that he is eager to "learn the ropes" before launching upon any of his pet projects.

He wanted to know, for instance, if he should feel free to talk for publication with any newspaperman coming along or if he would have to clear through the University News Bureau, as was accustomed at UCLA.

When informed that the University's press department made no effort to impose censorship or to monopolize news distribution, he seemed seemed agreeably surprised. "At any rate, I'll try to give all the newspapers an even break when important announcements are to be released," he remarked.

Dr. Horn is a slender man, standing five feet 10 and weighing 160 pounds, has blond hair and plenty of it, blue eyes and regular features.

Library Is Heart

"I know it sounds trite to say so," he remarked, "but we can't get away from the fact that the library is the heart of any university, that a strong library attracts a strong faculty, and a strong faculty attracts good students. It is just another way of saying that if a university has a healthy heart (its library), it is in good condition.

"I think I ought to point out that your library is regarded as the outstanding center in the Southeast for investigation and research," he continued.

Dr. Horn motored to Chapel Hill from California and with him came Mrs. Horn and two cocker spaniels. He feels that he's already identified with the South, for Mrs. Horn (the former Amelia Baier) was born and reared in Baltimore.

He met her while serving on the faculty at Johns Hopkins, when she was attending Teachers College at Hopkins. She did personnel work with the Army in Korea for about a year.

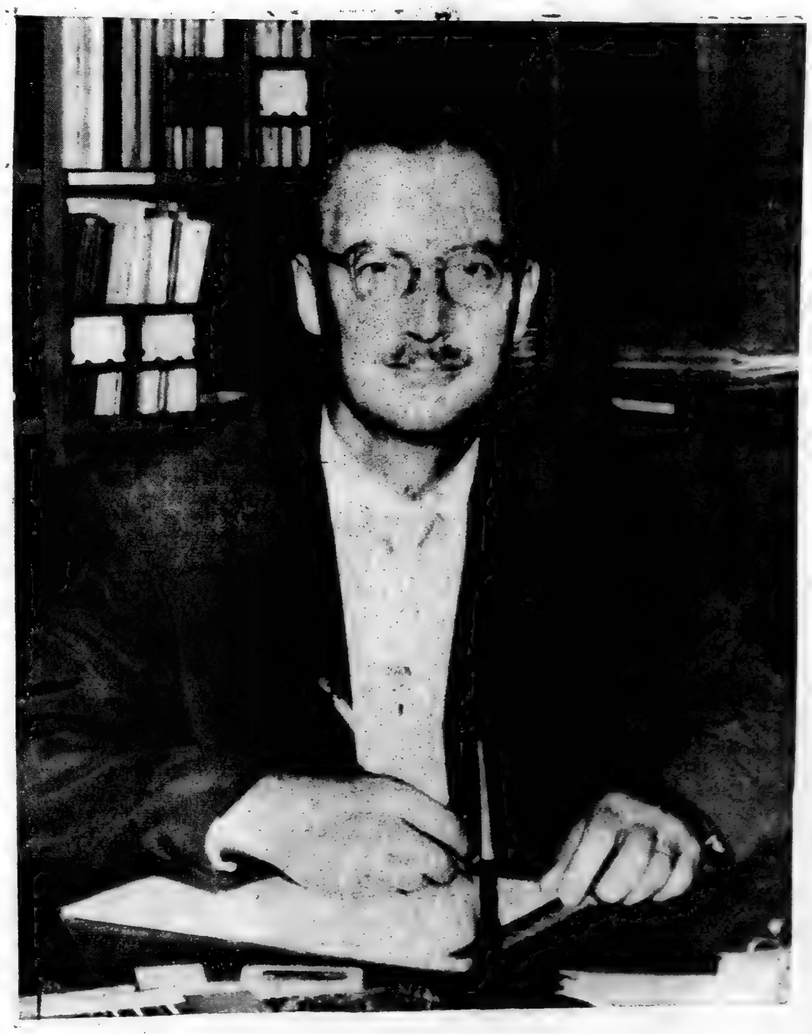
"We find Chapel Hill is one of the most friendly places that we have ever known, although we've just been here a few days," Dr Horn said.

He remarked that he thought it was quite a coincidence that three other contemporaries who took their doctorates at UCLA are now on the faculty at Chapel Hill. They are Dean Norval Neil Luxon, Journalism School; Dr. Harold Bierck, and Dr. Frank Klingberg of the UNC History Department.

Native of Utah

A native of Ogden, Utah, Dr. Horn took his A. B., M. A. and Ph.D. degrees with highest honors in history at the University of California at Los Angeles. He was Hattie Heller Scholar in History there in 1941.

After receiving his Ph.D Dr. Horn spent several years in the Army, receiving the Army Commendation Ribbon. Following the Army interval, he went to Johns Hopkins as assistant professor of history, where his interest in libaries crystallized to the point that he returned West to enter the School of Libraryship at the University of California at Berkeley, receiving his B.L.S degree there in 1948.



UCLA then called him back, and in the succeeding years he rose through the library ranks just as rapidly as he had gone through the History Department.

His first work was in the newly organized Department of Special Collections where his academic experience was put to effective use in the development of archival and manuscript programs and in the development of an acquisitions and use program closely geared to the needs of graduate students and faculty. He was named head of the department in 1950.

He is active in both library and historical societies and writes frequently for both groups. Microfilming and archival development are special interests.

Dr. Horn is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Phi Delta Kappa, Pi Gamma Mu, Blue Key Society, Kappa Alpha Order, Mediaeval Academy of America, American Historical Assoiation, American Association for the Advancement of Science and the American Library Association.

He was employed one year as a technical writer and editor of engineering department publications for Douglas Aircraft Co., Inc., Santa Monica, Calif.

The Detached W. Averill Harriman

W. Averill Harriman will move into the teeth of a stern test when he runs against the Republican candidate, Senator Irving Ives, for the governorship of New York.

But the thoughts of many on this campus will be with Mr. Harriman. Not that he, viewed at a distance, does not have abilities and talents as a statesman that win him supporters; but he gained many friends when he spoke two years ago on this campus under the auspices of the Carolina Forum. His hearers discovered that the aura of aristocracy and austerity—the look of the cracker-dry scholar—that linger about him deceives. They found him a sincere spokesman for his point of view, lively and courageous.

If we have a segment of the noblesse oblige in the U. S., Harriman represents it. His family has behind it distinguished history in both private and public affairs. He is a wealthy man. But his beaconlight is not his pocket book but his public spirit.

Public life, we say, needs more servants who detach their personal backgrounds and motivations from what conscience tells them about the needs of the U. S. It is easy for a man to be a laissez-faire economist and an isolationist in foreign policy if he owns a big business; it is easy for a man to be a democrat and an internationalist if he lives in the shadow of poverty.

But it is difficult for one to forget that he comes from the aristoi or that he has wealth and to formulate his opinions in abrupt detachment from his genesis and circumstances. And that is just what Averill Harriman has done.

We will be following with interest his fortunes in the rowdy Empire State political ring, and we wish him well in November.

Opening The Dormitories

The Inter-Dormitory Council and IDC President Manning Muntzing are to be commended on obtaining for men's dormitories the most liberal visiting agreement we can remember.

Four hours on football Saturdays, of course, isn't much time. But we hope it will turn out to be the first step toward a sensible agreement that can be established after necessary alterations are made in some dormitories. There isn't much doubt that the Puritan who first planned women's dormitories with vast reaches of lobbies and ante-rooms and set no such space aside for men has now been outdated.

It is slowly being realized that men are social creatures, too, whether or not they have the inclination to join a fraternity. And if, when the University finally gets that big, million dollar men's dormitory that's being planned, there's no living room in it, the architect should be strangled with his own blueprint.

Reaction In Column 6

A few columns over to the right, you will notice the second installment of "Reaction Piece," which will be an isolated rock-ribbed fortress of conservatism on this page every Wednesday and Friday this year.

It is to be written at our request by David Mundy, with whom The Daily Tar Heel is seldom in agreement. He is president of the Young Republicans Club on campus, and has the distinction of having expanded that organization's membership rolls to four members from a previous three. In addition, he is beyond question the outstanding campus reactionary and a thorn in the side of both political parties.

Mr. Mundy is not a quiet conservative, either. He is vocal and articulate, and usually completely wrong. We are going to enjoy his column, and we think you will, too.

Carolina Front

A Friend Is Worried About Joe McCarthy

Louis Kraar

"Just what kind of democracy has America given us when you have men like McCarthy?"

Taizo Matsui from Waseda University in Tokyo sat across the table from me in the sandwich shop drinking coffee and looking worried. The summer night had gone by quickly, and before too many hours dawn would be coming up over the foggy Iowa cornfields.

"We owe your country a great deal," he said leaning forward a little. "You gave us the democratic institutions and freedom. These are things we like very much. But not we are wondering when we read about your Sen. McCarthy in our newspapers.

"We're wondering just what kind of democracy is this America has given us when we read about McCarthy. And our people are very worried."

TAIZO AND I had become good friends earlier in the National Student Association Congress we were attending. But the question he raised was a tough one to answer. I tried to tell him that the Senator from Wisconsin wasn't as powerful as he seemed in Japan; my friend was a student of government, and he knew McCarthy was declining in popularity and power. But he was worried.

"You see, in our own country we have had people like this," he said.

"In 1925, a law was passed in Japan that forbade criticizing the government. Then teachers who had certain books were put in jail, and things were very bad.

"It seems to us now that your McCarthy is the same way. I have been very happy here to find out the students here are not for McCarthy," Taizo said, reflecting on his first week in this country.

MANY NIGHTS he talked until dawn with students from this country. He seemed hungry for knowledge about the people who had reshaped the customs of his ancient people. And in our talks, I learned of Japan and the great changes which the West has brought about since the last big war.

"Dating is a new custom that we imported from the United States. It has been very nice because this is something we never had before," Taizo said with a wide grin. He liked to kid and smile, but he spoke of his country with serious intensity.

"I went to a party one of my first nights in this country in San Francisco. And I was quite surprised when the party did not end at 10 or 11 o'clock. It continued until 3 in the morning. This is something we do not have yet in Japan."

A WAITRESS came and refilled our coffee cups, and the Japanese boy whose father is a towel manufacturer told me about the huge University he attended. Later, I saw pictures of the big, modern campus holding 25,000 students.

"We have a great problem in our union of students," he said. "There is a large amount of apathy among the students at the universities and colleges. They all have to work in order to attend school, so they have little time for organizations," Taizo explained.

I told him a little about Carolina, and he seemed quite interested in campus politics.

"The communists are about 100 strong on our campus as a party. It is the only so-called party we have. But the 100 out of 25,000 students are very weak. They have virtually no support on campus," he explained.

I've never could decide what to tell him about McCarthy, except that students were not in favor of what he does.

But later Taizo said, "I would very much like to meet your Sen. McCarthy. I'm going to Washington, and I have asked for a chance to talk with him.

'Hey . . . What About The Man?'

McCarran & The Governor

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — Sen. Pat Mc Carran, the venerable Republican from Nevada, is one of the most blase men in the Senate. He also likes to see politics operate on a self-financing basis. To accomplish this he has a happy faculty for putting state politicians on the federal payroll even though they are doing almost nothing for Uncle Sam, just as long as they are doing something for him in Nevada.

Take the case of Gov. Charles H. Russell of Nevada, now running for re-election. Probably few Nevadans know it, but McCarran kept Russell on the federal payroll while he was running for governor last time and right up until after he was nominated.

What happened was that McCarran at first encouraged Ex-Governor Vail Pittman to run again for governor, then double-crossed him and backed Russell. He followed this up by putting Russell on the Senate ECA watchdog committee, which just happens to be the only committee whose vouchers are not audited by the General Accounting Office, a little loophole arranged by Sen. Styles Bridges of New Hampshire when he was chairman of the committee during the 80th Congress. The loophole, incidentally, permitted Bridges to send Ex-Sen. Worth Clark of Idaho on a trip to the orient to report on aid for Chiang Kai-Shek without an OK from either Congress or the State Department.

In any case, McCarran happily took advantage of the loophole and paid Russell $860.85 per month as a so-called committee consultant during the same time he was running for governor.

Russell remained there until June 30, 1950, though nominated for governor on June 1, 1950.

On Dec. 13, 1950—well after Russell's election—he was still drawing expenses, though the vouchers claimed these expenses covered his earlier service with the committee. Since the General Accounting Office could not audit the vouchers, taxpayers will have to take McCarran's word for it. He signed the vouchers.

Junket To Switzerland

The vouchers themselves show up a couple interesting items. For example, Russell took a junket at committee expense to Switzerland during the tourist season at the Alpine resorts. This might have been considered committee business, except that the only purpose of the committee was to oversee the Marshall Plan. And Switzerland was the only country in Western Europe that flatly refused to participate in the Marshall Plan.

Another interesting item on Russell's expense account is air transportation to Reno and rental of an automobile during the March 21-April 24, 1950, period. This happens to be about the same time that Russell was campaigning for the gubernatorial nomination.

During this period, Russell collected his full Senate salary, plus an additional $315 for 35 days of personal expenses, plus $150 for renting an automobile for "official business," plus the air transportation home. And it seems highly doubtful that there was much ECA business in Reno during the primary campaign.

DEWEY
. . . Labor turns thumbs down.

Washington Pipeline

Dave Beck, head of the teamsters, paid an interesting call on President Eisenhower after he got back from his recent trip to Europe. He told Ike he had discussed the Red China trip of British Labor Leaders with Herbert Morrison and asked whether the Laborites were now cooperating with the Churchill Conservatives to promote Far East Trade. Morrison denied this, said the timing of the trip was unfortunate. . . . Beck also told Ike that British Atomic energy for peacetime uses was far ahead of the United States, that in a short time they would have an atomic power plant in actual use . . . Eisenhower paid tribute to the work of free trade unions in stopping communism abroad . . . When the venerable, much-loved "Cap" Harding, Democrat, died the other day, the man who sent the biggest wreath to his funeral was his political opponent, GOP Congressman Dick Simpson of Pennsylvania. Each was n charge of re-electing congressmen of opposing political parties, but sincerely respected the other. Harding will be sorely missed on Capitol Hill . . . Governor Dewey's Labor Adviser, Merlyn Pitzele, has advised Dewey that Senator Ives will get heavy A. F. of L. support in the New York race for governor. Other Labor leaders claim that Ives could have defeated The Taft-Hartley Bill had he thrown his weight against it. Marginal Senators followed Ives' lead, however, and voted for this amendment. . . . The depression is so bad in the coal-mining areasof Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Kentucky that unemployed miners are being invited to hire out to hospitals for $2.50 a day, plus food, to serve as "normal controls." This doesn't mean they undergo experimental surgery, but eat the same food as sick people and live under the same conditions.

Correction

Former Vice President Henry Wallace is probably still puzzling over last Tuesday's column. Probably readers are puzzled too. The columhn, which referred to Eisenhower's efforts to study the problems of oakies, arkies and migrant workers, contained this sentence: "Wallace was one of the few government officials who ever tried to migrate across the U.S."

Frankly I was thunderstruck when I saw this line in print. So probably was the Wallace Family. The Ex-Vice President, Ex-Secretary of Agriculture did move from Des Moines, Iowa, to Washington, to join the Roosevelt Cabinet and now lives on a farm north of New York City. But he certainly did not migrate across the United States in the usual sense of the word, and he certainly was no migrant farm hand.

So I looked up the column as I originally wrote it. It read: "Wallace was one of the few government officials who ever tried to do much about the oakies, arkies and itinerant farm hands who migrate across the U. S." What happened was that the teletype operator skipped one line. My apologies.

The Ram Sees

We dropped in on the Interfraternity Council meeting last night to see what was what on the visiting agreement, and we got an interesting insight on just how much work is being done these days to make sure everybody gives the appearance of complying with Dean Weaver's new set of unenforceable drinking rules. The Dean has gone too far, although he doesn't realize it yet. He won't be burned in effigy again this year; there will be no turtle in the Y Court like the one last spring which had its back painted with the slogan "I Hate Fred." None of that will go on, because the boys have found there is an easier way to beat Weaver at his own game: They'll just sort of pretend like he's not there.

Reaction Piece

David Mundy

THE NSA COMMITTEE on freedom of college newspapers may possibly become one of the smartest "blackmail" threats in years. Just let someone criticize a college newspaper now; he will be headlined as one of those damned, fascist, McCarthyite, reactionary (i.e. Republican) enemies of that "great and glorious freedom for which our fathers fought and died," the freedom of speech.

The liberals (and those to the leftward) have entrenched themselves on most college campuses, and are quite unlikely to receive any challenges to their control. Their position is even stronger when the mere existence of such a committee is able to threaten possible critics with unfavorable publicity.

COLUMNIST DREW P. (pronounced as spelled) has been complaining about Sen. McCarthy's income taxes. The Democrats were never able to prove anything wrong with his returns, and apparently Mr. Brownell can't either. (Don't think he wouldn't like to do so.) Columnist Pearson is having very real troubles, though, to the tune of several thousand unpaid tax dollars. Maybe Drew will become an Atlanta resident. He would be safe there, especially since they filled up the unused sewer through which four convicts escaped last week.

INCONSISTENCY OF THE WEEK is the hullabaloo over the IFC executive session. The IFC has either something to hide or something that it doesn't want publicized in the Daily Tar Heel. Sounds like hiding behind the fifth amendment, doesn't it? The same persons who so strongly oppose any change in the fifth amendment are the ones complaining so loudly and capitalizing on the IFC's secret meeting.

The IFC might avoid further trouble by dubbing its private meetings as "Fifth Amendment Sessions."

One party, composed of the "smarter" politicians, generally comes out on top. They use the formula proved so successful by the liberal elements in American politics: Promise the voters anything they might want, social security, pensions, subsidies, or Coke machines, social rooms, coed visiting agreements, and no Saturday classes. Promises are generally filled, since everyone wants to be re-elected. Next year we may even be promised maid service in the dorms. WHOOP! Everyone conveniently forgets, however, that to pay off takes money, studentmoney. This year it took three dollars more than last.

The other party is a bit more staid and conservative, and rolls along apparently unawae of the value of demagogery. Their promises don't have that flair of appeal that garners vote. They have allowed the impression to grow that theirs is a more boss-ridden party than the other. Their members appear to be a bit more mature than those of the other party. A bit more aware that the impulses driving people to seek recognition in petty campus politics should have passed with adolescence. The best way for them to win elections might be to stress something new in campus politics; a cut in student fees, and the elimination of financial support to those activities which attract at most only a few "would be" BMOCs. It is very unlikely, however, that any politician on campus will favor the elimination of any such expenses; it would either eliminate him or a friend from some possible prominence. The latter campus party is unlikely to try any innovations. They are the safest politicians, and the least likely to be elected. Apparently Carolina students like to live dangerously with their politics.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger W'll Coe

THE HORSE was guzzling coffee, and rapidly, at the Scuttlebutt's version of a Parisian sidewalk cafe, when I saw him.

"Neatness and Culture apparently do not mix," he replied to my query anent his speedy dispatch of a king-sized coffee. "It is amazing that with a trash-receptacle close at hand, the eds and coeds leave bits of sandwiches, gobs of paper wrap, pools of spilt milk and soft drinks, and other innumerablia of evidence of Cultured Eating. I gotta hurry, Roger; it is a moot question whether I get my coffee, or the flies and the bees get it."

Despite the motley of factual proof that littered the tables of this al fresco eatery, I thought The Horse had it wrong: a neat, or cultured, mind and neat habits were more often found in accord than in apposition. However, the bees hovering close to one's cup did present an adventure in eating, I had to admit.

"It rivals our Chapel Hill Greek restaurants for excitement," The Horse conceded. "However, if you swallow a bee, that's that and an end to it, not to mention an end to the bee; whereas if you swallow enough of what my estimable Greek friends who operate eateries here in The Hill pass off on you as food, it may be an end to you. Howsoever, it does solve the living problem for the local docs. I bet they owe more income to our restaurants than to any other single contributory factor to human malaise, and I include in this the output of Irish Green Beer for which one dispenser thereof is noted."

Was The Horse suggesting that Greece and grease were synonohlous?

"I will do the punning for this team, Roger," The Horse rebuked me. "But speaking of adventures in eating — one of our local Impressarios de Bite: to keep him completely anonymous, let us say his name is East, and he operates the foodsnappery in The Emblem Club — overheard a valued and cultured snapper say to a friend, 'The next time you eat at The Emblem, be sure to ask for Jacqueline for a waitress. Jacqueline is an adventure in eating.'

"So Mr. Earnest East, as we shall call him, watched Jacqueline take an order from a table of four, the very next meal this friendly and zealous waitress served. All seemed as usual as the customers filled out their order-ticket in pencil, and surrendered it to the girl. Their water-glasses were filled, ashtrays were clean and in place, everything shipshape. Mr. East followed Jacqueline to the kitchen and watched and listened as she called to the chef, with her eyes on the precisely-written order-ticket: 'One o'dah o' Fry Shrimp; one Club Samwich; one Lunch; one Suhloin Steak.' Back went Jacqueline with the four orders, and back went Mr. East to observe.

"'You's de Shrimp,'" Jacqueline cheerfully told a lady who was anything but a shrimp. "'An' de other lady is a Lunch.'"

"'But, I ordered the Fish!'" the unshrimplike lady protested.

"And I ordered the Lime Sherbert Salad Plate,'" the second lady objected.

"Just outa dem," Jacqueline cheerfully misstated the case. "You's de Suhloin an' de odder gen'mun is de Samwich," she informed the startled men at the table, who had ordered Chow Mein and Liver-and-Bacon respectively. "Yo' desserts will follow."

"That," one of the men said caustically, "will be interesting to experience. Thank you."

"The suave Boniface of The Emblem Club followed the cheerful Jacqueline into the kitchen and inspected her order-ticket. . .the which she had so artistically pretended to read from. And he lent an attentive ear while Jacqueline read—or pretended to, for such was the case — directions to the chef from another order. As anybody even so bereft of normal reasoning powers such as you are, Roger, must already have concluded, Jacqueline simply could not read. And Chapel Hill being the considerate community it is, and Mr. East of the Emblem Club being the understanding gentleman he is, Jacqueline continued for some months to be An Adventure In Eating until greener and less literate pursuits summoned her elsewhere."

Well, that could be. At any rate, I'd rather be surprised by Jacqeuline with something that I didn't order, than with a bee, which I also did not order. At least, what Jacqueline brought had stopped moving. I felt sure Scuttlebutters would begin to be neater.

Club Owners Discuss A's

CHICAGO, Sept. 23 (AP)—American League club owners will meet in New York Tuesday to discuss and perhaps act on the expected sale of the Philadelphia Athletics by the Mack family.

League President Will Harridge today announced he had called the meeting to discuss the A's "situation" with Roy Mack, operating head of the club, who is strongly opposed to a sale which would shift its franchise from Philadelphia.

His father, Connie, and bother, Earle, are anxious to sell the A's and get out of baseball.

The Macks have a verbal offer offer from Arnold Johnson of Chicago for the franchise which would be shifted to Kansas City.

Harridge said besides the Johnson bid, he understood there were "other people would like to make an offer for the club."

"The purpose of this meeting," said Harridge, "is to let Roy explain his whole situation. If the need be, the owners then can consider action on a sale and a franchise change."

Harridge stressed that no application for minor league territory, such as Kansas City of the American Assn., could be made until the period of Oct. 1-Dec. 1.

All seven other clubs must approve a new franchise holder, while six of the eight clubs must approve a franchise transfer to another city.

Clark Griffitth of the Washington Senators reportedly has said he would oppose both selling the A's to Johnson and shifting the franchise to Kansas City.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, which quoted Griffith as saying "moving the Philadelphia franchise to Kansas City would unbalance the whole league and add considerably to the burdens of travel," also said an "informal" survey showed the Boston Red Sox and Detroit Tigers would oppose the same franchise shift.

Harridge said Roy Mack was asked to present the A's picture because he was operating head of the club and "we have talked to him on all Philadelphia matters in that capacity."

Harridge said Earle Mack may or may not appear at the meeting, "but he is welcome and so is Johnson, or ohter interested parties."

Sale of the money-troubled Athletics has beenrumored for months and last Aug. 3, Johnson disclosed he had made a "very fair and full offer" for the club.

This is reported to be $4,500,000 for the A's including Connie Mack Stadium, or $2,500,000 without the park.

Carolina Eleven Will Field Heavy Starters; Line Averages Nearly 208, Backs About 190

Ken Keller Is Ready Says Coach Barclay

All the linemen go better than 200 with the exceptions of the starting ends, Will Frye and Dick Starner, each of whom weighs 190. The giants are the two tackles, Roland Perdue at 224 and Jack Maultsby at 222. Overall the line averages a little less than 208 pounds per man.

Three of the backs are in the neighborhood of 190 or better. If Larry Parker starts, the backfield answeing the opening call will average 186. Larry weighs 187, same as quarterback Marshal Newman. Connie Gravitte packs 196 pounds while Ken Keller is down to 175, which is a drop of 10 pounds from last year and has boosted Ken's speed and manueverability.

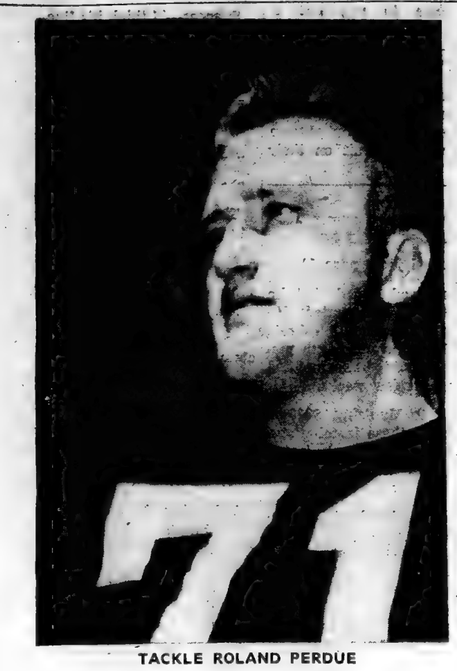
If sophomore Don Klochak average will be boosted to 193 pounds. Don weights 213, but he also has the speed to do the job.

The Tar Heel second string combination is just a shade below men are 200 or better with the the satrters in size. All the line-exception of one end, soph. Larry Muschamp. The heaviest is also a soph, John Bilich, tackle, at 218. The backfield averages 185, with fullback Larry McMullen at 197 and halfback Ed Sutton at 194, the big boys.

All of Coach Barclay's key men should be ready and in good shape for the opener. Halfback Ken Keller, who sustained an ankle sprain in scrimmage last week, will be ready also, says Barclay.

With the exception of fullback Don Langston, State's injured are expected to be ready to play saturday and the Wolfpack will go out to get its first decision over the Tar Heels since 1942. Carolina has a wide edge in the long series with 32 wins against five defeats and six ties, but many of the Tar Heel wins have by the closest of scores.

The game will be in celebration of Greater University Day with students from Woman's guests. The colorful ceremonies College in Greensboro special will include a rendition by Andy Griffith, the famous entertainer, of his "What It Was, Was Football" monologue from the middle of the field, a talk by President Gordon Gray and the crowning of the first Consolidated University Queen.



Probable Starting Lineups:

N. C. STATE		CAROLINA
Lodge	LT	Maultsby
Kapp	LE	Frye
Nardone	LG	Foti
Tonn	C	Kirkman
Szuchan	RG	Koman

Gymnastics Squad Will Lose Only One Letterman From '53

Captain Otis Harsell is the only member of the 1953 squad who will not return. Headed by Co-Captains Pete Brumley and Biff Howard, the team will face an eight-match schedule. Also returning to lead the team is Gordon Hudson, last year's leading scorer who set a Carolina record with 106 points for the season.

Last year's record, 4-3, is expected to be improved by at least one victory. The team dropped matches to Syracuse, Army, and Navy while beating Duke twice, the University of Illinois and Georgia Tech. It also finished second behind Florida State in the Southern Championships.

There is a good chance that in 1954, the team will emerge on top of the southern teams.

Because of a large freshman turnout, efforts are being made to secure a freshman schedule, which if obtained, will be the firs tat Chapel Hill.

The squad:

N. C. State Coach Claims Pack Is Ready For Fight

RALEIGH — Despite the problems of numerous injuries to his small squad, Coach Earle Edwards figures his North Carolina State Wolfpack will give a good account of itself tomorrow against the North Carolina Tar Heels.

Unless some remarkable recovery is made prior to game time State will take the field without the services of three starters, Quarterback Eddie West, Fullback Don Langston and Guard Al D'Angelo, all of whom were injured last week against Virginia Tech.

It is quite possible, however, that West will see action.

But the Wolfpack still has capable performers who'll be ready to go and they could provide the Tar Heels with a busy afternoon. Halfback George Marinkov, the 5-7, 165-pounder from Lebanon, Pa., who scored twice against Virginia Tech, is a sure starter, His 93-yard kickoff return for State's second score was the top dash of last week's game.

Two other topflight halfbacks will be ready to play also. Monte Seehorn, 185-pound Lenoir, N. C. junior, played over three-fourths of last week's scrap and turned in an outstanding job, while John Zubaty, 188-pound junior from Blairsville, Pa., who scored once for State against V.P.I., is also in top condition.

Sophomore Bill Franklin of Farmville, Va., will step into West's shoes at quarterback and although he does not have extensive experience, Franklin is rated an excellent passer.

Sophomore Harrison Makeever of Sanford, N. C. gets the nod at fullback, replacing the injured Don Langston, and Makeever is a rugged performer who may be good for some surprises before the day is over. Rated a good defensive linebacker, Makeever is also a hard-driving runner, capable if going the distance, once he gets moving.

Record Series

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (AP)—The 1954 World Series, to be played in the largest ball parks in the two major leagues with ticket prices at their highest levels, may be worth more than $10,000 to each player on the winning team.

It is almost sure to break all previous records for attendance and gate receipts and the estimated financial figures are astronomical.

Indian Hurlers Will Get Test

All Giant Outfielders Tough Men At Plate

NEW YORK, Sept. 23 (AP)—The touted Cleveland pitching staff might be in for a few rough afternoons if the Giants' outfielders continue to hit in the World Series as they did during the 1954 National League season.

Willie Mays, Don Mueller and Dusty Rhodes all will enter the 51st series, which starts Wednesday at New York's Polo Grounds, batting above .330. Monte Irvin and Bill Taylor are below the .300 mark, but they have distinquished themselves with clutch performances.

There's not too much fault to find with the play of the Indians' outfielders this season, but on the record they don't seem to measure up to the showing of the New Yorkers. Slugging Larry Doby is the Tribe stalwart among the fly-chasers, who also include Al Smith, Dave Philley, Wally Westlake, Dave Pope and Dale Mitchell.

Mays ,returning from a two-year Army hitch, has been phenomenal as the Giants' centerfielder. The "say hey" kid has scintillated both at bat and in the field. Currently he is hitting .346, tops in the National League, and also has belted 41 home runs. His fielding average is .985.

Mueller, who didn't play in the 1951 series against the Yanke because of a broken ankle, will get his chance this year. A "spray hitter," Mueller has collected the most hits in the majors, 203, while compiling a .338 stick mark. His fielding average is .974.

Rhodes and Irvin have alternated in leftfield during most of the latter part of the season with Rhodes swinging against righthanded pitchers and Irvin facing southpaws. Manager Leo Durocher still hasn't indicated whom he will use against Cleveland.

Rhodes has been valuable in pinch hitting roles and has been a consistent batter all season. His average is .344 and he is fielding .984.

Irvin had a terrific series against the Yanks in '51, hitting .458 and he hopes to pick up where he left off. However, he has been erratic this season, hitting .269 and fielding .975.

Irish-Longhorns Top Grid Slate

NEW YORK, Sept. 23. — Pittsburgh vs. Southern California, a game that brings back memories of two great Rose Bowl meetings and a couple of other notable contests in the 1930's, serves only as a tune-up for bigger things in football this week-end.

These once-great teams meet Friday night to open the first weekend of full scale competition in the 1954 college season. Then on Saturday will come such clashes as Notre Dame vs. Texas, Michigan State vs. Iowa, Illinois vs. Penn State, Mississippi vs. Kentucky, Oklahoma vs. Texas Christian and Duke vs. Penn to make the fans forget all about Pitt and USC.

Southern Cal still is regarded as one of the top teams in the Pa after an impressive 39-0 victory over Washington State in last week's opening game. Pitt has some muscular young men who may be very good, but a "suicide" schedule, starting with Southern Cal, Minnesota and Notre Dame in succession won't give them much chance to show their ability.

Although the meeting between Michigan State's Rose Bowl champions and Iowa's upset-minded Hawkeyes was chosen for the national television network this week, the TexasNotre Dame encounter likely will be the game of the week to most fans.

It's Notre Dame's first game under the coaching of Terry Brennan, youthful successor to Frank Leahy.

Some of the other noteworthy games include:

East —

Midwest —

Missouri-Purdue, Nebraska-Minnesota, Indiana-Ohio State, UCLA-Kansas, Iowa State-Northwestern, Marquette-Wisconsin.

South —

Tennessee-Mississippi Stae, Alabama-Louisiana State, Clemson-Georgia, Baylor-Vanderbilt, VMI-George Washington, North Carolina-North Carolina State.

Southwest —

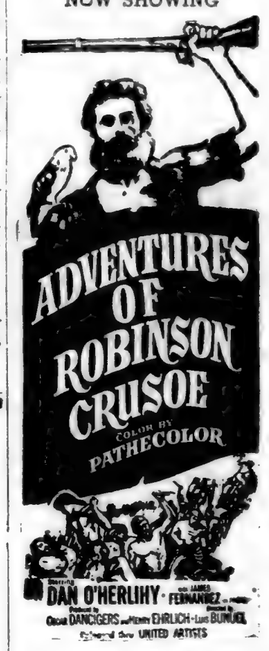
Oklahoma A & M-Texas A & M, Tulsa-Arknsas.

Far West —

Kansas State-Wyoming, Colorado-A & M-Colorado, Arizona-Utah, Michigan-Washington, San Jose State-California, Stanford-Oregon, Idaho-Oregon State.

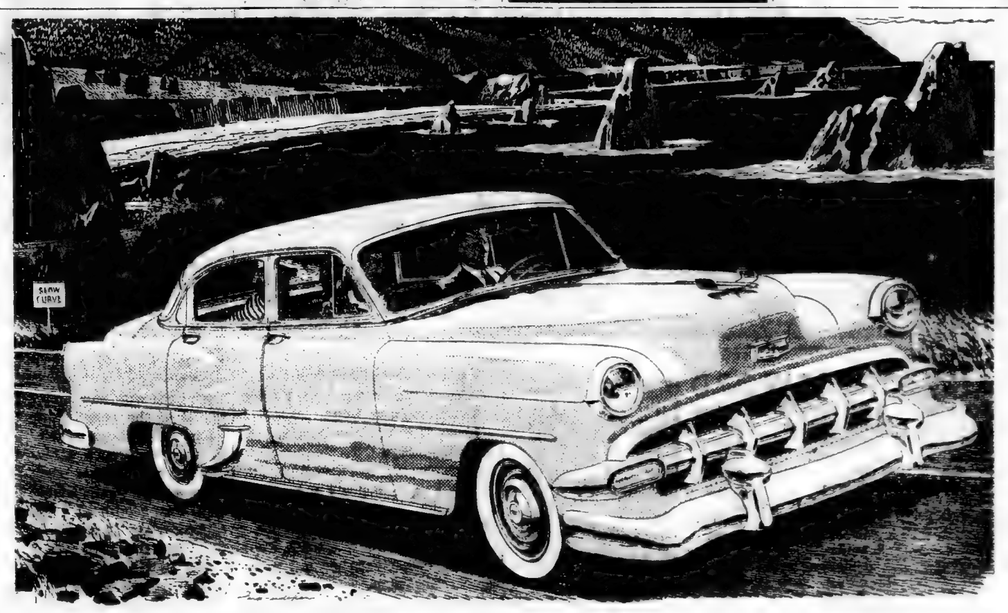
Tar Heels Are In Good Spirits For State Tilt

If spirit has anything to do with it, Carolina's 1954 football debut wil lbe a success.



The Tar Heels ran through their last full length practice yesterday afternoon in preparation for the season's opener against North Carolina State on Saturday at Kenan Stadium. 'The boys are full of spirit and in good shape," Coach George Barclay stated after the workout. "We're ready for State."

Only halfback Kenny Keller remains on the disabled list. Keller suffered a sprained ankle last Friday, but is expected to see action tomorrow. Trainer Fitz Lutz said that Keller's ankle is now improving rapidly and Coach Barclay expects him to see some action. Keller said yesterday, as he watched practice from the sidelines, "The ankle is feeling better."



Most of yesterday's session was devoted to a dummy scrimmage with rifthalf Connie Gravitte playing exceptionally well. "My legs feel great and I'm ready to go," Gravitte said during the workout. Quarterback Marshall Newman looked sharp on the cific Coast Conference, especially pass plays with Gravitte and ends Will Frye and Dick Starner making several nice catches.

Campus Carousel

By Bess Kenfield

The campus carousel is beginning to turn slowly in its orbit once again, and by Saturday night, after the initial meeting of the Carolina eleven with the neighboring Wolfpack, local society should be back to its normal high. The absence of the 1954 graduates, though not entirely replaceable, has been somewhat accounted for by a new selection of imported coeds, and by a class of enthusiastic freshmen (Spero's unprecedented dilemma of two weeks ago will verify this).

The more eager of the UNC socialites were initiated into the 1954-55 season at the annual North Carolina Debutante Ball, an informal gathering of a large percentage of graduate and undergraduate members from the Hill. However, the oncoming week-end will officially mark the opening of another year in the pages of Carolina society. And away we go!

Phi Delt plans a big party Saturday night to celebrate the much-hoped for victory over State. Brothers and dates will assemble at Hartman's Cabin in Durham. Also planning a cabin party for the week-end are the Sigma Nu's.

A buffet dinner and a blanket party at Hogan's-by-the-Lake are on the agenda for the ATO's Saturday celebration. Brothers and dates will be welcoming the returning alumni, who just can't seem to get away from it all. And can you blame them?

Brothers of Lambda Chi from the State chapter will visit the local chapter house this weekend. They will join forces with returning alums for a cabin party Saturday night.

Not to be outdone, the Phi Kap's after recovering from their open house for new coeds, had a practice party Wednesday night in the Hunt Room of the Saddle Club. Seems their goal is perfect party shape for Saturday night's festivities at Chippewa Lodge, somewhere in the wilds of Orange County.

What would a football weekend be without an Ugly Club party? And this one is running true to form. Members of the Philosophical Society and dates will save up their ugliest phrases for Sunday morning and the first party of the new year.

Hogan's will be the scene for APKsi weekend celebration, and Chi Phi's will make headquarters at one of the local cabin spots. Beta's and dates plan a party Saturday night at the Saddle Club, while St. A's will serve buffet supper at the house to prepare for the evening's activities.

As a final party note, the Deke's have done it again Need we say more? !

With the beginning of another year at Carolina comes the chance for all available coeds and gentlemen to find a place for their names among the star-studded columns of this page. A great many have already succeeded in invading the intimacy of these paragraphs; and to the rest of you — the very best of luck !

MBA Meeting Gets Off To Fine Start

The MBA Club got off to a "fine start" on Monday evening when most of the MBA Candidates turned out for the first club meeting of the year, according to Les Riley, president of the club.

Riley led the program with a discussion of the history of the club, its aims and its future plans. Dr. C. H. McGregor, chairman of the Committee on Graduate Studies in Business Administration, and advisor to MBA candidates, traced the evolution of the Master of Business Administration and discussed future plans for the program.

The MBA program has expanded from five candidates in 1952 to 42 in the current semester. In addition a large number of special students are completing course deficiencies prior to entering the program. Candidates include graduates of colleges and universities from the four corners of the United States, and from Manila and Tokyo. There are also three army officers of the Adjutant General's Office, and one naval officer enrolled in the program.

Clergy Wants Disarmament

ASHEVILLE.—Simultaneous, universal military disarmament was urged yesterday by a committee of the Western North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church here.

The report of the committee on world peace released yesterday says universal military training should not replace selective service "as long as the present international crisis exists."

It cites the position taken by the General Conference of the church in 1952 opposing UMT.

"We hold," the report says, "that if we want peace, as united nations we must move where poverty, hunger, and disease are rampant and wipe them out. To remove misery you remove a basis for communism, war and attendant evils. We urge universal simultaneous disarmament of atomic, hydrogen, cobalt bombs; bacteriological, poisonous gases and conventional weapons.

"Only through creative cooperation among all nations, will the highway to world peace be built," the report says.

Dr. John E. Carper, of North Wilkesboro is chairman of the committee.

A proposed statement on public school segregation, due for a vote by the conference this morning, drew fire from the Society for the Preservation of State Government and Racial Integrity.

Harry P. Gamble, president of the Louisiana division of the society released the text of a telegram sent to Bishop Costen J. Harrell and the Rev. Charles Bowles, both of Charlotte.

The telegram questions whether representatives to the annual conference are "authorized by your church policy to express your personal views as pastors and repre sentatives . . . of your churches as the views of your respective congregations without consulting consulting with and having the approval of the membership."

The only action taken thus far by the conference came Wednesday afternoon. At that time, a statement on public school segregation was read and proposed for official adoption by Paul R. Ervin, Charlotte attorney.

The statement discussed implications of the Supreme Court decision against segregation in public schools and offered four resolutions—that sympathy and interest be expressed to public school administrators working on the problem, that "we recognize the obligation of all citizens to obey the laws of the land," that belief be affirmed that the issue must be worked out in the light of "teachings of Jesus Christ," and that the conference statement be made public.

Delaying action came when the Rev. Charles Boels, of Charlotte, suggested the statement had not gone as far as previous declarations by the church at large in 1952 which held segregation had no place in the cchurch.

Annual Space

All organizations and societies desiring space in the 1955 Yackety-Yack should send a representative to the Yack office in the basement of Graham Memorial between 2 and 5 p. m., throughout the week, said Yack Business Manager Tom Spain yesterday. Spain said those failing to make contracts will receive no coverage.

box problem and added that he would look into the matter. He said that installation of 15 TV sets and four UHF converts began yesterday and would be completed within the next few weeks.

According to Muntzing, $949 is left to pay for these installations. "I don't know how much installation will cost," he told the Legislature.

After the meeting he told a reporter that he had tried, without success, to get an estimate. Asked if the $949 would cover installation of the TV sets as well as the washing machines, Muntzing said he wasn't sure. He pointed out that 45 chairs are also to be purchased from the money.

A handful of appropriation requests were introduced, totaling al most $700. Among them are requests for $500 for Graham Memorial to use for repairing and maintaining all student government properties, and $117.47 to pay President Tom Creasy's expenses to last summer's National Student Association President's Conference.

Five legislators were sworn in to replace those who had resigned since last spring. They were Louis Brumfield (SP), Bob Harrington (SP), David Reid (SP), Graham Shanks (UP) and Datt Huntley (UP).

Bills were introduced to expand the number of polling places during campus elections and to set up a summer school activities fee of $1.50 per student per term.

Art Classes

This fall Person Hall Art Gallery is again offering an evening sketch class for people in the community. The class is set up for people with no previous training in Art. It will meet on Wednesday evening, 7 to 9, beginning September 29. The fee including materials is $13. John Allcott is the instructor. At each class meeting some particular approach to drawing and design will be presented. Work will be in charcoal, crayons, pen and ink, and various other materials. As in past years if a student wants to work according to ideas of his own he may do so. The public is cordially invited.

CHAPIN APPOINTED

F. Stuart Chapin, Jr., associate professor in the department of city and regional planning and Research Associate in the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina, has been appointed an advisor to a subcommittee to the National Committee on Urban Transportation.

Local Church Has Nursery

The Community Church of Chapel Hill has announced it will provide nursey service for parents with children under two years old on undaSy morning.

This is being done so that parents may attend services at the church.

Children will be cared for in the church office on the second floor of the YMCA building. Parents desiring the service have been asked to call the office any morning btween 9 and 12 o'clock.

Following is the schedule of the church school for children over two years old: ages two and three, 11 a. m., Mrs. Wettach's day nursery building; ages four and five, Alumni building; ages six to 14, worship with the adult congregation in Hill Music Hall, leaving at 11:30 for group work in the Alumni building.

Sophomore Pictures

Sophomores and law students will be photographed for Yackety-Yack annual pictures today and Monday through Thursday of next week, according to Co-editors Jackie Park and Cornell Wright The editors said students would do well to come early, since last night's line of freshmen, waiting for their pictures to be taken, stretched all the way up Graham Memorial's basement stairs. Required dress is coats and ties for men and dark sweaters and pearls for girls. The pictures will be taken in the basement of GM from 1 to 8 p. m.

Tax Increases? – Umstead

RALEIGH.—Gov. Umstead indicated yesterday he feels that it will be necessary for the 1955 Legislature to make some tax increases if a cut in "essential" State services is voided.

The governor was asked questions about the state's budget situation at his news conference.

In answer to questions the governor reiterated a statement he has made several times that present indications are that the next legislature will be confronted with the choice of either reducing state spending or raising more revenue.

He was asked which would he favor. He answered that he does not yet have sufficient information to answer except to repeat that "I would hate to see the state take a backward step in any of its essential services."

A reporter asked the governor if he thought it would be possible to reduce state spending to the point that the budget wiuld be balanced without reducing "necessary services."

His answer was that "on the face of it, it would hardly appear that you could."

It was the governor's first news conference since the Advisory Budget Commission held hearings on the needs of state agencies for funds to operate during the next two fiscal years. The requests totaled 85 million dollars more for operating expenses than tax experts believe the state will collect from existing taxes during the period.

During the news conference the governor was asked how he feels about a letter from State Democratic Chairman John B. Larkins to heads of the state departments asking that state employes contribute to the Democratic campaign chest.

The governor said he saw nothing improper about Larkins' letter and that he hoped state employes who can afford it will make contributions.

He added, however, that it would be "purely a voluntary proposition" and he would not stand for employes being pressured to make contributions.

Holy Day

High Holy Day Rosh Hashanah religious services will be held at the Hillel House Monday night at 7:45. Services will also be held Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

Bushy Cook Will Be There Today

. . . Since Justice's First Year . . .'

Rameses & Bushy At Stadium Today

By BOB EBERLE

"I don't know how many games I've been to," said Bushy, as he threw a large metal bed frame on a pile of scrap iron, "I've missed a few, but I've been a goin' to those games ever since Justice's first year."

Bushy Cook, the caretaker of Rameses, UNC's beloved ram mascot during the football games, is a tall farmer with a beard that grows long and in all directions. Though he has become as much a tradition around Carolina as Rameses, there is actually very little known about him. It took the combined aid of GM Director Jimmy Wallace, Police Chief Sloan and the athletic department to finally learn that Bushy lives just outside Eflin, and it was later found that to reach Bushy's farm one had to take a road that makes the Northwest Passage seem like a paved super-highway. The fact that Bushy lives so far off the Main path is probably why so few really know much about him, but he is always happy to see any Carolina student who wishes to take the time to go and see him.

Rameses is really bred and cared for at Hogan's Farm, but since 1947 Bushy has been taking the beloved Ram to all the games that he could possibly attend. Bushy got this start in 1946 when he attended his first Carolina football game. A newspaper reporter spotted him sitting in the end-zone ("Best tickets I could get") and thought that it would make a good story. When his picture appeared in the papers the next day he was asked to care for Rameses at the games, and since then he has missed very few games.

Bushy has not always been a resident of Eflin, but was born and raised in Haywood County. For the major part of his life Bushy worked in textile mills, and he has become one of the best men in the operation of a loom. When the war broke out Bushy took his family of seven to Connecticut, where the pay was better, and they all got jobs in the mills up there. With the seven of them working Bushy's family soon made a lot of money, and when the war was over they decided to come back to Carolina and buy a farm. In the meantime Bushy's folks had moved to Eflin where they had purchased a small farm, so Bushy decided to see if he could find some land nearby. After looking around he bought a 69-acre outside Eflin and stocked it with 20 head of cattle.

In spite of all the games that Bushy has attended, he never tires of going, and he is looking forward to watching another season of football from the sidelines as he and Rameses march up and down the length of the field. "I was just over to that there Woman's College ast week, and they all seemed to recognize me. They said that they were coming over for the game, and if Carolina won they were all going to give me a kiss. I guess I'll have to levae quick right after the game 'cause that'll be a heap of women a comin gout of those stands at the end."

With the start of a new season everyone will be looking for Rameses and "the beard," and, as Bushy assured this reporter, he would not fail them. "I'll be down there with those cheerleaders as always, and I'll be pulling for those boys out on the field."

New Pine Room Boasts Pizza, Dancing Room

By BOBBIE ZWAHLEN

Hot dogs, 10c. Juicy hamburgers, 15c. And hot Pizza pie (a nine inch one at that), 75c. Sounds unbelievable, but it's true.

These prices, plus good music and a wonderful atmosphere are just a few of the things that are making the Pine Room in Lenoir Hall one of the most popular places on the campus, since it has been redecorated.

George Prillaman, manager of Lenoir Hall, has announced that the Pine Room has been completely done over.

The first thing that catches your eye will be the cleaver new murals done by W. B. Christmas. On the wall of the snack shop is a kingsize sketch of those fabulous jitterbugs. In the dance room, which is out of this world, there are drawings of various campus scenes from the Arboretum to the Old Well. A collection of college pennants will eventually be added to the room.

Prillman said there would be a contest for naming the new dance room with a $5 meal book as first prize. The judges will consist of a faculty member and two student representatives.

Drinking Won't Get 'Out Of Hand'—Sloan

Chapel Hill Police Chief W. T. Sloan said yesterday he would not let drinking at the Carolina-State game this afternoon "get out of hand". The stadium ticket officer earlier, announced that there would be no drinking at the game.

Chief Sloan said he received no word from stadium officials, but that police would enforce drunkeness laws.

The chief said he expected a large turnout at the game, and consequently a lot of traffic. He said the State Highway Patrol and the Chapel Hill Police Department would handle traffic going to and from the game.

BSU Leader Will Replace J. C. Herrin

The Rev. James Olin Cansler, of Chapel Hill, who is doing graduate work in sociology at the University, is to be the new student chaplain for the Chapel Hill Baptist Church and Baptist Student Union secretary at the University of North Carolina.

The Rev. Mr. Cansler was formally elected to the position at a meeting of the executive committee of the State Baptist Convention held in Raleigh yesterday. The election was by unanimous vote of the group.

The new official will assume his duties immediately.

The Chapel Hill Baptist Church has been without a student chaplain and BSU secretary since last March, when the Rev. J. C. Herrin was dismissed from the post by the General Board of the State Convention on the ground that he had been the source of constant friction between his BSU program and the leaders of the Chapel Hill Baptist Church.

The then State BSU secretary and the BSU director at Duke University were discharged at the same time.

The appointment of the Rev. Mr. Cansler thus brings to an end a long search for a successor to Herrin, who is now serving as pastor of a church in Scarsdale, N. Y.

Endorsement.

Mr. Cansler had the endorsement of the local church's Student Affairs Committee, which is headed by William Friday and is composed of seven regular church members and seven student represntatives from the local BSU.

Dr. Samuel T. Habel, the pastor, and the board of deacons, headed by Judge L. J. Phipps, had also endorsed Mr. Cansler.

Judge Phipps, Dr. Habel and Friday said in a statement last night that "we feel very fortunate in obtaining the services of of Mr. Cansler."

Born and reared in Atlanta, Ga., Mr. Cansler received his B.S. degree in commerce from UNC in 1947, and his B.D. degree from Duke Divinity School in 1950.

Navy.

During World War II he left the University to enter the U. S. Navy, where he studied under the V-12 program and later was assigned as supply officer, with a total service term of almost four years.

After the dance is over and spirits are still gay but feet are tired, the WC buses will leave at midnight for Greensboro.

Fair, Warm Weather Is On Schedule

"Looks like you ought to have fair and warm weather."

That's the forecast made by Aviation Forecaster Bryan Stone, at the Raleigh-Durham Airport, for Chapel Hill and vicinity.

Stone forecast temperatures in the middle 80's along about the time the Carolina-State game begins, with dry air all through Kenan Stadium.

Would the day be good "football weather?"

"I reckon it would be good," he allowed. "A little warm but not too much so . . . like last Saturday."

Stone forecast a clear and warm day for the rest of the state, with an expected high of from 80 to 88.

Sunday should be partly cloudy and warm, with widely scattered showers likely, he said.

Pep Ralley Broadcast Over WPTF

UNC Rings With "Beat State"

By RUTH DALTON

Football officially arrived at Carolina amid loud cheering, horns, whistles, bells and complete high spirits as Head Cheerleader Jim Fountain led more than 5,000 students in the year's first giant pep rally.

The rally started off with a car cavalcade led by the Confederate flag held on high by the still-loyal in a convertible which was followed by numerous cars filled with cheering Carolina students.

The cavalcade wove around town from Woollen Gym and then came to Emerson Field which was already packed with students. The appearance of Jim Fountain and the Confederate flag brought prolonged cheers which were a prelude of the night's general spirit.

The rally was broadcast in separate parts over WPTF, with Worth White, announcer, and Willard Dean, engineer. Hugh Baker from State started the broadcast off at Red Diamond with seven minutes of the State side of the rally and then Jim Fountain took over here.

After several minutes of "Beat State" and jubilant cheering, UNC Chancellor R. B. House was introduced and set the crowd off completely with "I believe in my soul we're gonna beat State tomorrow."

Chancellor House gave the students a few of his memories from past years and warned that State was not "out for small potatoes." He then swung into "Roll on Boys" on the harmonica.

WPTF then switched the program back to Raleigh for another seven minutes of State cheering. As the broadcast was heard over the loudspeaker in Emerson Field, it sounded mighty weak over at Cow College.

With the program back in Chapel Hill, Fountain led everybody in several more cheers and then with a tremendous cry the entire student bdy stood up and sang while the band played "Dixie."

The echo rang over all the hills as hearts were lifted high with voices in our beloved "Hark the Sound". Then as the cheers resounded again, cars once more were loaded and students took over downtown Chapel Hill as UNC starts on the road to BEAT STATE.'

'He Suffered With The Heat A Lot'

Rebel, 145-Pound Newfoundland, Long One Of Chapel Hill's Residents, Died In Summer

By CHUCK HAUSER

In The Chapel Hill Weekly

Rebel, the 145-pound black Newfoundland land dog, who, with his 92-pound mistress, Mrs. A. M. Jordan, was a familiar sight on the paths of the campus for many years, died during the summer at the age of 12.

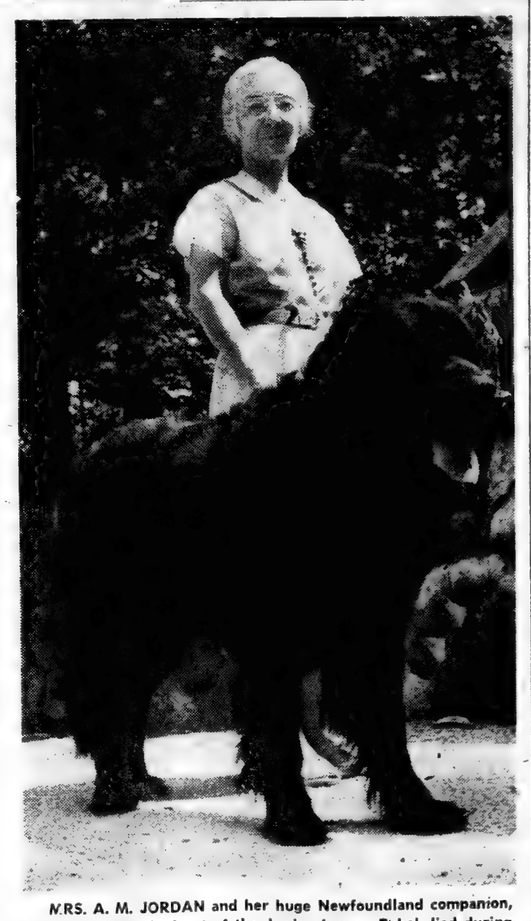
The big, friendly dog died of an attack of asthma, which affected his heart. And the summer heat, Mrs. Jordan agrees, was probably a contributory cause. "He suffered with the heat a lot," she commented the other day.

Mrs. Jordan, who is treasurer of the Chapel Hill Humane Society, is interested in buying or borrowing photographs or negatives of Rebel from anyone who has photographed the dog.

"Many people stopped us from time to time and asked permission to take pictures of Rebel, especially on the campus," she said, "and I'm hoping that I can get some of the pictures to make copies of."

The Jordans were in Los Angeles this summer when Rebel died. Professor Jordan, who teaches in the School of Education, was a visiting lecturer at the University of Southern California.

Rebel was boarded for the summer at Dr. Vanderbilt's kennels on the Durham Road. Dr. Vanderbilt gave the big dog every attention, said Mrs. Jordan, but he could not save him.



"Rebel was the friend of all the children in town," she said, "and he never fought with any other dogs. If any dog started bothering him, Rebel would just lower his head, back up, and butt the dog amidships—full speed right in the ribs. We never had trouble with any dog twice."

The Newfoundland had been in the Jordan family since he was six months old. He was born in Taunton, Mass., and was given to the Jordan's son. When the son A. M. Jordan, Jr., went into the service in World War II, his wife and Rebel went to live with Dr. and Mrs. Jordan. When Rebel's master returned, the younger Jordans went to live in Florida and the dog stayed with the older generation.

"He was named Rebel as a joke," Mrs. Jordan explained. 'My daughter-in-law said she would name him after my son, and she called him Rebel. That was his full name—just Rebel."

Most people around Chapel Hill had never seen a Newfoundland before, and Rebel attracted quite a bit of attention when he came here to live. He was still attracting attention as the only animal of his type in these parts right up to the time of his death.

Rebel had not been in good health since an attack of encephalitis—sleeping sickness — several years ago. Since then he had become susceptible to bouts with pneumonia and other maladies.

MRS. A. M. JORDAN and her huge Newfoundland companion, Rebel, are shown in front of the Jordan home. Rebel died during the past summer of asthma, which caused a heart attack. Tiny Mrs. Jordan, who weighs 92 pounds, strolled with the 145-pound dog over Chapel Hill paths regularly before his death.

"At these elections", Muntzing said, "the offices of dormitory president, vice-president, secretary - treasurer, I.D.C. representative, Intermural manager and University Club representative are to be filled.

Muntzing also stated that the Elections Board has granted permission to use the board's ballot boxes for elections, and they could be secured at the housing office. He also announced that there would be a compulsory meeting of all dormitory candidates at Gerrard Hall at 7 p.m. Thursday.

UNC Looking For Eighth State Defeat

By BERNIE WEISS

North Carolina's Tar Heels open their 1954 season today and also compete in the first game between two Atlantic Coast Conference teams this year, taking on the N. C. State Wolfepack at Kenan Stadium.

The Consolidated University Day contest is slated for 2 o'clock.

Carolina will be out to extend its winning streak over State to eight games and the Tar Heels, rated a 21-point favorite, may do just that. The opponents are without their star fullback and team captain, Don Langston.

Langston injured his leg Saturday against Virginia Tech and will also be minus the full-time services of the No. 1 quarterback, Eddie West, who was also injured against Tech. West, however, may see limited duty although he will not start.

Carolina is in excellent shape for the game. Backfield ace Kenny Keller's sprained ankle is coming along nicely. He worked out again yesterday and is expected to be in fit condition for the contest, though he will not be in the starting lineup. The probable starting UNC backfield will be Marshall Newman at quarterback, Larry Parker and Connie Gravitte at the halfback positions and Don Klochak at full. Klochak, a tough customer at 213 pounds, will be in his first game for the varsity.

Gravitte and Kirkman Co-Captains

Gravitte and center Bill Kirkman have been named as co-captains for the game. The two seniors will lead a team which averages just a little below 195 pounds per man.

Probable Starting Lineups:

UNC	Pos.	State
Frye	LE	Kapp
Maultsby	LT	Lodge
Foti	LG	Nardone
Kirkman	C	Tonn
Koman	RG	Szuchan
Perdue	RT	Price
Starner	RE	Brown
Newman	QB	Franklin
Parker	LH	Marinkov
Gravitte	RH	Seehorn
Klochak	FB	Mackeever

State will put a patched group of gridders on the Kenan turf. In addition to Langston and West the 'Pack is also without a key guard, Al D'Angelo. The invaders are pinning their hopes on sophomore flash George Marinkov, a 165-pound speed demon who tallied twice against Tech.

Soph Billy Franklin will start at quarterback in place of West, while Harrison MacKeever, also a soph, will take over for Langston.

UNC Ahead In Rivalry

Carolina holds a wide margin over State in the history of the intra - school rivalry. Since 1894 UNC has won 32 games while dropping only five. Six of the games have been ties.

State is operating this year under Coach Earle Edwards, formerly with Michigan State, who succeeds Horace Hendrickson. Edwards has brought with him the Spartans' "multiple offense" type of attack ,which operates from an unbalanced line using the basic T-formation with both single and double wing variations. Edwards is determined to better State's 53 record of 1-9 and would like nothing better than to get on the winning track at Carolina's expense.

Pre-game estimates late yesterday placed the attendance figure at 20,000 to 25,000. The game will be broadcast over the 50-station Tobacco Sports Network by WRAL, Raleigh, with Ray Reeve doing the play-by-play.

Beat State!

It won't be quite perfect. Down on fraternity row, they'll have to keep one eye out for the law when they mix their bourbon and water. And it will be too warm, likely, for the coeds to wear the tweed suit they've saved for the first football weekend. The dorm visiting agreement is still too new for the boys to feel completely at ease among the skirts in their social rooms.

So it will be up to the football team to make a success of this first Big Weekend. 34-7 or so would do, and would go a long way toward injecting some spiritual blood into a socially anemic campus.

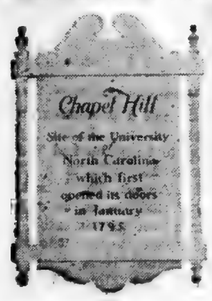
Old South

The Carolina campus, like the mysterious chasm of time, the Grand Canyon, changes mood and expression every time the minute hand sweps around the clock; there are times when it broods grayly and gothicly under the spell of clouds and rain; there are other times, when, as today, with the football crowd in town and the sun bright, it has classical serenity and gaiety.

But as we emerged from the library the other night and stood before Polk Place (the mall from the Library to South Building) we wondered if all of the denizens of this campus—even among ardent worshipers of its exterior beauty — have availed themselves of this view. South Building, late at night, is transformed by its lighting from a somewhat cold and stately formality to the appearance of ghostly celebration. We had the inner feeling that a stroll up the mall to a closer vantage point might even reveal Scarlet O'Hara being courted by a Southern gentleman on the front porch.

And by the way. . . How HAS Chancellor House been spending his time lately?

Naivette In Pettigrew Dorm



One would think that residents of men's dormitories would be unanimously in favor of the new coed visiting agreement which has been engineered by the Interdormitory Council. We discover, however, a note of discord.

The Daily Tar Heel made a telephone call to each dormitory on campus, and spoke to one student therein about the visiting agreement. The comments were printed in yesterday's paper. They ranged all the way from "a darn good idea" to "wonderful" to "okay."

A gentleman in Pettigrew, however, came out with the astounding remark: "I don't think there's much to it, myself." We hasten to assure IDC officials not to become discouraged because of this off-hand statement by a young man, undoubtedly a freshman, who will probably discover before he's been at Carolina very long that a couch was not invented solely to watch TV from, and the Arboretum serves more purposes than just growing flowers.

I Dont Give A 'Dink' For Duke Univ.

TODAY AS the gals from Wowan's Collegs ease into town on the long Greyhounds to even out the UNC male-female ratio and as our country cousins from State roar in to make the new ratio uneven again, there is a common feeling in the Consolidated University air.

The WC girls will be herded off the big busses and—if they are skillful— they will land themselves a Carolina or N.C. State boy to hop around with for the day. The stadium will fill up, State will go through its paces, and then it'll all be over. That is, except for the common feeling in the air.

Granted, some of the WC gals will be sitting on the State side, and also some of the UNC football players may knock down some of State's boys. And Carolina will win. But there is still one cause in the back of everyone's mind.

AT THIS point I guess it would be pleasant to say that the common cause is the Consolidated University, but it's not true. And although I like the boys at State and feel even closer to the gals at WC, the University never feels consolidated—except on CU Day or on South Building charts. But there will be a common feeling, a mutual yell, that will ring out over Kenan sometime today. And it will be consolidated, perhaps more "consolidated" than the so-called Consolidated University.

"BEAT DUKE"

That's the common cause, the thing that will bind the three schools together in a feeling of mutuality and consolidation. The desire to soundly stomp that crusty, Southern version of an Ivy League camups is in the air.

But what of this stony institution in western Durham? Is it the place of misery that we think it is? I say it's worse.

Listen to this blurb from a recent Duke Chronicle editorial:

"YOU can graduate from Duke without ever taking part in student activities. You can fill your schedule card with crip courses every year. Yes, you can waste your own and the university's time if you want to. . . ."

Coming from Duke's own campus paper, this must be the straight scoop. I never doubted that this was the situation over at the monument to Mammon and Medieval snobbery.

Perhaps the agenda that the Chronicle mentions accounts somewhat for Duke's recent grid prowess.

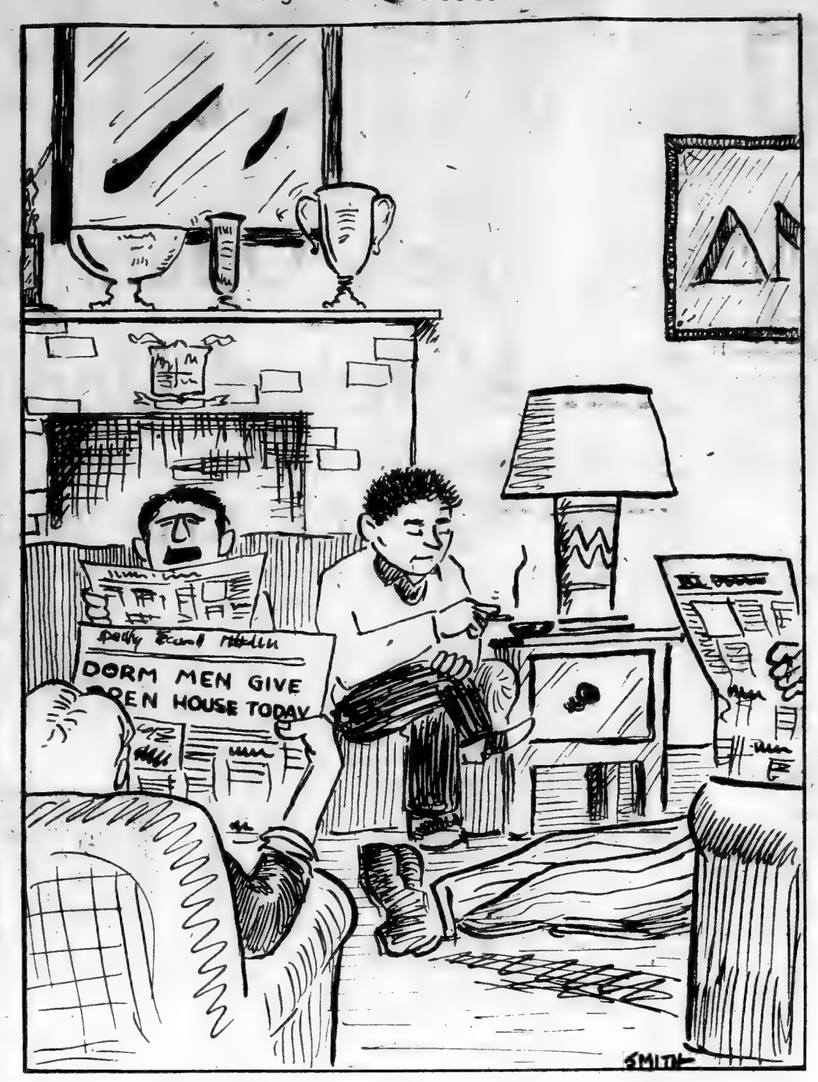
AND WHAT of the traditions at this haven for misplaced Ivy Leaguers who come South and hang their noses Northward?

Let us quote again from the Duke scripture—the latest issue of its campus paper:

"First a freshman should go and buy his 'dink' in the dope shop; but nearly all of you will have done this already, and now you probably feel pretty silly walking around in the new headgear."



All I can say about that is I'd feel silly too if I had gone to a shop peddling dope and come out with a dinky hat.

LISTEN TO more on this "dink." The Chronicle continues, The dink should be tipped until the game with Carolina. If Duke wins, you can throw the dink away (although alumni assure us that they make excellent lamp-shades); if Duke loses, however, the dink has to be worn until Christmas."

So it's in this air of common purpose today at the Hill that I think of the tiny Dukes walking around until Yuletide with their dinks.—that is except when they see instructors or upperclassmen.

"All Right Men—Let's Go Join A Dorm'

The GOP New Dealers

WASHINGTON — The five governors who discussed the fifty-billion-dollar highway program with Eisenhower at a White House luncheon the other day found themselves veering somewhat over toward Ike's ideas despite previous opposition.

Not all the conversation had to do with highways, however. For the benefit of the southern governors present — Kennon of Louisiana and Weatherby of Kentucky—the President told this story about his election campaign.

My advisers told me," he said, "that it I went down South on a tour I would get a corporal's guard out to hear me talk. Well, I decided to go anyway, and as I gathered momentum, I began to realize just how big a corporal's guard really is. I never knew before it could be so large."

Note—While Eisenhower and the governors were discussing $50.000,000,000 for highways, Senator Cooper's bill for only half-a-billion dollars for school construction faced rough sledding in Congress, largely because the Eisenhower Administration refused to back it.

Congressmen Need A Raise

It may sound strange coming from one who has done his share of criticizing Congress, but in my opinion it would be a tragedy if Congress did not come back this fall to vote a pay raise both for judges and congressmen themselves.

President Eisenhower urged such a pay boost las year. A commission was appointed, a recommendation made, but now all has been forgotten.

Congressmen and federal judges are still struggling along on salaries that few similarly qualified professional men would work for, though some are getting tired and resigning.

In the old days, the Senate was a rich man's corporation, where a member could afford to work for nothing. And the resultant legislation, as could be expected, benefited the rich. The House of Representativs has featured those who got kickbacks from their staff, private expense accounts a la Nixon, or skimped their families.

Few men in any job these days unless they are corporation exhave to maintain two houses, ecutives and get paid for it. But a congressman must keep a home in his district and a home in Washington, especially if he has children. The expense is terrific.

On top of this, few people are called upon to work longer hours than a United States Senator. The ordinary citizen working such hours would have gone on strike long ago, whether union or nonunion.

Yet most member of Congress are conscientious, honest men. This writer happens to have exposed irregularities, helped send four congessmen to jail in recent years. However, I am certain these do not represent the congressional average.

What's bound to happen is that if Congressional salaries are not increased, the caliber of our legislators will go down and down.

Since congressmen hesitate to vote themselves an increase befor elctions, I suggsst that the House return after November, when the Senate will have to return to vote on McCarthy anyway, and then both take up the long overdue question of congressional and judicial salaries.

FISCAL POLITICS

President Eisenhower got a friendly tip that he had better appoint a vice-chairman of the Federal Reserve Board or face some hot speeches in Congress.

Undr the law, tne President is required to appoint not only a chairman but a vice-chair of the Federal Reserve. Furthermore, he is required to appoint seven members to the Board. and for months he failed to do the latter. It was not until Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota made a speech accusing the President of deliberately violating th elaw that two additional board members were appointed—Canby Balderston of Philadelphia and Paul Miller of St. Paul. Both are ogdo men.

So over weekend, the White House was told that Senator Humphrey was ready to deliver another speech if ke did not designate a vice-chairmen-also necessary under the law.

All this may seem like unimportant financial politics to the average taxpayer, but it isn't. It affects the credit structure of the nation an dnte amoun tof interest you pay when you go to the bank for a loan. For it goes back to the traditional battle between the Treasury and the Federal Reserve as to whether interest rates will be high or low, inflation up or down.

During the Truman Administration this battle between secretary of the Treasury Snyder and Federal Reserve Chairman Marriner Eccles made headlines. In the end, Truman demoted Eccles, which let the Treasury dominate the Federal Reserve Board.

Today the Treasury still dominates the Federal Reserve oBard—though without headlines. The domination has been entirely friendly, through the fact that William McChesney Martin, nwe Board chairman, was once Undersecretary of the Treasury and is a great friend of Secretary of the Treasury Geoge Humphrey. Their cooperation is perfect.

So when the Federal Reserve Board has five members instead of seven; and when it has no vice chairman, It's a little less independent, a little easier to dominate.

The Ram Sees

The Ram Sees where BRAT, the ultra-istic art (?) movement of last year, seems to be dead, but the outfit called Bally-hai, or Ba-hai, or something like that is still with us. We invite the adherents of this faith to a seance in the Rathskeller on any night of a full moon, and we'll talk turkey over a bottle of Miller's Ba-hai-life.

Ed McCurry has a pretty low opinion of campus politics. He is quoted as having uttered an extremely harsh judgment the other evening in referring to the "mud, mire and muck of campus politics." This is an unfortunate viewpoint to be taken by a person who owes his job—attorney-general—to politics, pure and simple (the attorney-general's job is an appointive position). It is an unfortunate viewpoint for someone who is interested in becoming president of the student body, which McCurry is, because to get to be president he must engage in a political campaign. Campus politics will never be any cleaner (or conversely, dirtier) than the campus politicians, and Ed McCurry is in the leading ranks of that clan.

The leaves on the trees have'nt begun turning yet, but fall is definitely here and football takes over Chapel Hill starting today. Barclay is optimistic (which is something most coaches are very careful NOT to be, at least BEFORE the season starts), the football players are grinning confidently, and everyone agrees that if we don't beat the molasses out of Cow College down in Kenan Woods this afternoon we had all better pack up and apply for late registration over in West Durham.

Bushy tells me they're going to crack down on drinking at the game today. That's sort of like trying to evaporate Morgan's Creek and turn University Lake into a set for Audie Murphy's latest movie. They can martial the Chapel Hill police force, they can arm the campus cops, they can mobilize the State Highway Patrol, they can call out the National Guard, the FBI and the SBI (it was years before I learned that SBI stands for the State Bureau of Information instead of an abbreviation for a dirty phrase), but you can bet your last pair of dusty white bucks that there's going to be more stuff guzzled down among the Kenan pines today than Andy Griffith's Big Orange.

Presidential Memo

(It is a custom of long standing for The Daily Tar Heel to make available on its editorial page a space for the president of the student body to communicate with the students. This is the first of a series of Memos by President Tom Creasy.—Editor)

Now that we are again in full swing I would like to say welcome back to all the old Tar Heels—and to the new students I would again like to say welcome on behalf of the entire Student Body.

To Rollie Tillman and to Luanne Thornton I think we all owe a great deal of gratitude for they have just given us one of the finest orientation programs Carolina has ever seen. I think everyone connected with the program this year will agree with me that it was really done up to perfection.

One person who has done a tremendous amount of work on the program for the past two years, and yet has received little praise or publicity is Jim Buyer. We owe a lot of thanks to Jim for the big part that he has played in the last two orientation programs. Last but far from least is the Orientation Committee, the Men's Counselor Body and the Women's Advisory Body. Each one of these groups plays a vital role in the program each year in that the ultimate success of orientation depends on them. I have never seen an orientation group do a finer job or work together as well. All in all it was a real success and everyone connected with it deserves a great deal of praise.

The Y Camp this year also was a big success. Chairman Jim Turner and all the Y camp consellors put a tremendous amount of work on this years program, but I'm sure they were repaid in full by the great success they met.

Looking back to the summer session for just a minute I would like to say that while it is impossible to have all the organisms of student government working during this time many worthwhile projects can be carried out. One such project this summer was the revising of the general Student Government Statutes. This was a big job ably carried out this summer by the summer school Student Government Board.

In August I attended the National Students Association President's Conference in Ames, Iowa, and really got a great deal out of the conference. The thing I most enjoyed was being able to discuss plans and ideas with members of colleges and universities from all over the United States. It was a great help to find out how certain project worked in their schools-methods that they used and the success or failure they met. In fact, it was from the N.S.A. Congress that we first got our ideas about our orientation program many years ago.

In looking ahead I sincerely feel that we can all look forward to a succesful year at Carolina not only in student government, but also in athletics and the many other important parts of our student life.

Nantucket Is No Illinois

Ed Yoder

Jake Wade's inimitable discourse on his own (and all our own) "sad, magic, romantic town" calls to mind another sad magic, romantic town. It is Nantucket, familiar to readers of Moby Dick, on Nantucket Island, Mass., a small, oak-covered and sandy pinch of sand thrust on a lonely pedistal 60 miles out into the Atlantic. Here, to a merry July and August playground, come many vacationers from the Metropolitan and New England areas to sleep, as Herman Melville said, "with whales and walruses rushing under their pillows." Here, to a sometimes merry and often heetic work-and-play-ground came Ed Yoder this past summer.

In an earlier day, Nantucket was a heart that pumped vigor to the New England whaling industry. All of the routes for whalers (and various captains and salts) led to the door of the old Harbor on Buzzards Bay. The seafarers' meeting, smoking and grog house and the whaling museum still istand, etolled in original red-brick, tarred roof cestments near the harbor—silent dikes against a tide of Yankee traders, polo-shirted, Bermuda shorted tourists, and a stripe-tied tanned college crowd that moves in to seek a summer's fortune.

In his "Nantucket" chapter of Moby Dick, Melville concludes, in a fine understatement, that Nantucket is no Illinois. The fury and lure of its tourist potentialities have engulfed the Island since Melville last set his wonderously-observant eyes on it. But the spirit of the obsessed Captain Ahab still broods over it; under certain complexions, say, when the skies are gray and the small craft warnings trer out, Madaket Beach, the island answers perfectly the description Ishmael (narrator of Moby Dick) drew out the peg-legged whaling captain—"desperate moody and savage sometimes."

Nantucket has uncounted bicyclists; the steamer from New Bedford charges a price that prohibits many from bringing automobiles to the Island. Cares are left behind, garaged on the mainland where they belong. It takes no great power of observation to make one aware of the numerous two-wheeled vehicles. Most of the bicycles are of light frames (many bred in foreign bike shops) and it doesn't take many days of hard riding for the stoic cobblestones to shake a thousand assorted rattles into the fenders.

Nantucket is an island of variety. The most outspoken breakers of the dogma of variety are the hundreds of houses. Reflecting several centuries of transition in New England architecture, most are constructed of weathered boards and several months of wind, rain, sun, and fog transform their complexion from the sickly yellow color of freshly hewn timber to a healthy gray that reminds one most of cigarette ashes. But the homogeneity in color nad architecture is close to the homogeneity of expression to be seen on the faces of fans at a sports event.

Beneath Nantucket's demure facade of quaintness, polish, variety, leisure there lies a pressing tempo, like that ,it seems to me, a watch mainspring gone awry would set, a certain impression of distrust, even unease. In sum, Nantucket's present face is a face moulded by the tensions and recoil of the Atomic Age. If the Island has an organized group that cries out against the improvisions of this age, it is the Seagull clique that drift on the breeze over the beaches. E. B. White thinks they're mourning. But I think their high-pitched nasal complaints are ironic strains of joy that they aren't caught up in what could be called, perhaps in disillusion, a rat-race.

Tar Heels Favored Over Wolfpack By Three Touchdowns

'What It Was'

Griffith Here With Famous 'Big Orange'

By JAKE WADE

It was back last November I believe it was, we was a'gonna hold a football game here with Notre Dame at this college town, and that was when Andy Griffith, one of our citizens, broke into the national spotlight with the recorded rendition of a daffy dissertation called "What It Was —Was Football."

Well, Andy is coming back home this week, with a hot dog in one hand and a big orange in the other, and down in Kenan Stadium, after a flock of big men go into a big outhouse at the end of the field and where five or six convicts will be running up and down the field blowing whistles, the Deacon will go out into the middle of the cow pasture and address the folks on the theme that made him a celebrity—and middling rich—in the entertainment world.

Andy Griffith, a graduate in music at the University of North Carolina and a native of Mount Airy, will be making his first appearance at his alma mater since he really became famous: It's a dividend for the customers attending the North Carolina-State-Carolina football opener and a part of the big celebration of Greater University Day.

Griffith was thinking about Kenan Stadium, amongst the pines, when he composed his celebrated monologue and which was given its first national airing, truly, the day of the Notre Dame game last season. Since that November day he has not only sold more than half a million records of the football piece but has appeared on such national television programs as the Colgate Comedy hour, the Jackie Gleason show, and Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town." And he has played such nightspots as New York's Blue Angel and the Baker Hotel at Dallas.

Langston Out With Injuries

Newman to Quarterback Carolina Split-T Attack

State lost its opening game last week to Tech, 30-21, which made the seventh loss in a row for the Pack.

Carolina soundly whipped State in the teams' 1953 meeting, 29-7. It was Langston and West, incidentally, who scored the lone State touchdown and kicked the extra point, respectively.

George Barclay, beginning his second year as head coach of the Carolina eleven, considers his outfit a much-improved squad over last year's bunch, which dropped six of 10 games. This year he has lettermen in all positions under the capable direction of signal-callers Newman and Al Long. Long won't start, but there is no doubt he will have his chance.

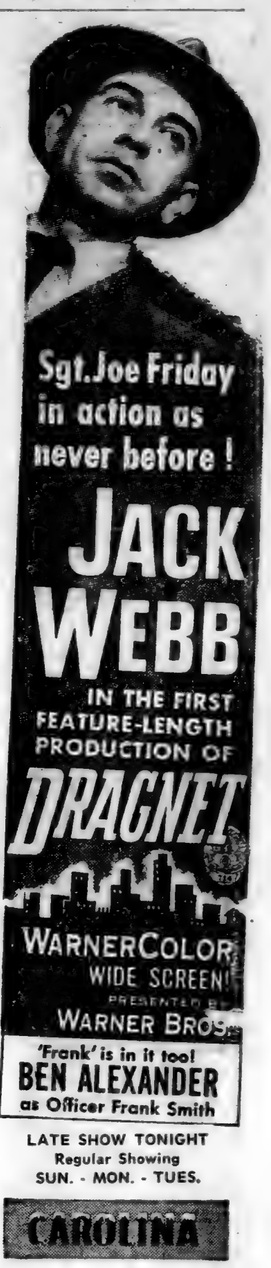
Swimmers Set To Face 10 Meet Schedule In '55

By BOB DILLARD

Carolina's varsity swimming team, guided by Coach Casey, will open the 1955 season seeking their 13th Conference championship in 17 years.

This year's squad, led by Co-Captains Warren Heemann and Larry Shannon will be composed of the 1954 team, with the exception of one man, Duke Wiedoff, who graduated last spring, and nine men up from last year's undefeated freshman team.

Joining the varsity for the first time will be three stellar performers from the freshman squad Phil Drake, who set freshman records in the breaststroke and individual medley; Charley Krepp, who set freshman records in backstroke and the 220 and 440 yard freestyle; and Mac McGinnis, who was voted the outstanding freshman swimming award for his performance on the diving board.



The Tar Heel swimmers will compete in ten meets this year. Highlighting the season will be the Southern Interscholastic Championships, which will be held February 19. The team will face Duke, South Carolina, Georgia, Clemson, Virginia, and battle last year's Conference champs, N. C. State twice. They will also compete in the Southern AAU and Atlantic Coast Championships.

Carolina teams, coached alternately by Dick Jamerson and Ralph Casey since 1939, have compiled a tremendous record in 17 years. They have brought 120 victories to the campus, while losing only 14. Along with their 12 Conference championships, they have placed six times in the National Collegiate Championships, setting national records and placing men on the All-America Swimming team.

The freshman squad, which has yet to lose a meet since World War II, has a number of outstanding prospects for the coming season, among them a State High

Fired Or Resigned, Harris Out As Washington Senators' Pilot

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 (AP)—The Washington Senators announced today that Bucky Harris has resigned as manager, but Harris implied he was fired.

At any rate, Bucky is out of a job with the end of the season Sunday and while nobody would say so for the record, it was widely believed that Chuck Dressen will be his successor.

The sequence went like this: Clark Griffith, 84-year-old owner of the Senators and a long-time friend of Harris, told a news conference at Washington that he was announcing, at Harris' request, that Bucky had resigned.

Harris, in Boston for the closing games with the Red Sox, denied to reporters that he had resigned and hinted that actually he was being booted out. He said:

"You can believe what you want to. Maybe it's better that way. No manager ever resigns. I've been through it before. Actually, I hate to leave Washington. It's been my home for 30 years but that's one of the hazards of baseball. As of now, I don't know what I'm gonna do. I have no offers. I'll keep on managing the club until the final game is played."

Harris, one of baseball's "nice guys," is winding up his third hitch as manager of the Senators, bogged in the second division. All told, he has managed them 18 years, dating back to 1924 when he led the club to a pennant.

Meanwhile, it was learned but unidentifiable sources that Dressen in all likelihood will be signed to a three-yaer contract at between $40,00 and $45,000 a year. Harris reportedly earned $30,000.

Griffith said he planned to announce Harris' resignation Monday at the close of the season, but that Bucky had telephoned him last night to ask him to do so at once and thus free Harris to negotiate his own future.

In the give and take with reporters, Griffith said he would talk with "three or four" potential successors in New oYrk on Monday and that he hoped to be able to announce his manager on that day. The names mentionel in the discussion were Dressen, Phil Aizzuto, shortstop for the New York Yankees, and Jimmy Dykes, recently ousted as manager of the Baltimore Orioles.

Blue Imps Whip Deacons, 33-7

DURHAM, N. C., Sept. 24—(AP)—Duke's freshman football team opened its 1954 season here today with a convincing 33-7 victory over Wake Forest's Baby Deacons. Coach Cox of Duke alternated three teams with a total of 39 players seeing action as the Blue Imps scored three times for a commanding 20-7 halftime advantage.

The Imps with quarterback Marion Justice and halfback Ed Rushton collaborating on two long touchdown passes drew first blood. With four minutes left in the initial period Justice threw 20 yards to Rushton for the first tally. Justice converted. Moments later Justice passed again to the fleet halfback from the Duke 45. Rushton gathered the throw on the Wake 17 and sped across the double line untouched.

Justice's first scoring pass climaxed a drive which started on the Duke 36. A 39-yard Justice pass was ruled complete on an interference fraction to put the ball in scoring position.

Quarterback Bob Broadhead sparked the third drive, which covered 60 yards. Coy Clayton and Bobby Honeycutt were the principal ground gainers, but the payoff came on a 32-yard pass play from Broadhead to Honeycutt. Broadhead converted to make it 20-0.

The Deacons, displaying a lot of determination, fought back for a score before intermission. It came on a 63-yard pass from Quarterback Newsome to end Bill Pegram.

First Complete Football Weekend May Be Tough On Ranking Outfits

Two young head coaches, facing terrific assignments at the beginning of their new careers, stood out like islands of optimism in the customary sea of tears today as big time college football opened on all fronts.

Terrence Patrick Brannan, the smiling 26-year-old who succeeded lachrymose Frank Leahy as Notre Dame's head coach, and Hugh Duffy Daugherty, trying to fill the ample shoes of Biggie Munn at Michigan State, refused to bow to convention and predict disastrous seasons for their teams.

They realized that disaster could strike in today's opening games, with Notre Dame meeting mighty Texas team and Michigan State facing potent, upset-minded Iowa But, confining themselves to general statements, Brennan has said he expects to have what Leahy used to call a "representative"—meaning winning—Notre Dame team and Daugherty is on record as believing Michigan State's successes will continue.

In fairness to other coaches it must be pointed out that the schedule for today—the second big day of the 1954 college season and the first to provide action in every sector—was the kind that could lead to tears. A dozen or so teams rated among the best in their sectors, faced the kind of opposition that could ruin a good season at the outset.

The top games were Texas-Notre Dame and Michigan State-Iowa, television's game of the week. Only a step or two behind them came Penn State-Illinois, Missouri-Purdue, Texas Christian-Oklahoma, Mississippi-Kentucky, Florida-Georgia Tech, Duke-Pennsylvania, South Carolina-Army, Kansas State-Wy-

Dr. Yagi left Chapel Hill to go to Duke University for further medical observation.

While here, he sat in on seminars and other classes, and talked with students about their courses. He expressed his admiration for the "practical instructional system used, which ha sgood arrangement of material and lectures that are not too theoretical."

Dr. Yagi was particularly interested in the UNC medical program, since a member of the UNC Medical School faculty, Dr. Warner Lee Wells, assistant professor of surgery, visited Okayama University while serving as honorary professor of surgery at Hioshima University Medical School in 1950-52.

During July Dr. Yagi represented Japan a tthe International Congress of Gyncology and Obstetrics, held in Geneva, Switzerland, where he read a paper on birth injuries.

Later he visited university hospitals in Germany, France and England through August. He arrived in the United States early in September, and attended the meeting of the American Association of Obstetrics an dGynecology at Hot Springs, Va., September 9-11, and spent a week observing medical facilities in Baltimore.

Dr. Yagi commented on the quiet environment for study which he observed in Chapel Hill, which he efels is much more conducive to academic work than big city locations of many schools.

" have gained much new knowledge in my visit at the University Medical School, and I hope to return again to Chapel Hill," he said.

MISS LUCILLE KELLING

— RAM —

Of all the games that Bushy has attended, he claims that the Carolina-Notre Dame game in New York was his biggest thrill. He loaded Rameses in a trailer painted blue and white, and decorated with 27 rebel flags, and drove up to New York. During his brief stay in the city he created more sensation than the town had ever seen. He is probably the only person in history to make four left turns in the heart of the great metropolis, and when he paraded the ram across Times Square he stopped traffic. "The police," he said, "Were going to put Remeses in the police stables (as it was announced in the newspapers), but when they saw what the ram meant to the students they were afraid that he might be stolen so they put him in a kennel."

Miss Kelling 'Natural' For Dean's Job

By HELEN ELLER

If outstanding ability in her field and sincere interest in students, coupled with generous amounts of companionability and consideration constitute a prerequisite for the position of Dean of the School of Library Science at the University, Miss Lucile Kelling who has just been appointed to fill that position would seem to be a natural for the job.

Such descriptions as "loved by all students," "wonderful as a counselor" and "a go-getter when it comes to placing graduates in good positions" are only a few of the expressions of devotion from her friends and colleagues.

Miss Kelling became Dean of the School of Library Science at the University officially this month following the retirement from the University of Dr. Susan Grey Akers. who served as Dean of the School for 19 years.

A native of Alma City, Minn., Miss Kelling came to the University at Chapel Hill in 1932 as an assistant professor. She has since risen in the ranks of the librarry-associate professor, professor and acting dean—to her present position.

She graduated magna cum laude from Whitman College, Walla Walla, Wash., where she held a scholarship and from New York State Library School in 1921 with a bachelor degree in library science which, she explains, is comparable to the master's degree today.

Her first job as librarian in the Carnegie Public Library, Centralia, Wash., was followed by five years in the Foreign Branch of the Free Public Library, Newark, N. J., where she was head of the periodicals department and served in several other positions.

In 1926, Miss Kelling, who up to this time had traveled from the Northernmost State on the Pacific coast across the country to the eastern shores, decided upon a position which would take her again, to Los Angeles this time where she was lecturer for several years in the School of Public Administration at the University of Southern California.

Miss Bobbie Lee Moretz:

UNC Miss Named 1954 CU Queen

A pretty, 5'7" UNC dramatic arts major walked out on the Kenan Stadium turf yesterday and was named Consolidated University Day Queen for 1954.

The winner, Miss Bobbie Lee Moretz, from Elizabethton, Tenn., was named CU Day Queen by Judges Thad Eure Sr., N. C. Secretary-of-State, and Mr. and Mrs. Kay Kyser of Chapel Hill. The UNC girl was crowned at half-time during the Carolina-State game yesterday.

Miss Moretz, a junior who plans to go into professional dramatics after graduation, is a transfer from Stephens College in Columbia, Mo. The blue-eyed, brown-haired coed was escorted by Bill Chapman, UNC student.

She received a $10 gift certificate from Robbins clothing store in Chapel Hill, a bouquet of roses from University Florist and a loving cup.

Miss Moretz did not know she was the winner of the contest un-

Debate Squad Will Meet

The University Debate Squad will hold its first meeting of the year tomorrow afternoon.

President Bev Webb of Greensboro announced yesterday that the squad's first meeting would be for purposes of explaining debating at Carolina and of outlining the group's plans for the coming year.

Webb said the team's debate topic for this year is: "Resolved: That the United States should give diplomatic recognition to the communistic government of China."

Webb said the members of the squad will begin study of the resolution at future meetings, at which times group discussions will be held on various aspects of the question.

Sophomores and law students will have their Yackety-Yack pictures taken tomorrow through Friday, between the hours of 1 and 8 p.m., according to annual Co-Editors Jackie Park and Cornell Wright. Pictures will be taken in the basement of Graham Memorial.

UNC Rolls Over State Caissons, 20 To 6; Win Is Carolina's Eighth Over Wolfpack

Kenan Pines Kinda Quiet At State Game

By JERRY REECE

It was ice-cream instead of beer and "big oranges" instead of bourbon as Carolina and State both opened their 1954 football seasons in Kenan Stadium yesterday afternoon.

Everyone was there from Bushy and Rameses to the familiar Jones Pork Sausage airplane; it was the familiar CU Day setting with the "Cow College Cousins" cheering their heads off and the WC coeds just demurely watching and waiting, and even Deacon Andy Griffith was there but at times the only partially-filled stands seemed bored with it all.

It may have been the conspicuous lack of imbibing of alcohol or the unseasonable warm weather, or it may have just been that everyone knew what was going to happen (they were almost surprised). But whatever it was it was really quiet and Head Cheerleader Jimmy Fountain almost had apoplexy trying to coax a few weak cheers out of the Carolina rooters.

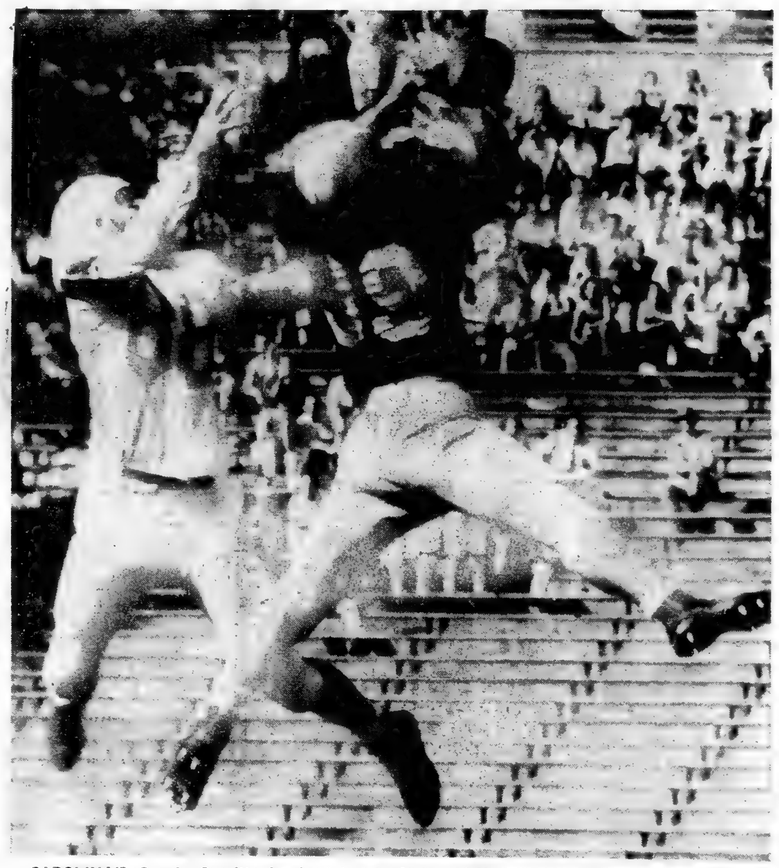
Although there were 28 busloads of them, not a whisper could be heard when Jim asked for the WC girls to give forth with a yell.

Talk about cows—Did you see that State player who went out of bounds and hopped over the fence?



Maybe it was just a cold shudder instead of a "We don't give a damn for . . . " when the announcer told the stadium about the Blue Devils' 52-0 win over Penn. It's a long, long time until November, anyway.

'Hayde, hidee, goshalmittee" was the newest of yells that Cheerleader Fountain and his talented cohorts offered for the day.

Deacon Griffin was one of the brighter spots of the afternoon with his familiar but always humorous "What It Was, Was Football" and he got more student response than both teams together.

The card stunts seemed way above average but you couldn't have told it by watching for reaction on the State side of the field (toward which the stunts were aimed).

And in case you are wondering who those characters in the weird headgear and costumes were, they were new initiates of the "13 Club."

Carry Fight To The Governor?

Council Against Fee Raise

The Consolidated University Student Council yesterday adopted unanimously a resolution against a raise in tuition in the University's three branches.

A projected tuition raise was hinted last week during meetings of the State Advisory Budget Commission, which makes recommendations to the State Legislature. Some legislators are said to feel higher tuition is the only answer for increasing University financial needs.

But the representatives of State, WC and UNC student bodies yesterday protested the idea vigorously. Indications in the meeting were that the Consolidated Council is prepared to carry the fight directly to the governor and the General Assembly if necessary to prevent the tuition hike.

CUSC members also agreed on a resolution calling new dormitories the foremost permanent improvement need of the three schools and urging the General Assembly to give them top priority when funds are handed out in January.

In other actions, the group es-

Carolina President Tom Creasy told the CUSC yesterday he is not in favor of all campus book store profits' going to non-athletic scholarships.

University President Gordon Gray has indicated he's in agreement with the gradual elimination of athletic grants from book store funds that is going on at State and UNC. Already at Carolina, all book store profits go to academic scholarships.

But Creasy said yesterday he doesn't think the scholarships "should be limited to one group."

Newman, Gravitte, Klochack Rack Up Tar Heel Tallies

North Carolina's Tar Heels, coming through with an insurance touchdown in the last two minutes of play, yesterday beat N. C. State, 20-6, in the opening game of the season in Kenan Stadium.

Quarterback Marshall Newman, who started and piloted the Tar Heels throughout most of the game, tallied in the second quarter to give Coach George Barclay's charges the lead. Connie Gravitte followed with another score in the third period and Don Klochak hit pay-dirt in the final quarter for the three N. C. touchdowns.

State guard Mike Nardone accounted for all of the Wolfpack's scoring when he intercepted a pass and hustled 25 yards to the promised land midway the third period.

Both teams gained an equal number of first downs, 14, and Carolina outrushed State by only 28 yards. It was through the air where the Tar Heels bested State statistically. The winners completed eight of 15 passes for 116 yards while the Wolves, who lost their eighth straight contest over a two-year span, were able to connect on only five of 14 aerials for a passing yardage of 17.

Carolina employed three quarterbacks . . . Newman, Long and Len Bullock. Bullock's appearance was brief, playing only about four minutes in the final period, but he quickly proved himself when he maneuvered the last UNC touchdown from 38 yards out in seven plays. Klochak bulled his way over on a hand-off from three yards out for the score. Barclay stated after the game that he was well pleased with all three quarterbacks.

Newman Big Ground-Gainer

Newman was Carolina's big ground-gainer. The blond-haired junior carried 12 times for a total of 76 yards, averaging 5.8 yards per carry. Gravitte had and average of 4.9. In the air, Newman tried 13 passes, connecting on six for a total of 99 yards and one touchdown.

Newman also tossed one touchdown pass for State. In the third

Barclay Calls Carolina's Win 'Team Victory

By LARRY SAUNDERS

"It was a team victory. We made a lot of mistakes but we're gonna do better." The speaker was head coach George Barclay, whose Carolina football team had just won its opening game from N. C. State.

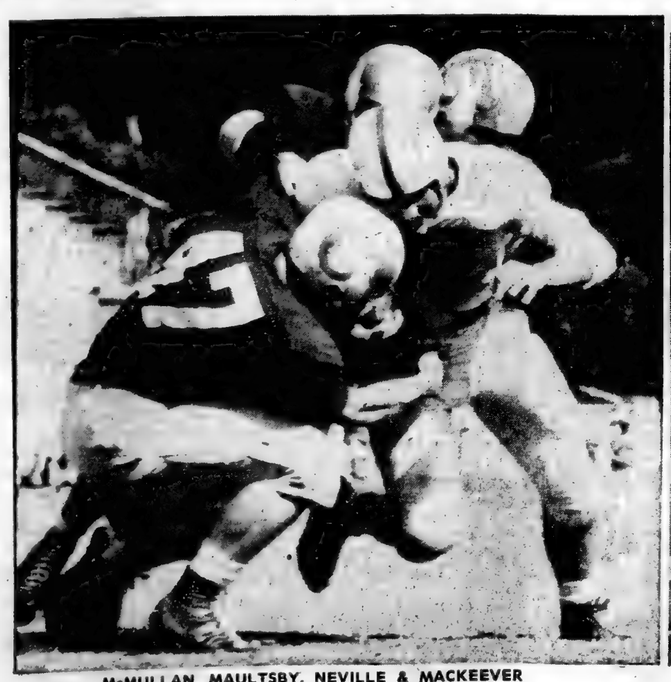
State's Coach Earle Edwards Down Fighting

By BOB DILLARD

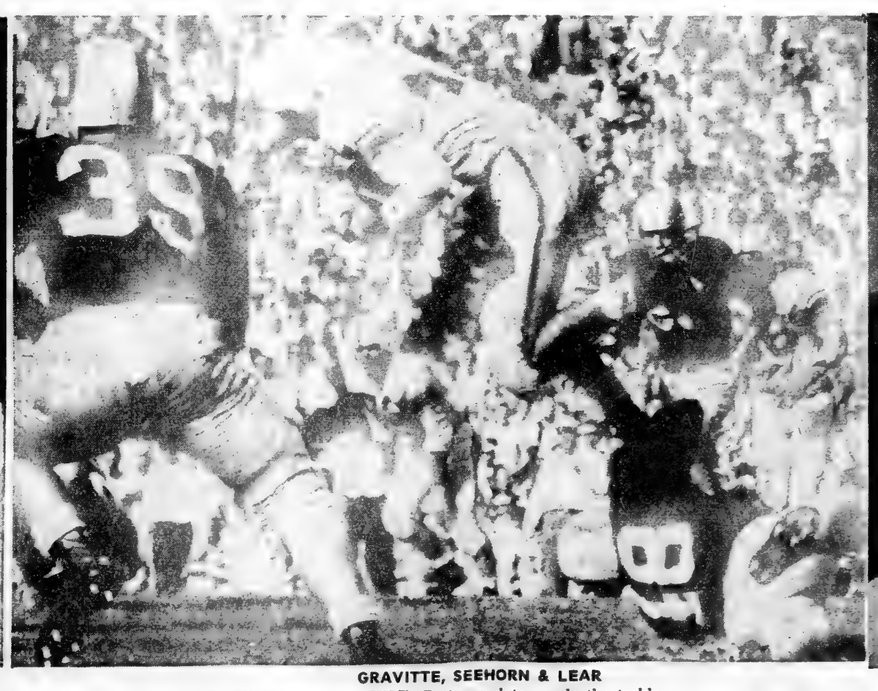
"If we had made those two yards in the third quarter, we might still be playing." These were the words of a beaten, but not disgraced coach. Coach Earle Edward's Wolfpack lost yesterday afternoon in Kenan Stadium, but to the eye of someone looking at the faces of the Wolfpack team after the game, they had not been humbled; they went down fighting.



There was no one sitting in the dressing room with his head in his hands, yet there was no one laughing. The room wasn't still, but then there was no horseplay. The team entered the room, went to their lockers and began to undress.

"We weren't up for this game any more than usual for the second game of the season. We hadn't talked about it much at all. Were we Al?"

Al D'Angelo: "No."



"We enjoyed the game," said Coach Edwards, "We had a chance right up to the end." Another coach: "We're proud of you boys. We made some mistakes, but so did they. We'll get them next time."

The Lost Chord (A Flatted Fifth)

This morning, we would awaken the members of the administration from their Sabbath slumber to call to their attention the most crucial need of the University. It is the fact that not a single mention is made in the catalogue of even a rudimentary course in the only native art form in America—jazz music.

The thought came to us while listening to the hot licks of Scotty Hester's combo waft into the windows of The Daily Tar Heel from the lawn concert after yesterday's football game. "Bonaparte's Retreat" was the name of the refrain to which we gave particular attention, and the sudden realization came (during the second chorus) that while Napoleon's military withdrawal from Moscow is covered fully by the Department of History, the music department is falling down on the job.

Most of the eager listeners to Scotty Hester's dixieland yesterday didn't know what they were hearing. A course, by an understander of the art, and offering full credit to takers, is in order. As guest lecturers we suggest Messrs. Simeon, Teagarden, and Shorty Rogers—living, breathing practitioners of a half-century's changing jazz.

There would be difficulties in such a course: Jazz being jazz, and never performed twice the same way, it might present frustrations to the uninitiated.

But until the music department lets down its hair and opens the door to exploration of the work of the great ad-lib musicians, there's a weak link in the pattern of folk-art education in the University.

The Mightiest Force

No reports are available on the extent to which the National Day of Prayer was observed in the United States. Nor can we expect at once to hear from all those behind the Iron Curtain who accepted President Eisenhower's invitation to join in "personal prayers for the devotion, wisdom and stamina to work unceasingly for a just and lasting peace for all mankind." Yet statistics are not needed. The faith which launched this appeal supports the expectation of great good from it.

Desire for a just peace is itself an unspoken prayer. Rising above personal sense or national prejudice, it asks humbly for divine aid in working for the good of all mankind. This unselfish, right desire of the individual (it is notable that Mr. Eisenhower made this prayer an individual matter) to seek and do God's will is the first step in "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man" which the Bible assures us "availeth much."

The President could perform no greater service than to evoke this spirit—at home and abroad. Much of the world has the impression that Americans think as belligerently and hatefully as a few Americans speak. It is good for such folk to hear from the one official who can speak for all his fellow countrymen that Americans "know the true cure lies not in guns and bombs but "in the spirits and minds of men."

We believe most Americans do know that. But we hope they were listening in to this message intended to pierce the Iron Curtain. For they must prove their faith with their works. Too often they appear to be worshipping the H-bomb, in relying on it or fearing it excessively—a form of idolatry as dangerous as any Moses warned against. They need the President's reminder that "faith is the mightiest force man has at his command." They need to express more of that reliance which really trusts because it understands God's goodness and omnipotence.

Some Sunday Words About David Mundy

Louis Kraar

REACTIONARY DAVID Mundy (author of the twice-a-week "Reaction Piece" column) has undoubtably filled a long-empty role on this newspaper — the role of a campus Westbrook Pegler.

Thus far, only two of his reactionary "Reaction Piece" pieces have been ground out, but already I've come to look forward to his views with a titillation not unlike the feeling one gets before a visit to the dentist.

Mundy has criticized the recently-formed National Association for a Free College Press because, he says, it will be able "to threaten possible critics with unfavorable publicity."

This reporter might remind David Mundy that this association wasn't formed to "threaten critics" of the press. It was formed to preserve what little freedom of the college press still exists in the nation today. Fortunately, for columnist Mundy, this newspaper is completely free. And because of it, his column runs — even on the "liberal" entrenched campus about which he writes.

THE CAMPUS probably will be interested to know that the author of "Reaction Piece" who wrote so cynically about the campus political parties is a supporter and former member of one of them himself — the Student Party.

In an obvious reference to his own political party, Mundy writes, "Promises are generally filled, since everyone wants to be re-elected. Next year we may even be promised maid service in the dorms. . .Everyone conveniently forgets, however, that to pay off takes money, student money."

OF THE rival University Party, Mundy writes, "Their members appear to be a bit more mature than those of the other party, a bit more aware that the impulses driving people to seek recognition in petty campus politics should have pased with adolescence."

From this, I can only assume that Mundy is still in adolescence because he has been moved by the "impulses driving people to recognition in petty campus politics" in such a great way as to associate himself with one of the "petty campus" political parties.

STILL IT'S nice to have the Pegler-like logic appearing in this paper twice-a-week. Mundy writes well for an adolescent who still dabbles in "petty campus politics," and I enjoy a good argument over my morning coffee.

So go to it, Mundy. Knock the free press on a "liberal" invested campus—a press that lets you print your ultra - conservative views, and banter the "petty" politics of the campus of which your are a part. I like it.

A RECENT check of the freshman activity cards by the campus Young Republicans Club revealed that 51 first-year students are interestede in the YRC. Three times that number indicated they were interested in the Young Demorats Club.

Could it be that the 51 are just curious — or does UNC really have 51 potential Republicans?

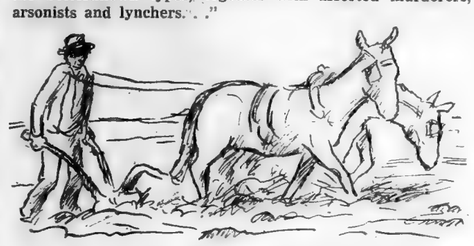
THE GRAIL room will be the scene of what could be a hot debate tonight when the Carolina Political Union discusses whether or not the recent Supreme Court decision will have an adverse effect on North Carolina's public schools. It starts at 8 o'clock, and I'm wondering if they will be through discussion when Graham Memorial closes at midnight.



'The South' Through The Eyes Of A Chapel Hillian

Beware That Po' Boy From Up At The Forks

By James Street

The following is excerpted from an article, "The South", which appears in the current Holiday Magazine. It was written by Chapel Hill author James Street and is reprinted by special permission from Holiday. Copyright 1954 by the Curtis Publishing Company.—Editor.

. . .The South can't be put in a book any more than the evils Pandora loosed can be put back in a box or the mystery of life in a test tube. However, regional writers are more and more catching the South in true colors and I am going to quote a book entitled Southern Accent to pitch the tone for this essay. . ."The South has somehow become transformed into a never-never, Kraft-Ebing land of psycopathia sexualis, peopled by sadists, masochists, rapists, satyrs, nymphomaniacs, and necrophiles, to mention a few of the betterknown types, together with assorted murderers, arsonists and lynchers. . ."

. . . .A while back a Northern writer sent me a questionnaire and explained that he was doing an article about the South. (Of course, it was contrary to custom for him to come down and see for himself.) One question was: "What is a Southerner?"

I replied that a Southerner is a fellow who doesn't know School of Business, so nail down your skin because pelt and pelf are fixing to fly.

. . . .Real Southern speech is somewhere between the the words of Dixie but who wants to holler when he hears the tune. That didn't satisfy, so I tried again.

A Southerner is a man who doesn't read many books but he has sense enough to know that Steinbeck's Cannery Row is not all the Pacific Coast, that Sinclair's Jungle is the midwest and the Midwest not in The Jungle, that Weidman's I Can Get It For You Wholesale is not typical of the Northeast, and then is flabbergasted by folks who think all the South is in Faulkner's Sanctuary.

. . . .It's not that the South remembers the Civil War, but, rather, that we can't forget it. It frowns at us from a thousand courthouse monuments and haunts us from a hundred thousand tombstones. It speaks to us from hotels named for our generals, from highways named for our heroes. It smirks at us from a thousand war books that either call us dull, brutal schizophrenes or puff us up as heroic gallants bowing and scraping and "honey-chiling" all over the place.

. . . .Oh, sure, we know that the Old South mostly is a myth; but the Garden of Eden story has served man well for a long time and the Old South legend touches us the same way: once upon a time, long, long ago, all the land was beautiful and all men were brave and all women were ladies. We know it is mostly myth, and we also know that only a few had it mighty good in the Old South while most folks had it mighty rough. But it's not the fact that influences us, it's the fancy.

. . . .The South still does not quite trust big money, and that's a hang-over from the old days, but we esteem Mammon without idolizing him. We disdain some folks who grub for money, but we ourselves are no slouches at the grab bag. When it comes to money, The Southern hand is often quicker than the Yankee eye, and our smile is wholly disarming. Beware the quaint character who takes off his wool hat and scratches his head and drawls, "Well, now I tell you, mister. I'm just a po' boy from up at the forks of the creek." He might be right out of the Harvard phony mush of the honey-chile buffoons and the careful enunciation of Edward R. Murrow, born in North Carolina. Nothing is so ludicrous to Southerners as Northerners trying to imitate Southern talk unless it's a Southerner away from home and mouthing a molasses routine for pay or for attention. . . Basically our talk is Elizabethan English (leavened by African) Shakespeare and Sir Francis Drake would get along just fine in the South, particularly among those vanishing few who still say "wont" for was not, "proud" for sensitive, "mought" for might.

. . . .We remain great one for family reunions. Usually we "reune" at the old family church for singing-all-day and dinner-on-the-ground. We tend the graves and sit around and tell rat-killing tales. Then the old folks take naps, the children get poison ivy, the young folks hold hands and sooner or later a few of the boys hit ofr the timber and pass a bottle and set in to fist fighting, wrestling or harmonizing. If we can't let off steam one way, we will another; often in hollering out our joy in the miracle of living. It's this hollering just for the hell of hollering that became the Rebel yell and you still hear it every now and then if the dogs are running good, the fish are biting or the whisky holds out.

The Ram Sees

Ray Jefferies, who is assistant something-or-other in the Dean of Student Affairs office, is quoted on Friday's front page as saying, re the men's dormitory coed visiting agreement, that there is no worry about powder rooms for coed visitors at the present time, but that if a need arose for such facilities, the group would make further considerations. Seeing as how there is a little drinking at football games, and the dorm social rooms are open to women for two hours after the games, we suggest the Mr. Jeffries assemble the proper equipment and stand in readiness for an urgent call, because sometime during that two-hour visising period we believe the "need" Jefferies spoke of will probably arise.

Tom Creasy, who is the president of the student body and the most likeable fellow in the world, can say some awfully stupid things if he puts his mind to it. Witness: "For the good of the student body I would uphold the right of any organization to go into executive session so long as they do not violate this right by using it to withhold from the student body information which it has a right to know." Come, come, Tom, don't be naive. Who's going to decide whether the stuff to be withheld is information which the student body has or hasn't the right to know?

'Some Day That'll All Be Done By Atomic Power'

Dr. Syngman Rhee

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON. — One of the four octogenarians on whom the United States is leaning in vital parts of the world is Dr. Syngman Rhee, cantankerous, crusading president of South Korea, without whose stubborn patriotism Korea would not be even half alive today; yet whose stubbornness today may either upset the precarious peace of the Far East or prevent the orderly reconstruction of his country.

Dr. Rhee is now 79 years old. And like another old man, Chancellor Adenauer, on whom we are relying in another vital area, he cannot last forever. And because Chiang Kai-Shek also is reaching twilight of his years with no one groomed to succeed him; and because 79-year-old Winston Churchill, our best champion in England, is certain to step down soon, realist diplomats are wondering whom the United States intends to lean on after these octogenarians are gone. Are we grooming no young men for the future?

At best, Dr. Rhee can carry on only two or three years longer. In Germany, Konrad Adenauer can remain Chancellor only a short time. Yet our whole policy in Germany is aimed at arming a government which three years from now may put the arms we give it in the hands of the anti-American forces almost certain to succeed the aged patriot of West Germany.

In Formosa, with no one trained to suceed the aging champion of Nationalist China, how can we buck Red China's entry into the United Nations after Chiang is gone?

Unfortunately the dominating dispositions of elder statesmen are such that it's difficult to train successors. In Korea, Dr. Rhee has fired 200 cabinet ministers. For he is the whole show. He is South Korea. Without him there would be no South Korea, and unless you please him you serves not one day longer in his cabinet.

His grit, his determination have mdae Korea what it is today. But his refusal to cooperate with others may tear down the very thing he has built.

For when Rhee leaves this earthly scene, as leave he must, the man likely to succeed him is Lee Bum Suk, a fascist-minded undependable who could embrace communism with the same facility he embraces republicanism.

Such is our diplomacy of looking to the past, not the future. On such frail cornerstones is our policy, in an area drenched with American blood, based today.

When you look abck over the vista of Syngman Rhee's nearly eighty yeras you can understand why he is sometimes difficult to deal with. During those years he has been beaten with bamboo rods daily for seven months. He has had oil paper wrapped round his wrists and set on fire. He has had his fingers mashed so horribly that even today he blows on them to keep them warm. He has had to wear a 20-pound cangue around his neck and sit with his feet and hands locked in stocks.

Editor:

In reference to Louis Kraar's "Carolina Front" column of Friday, September 24: The writer manifested a brazen ineptness in his admitted inability to enlighten the Japanese student who asked "Just what kind of democracy has America given us when you have men like McCarthy?"

As to my sentiments regarding McCarthy, I hope the Senate censure committee deides to deport him.

However, Mr. Kraar failed as a citizen when he regarded the foreigner's question as enigmatic and unanswerable. Indeed, Kraar implied a condemnation of our form of government and sympathy with the Japanese student's misgivings toward our democracy with his silence.

He should have simply and patiently explained to the dubious lad that, first Joe McCarthy is a free man; escond, he is a U. S. citizen; and, third, he is a U. S. Senator. By virtue of the first, he may do as he wishes, within the law; by virtue of the second, he is guaranteed the rights of the first, and by virtue of the third, he can sound off a little bit more than most of us, thanks to Senatorial immunity.

As a further example of the generosity & magnanimity of our democracy, the Japanese could have been consoled with the assurance that no punitive measures would be taken against him for publicly voicing his doubts about the government, a comfort he couldn't have enjoyed ten years ago in his own country.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others. . . — Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was squatted outside The Playmakers Theatre on the campus peering in the side door, when I saw him. Tsk-tsk!

"I ain't ogling the acterines, Roger," The Horse denied my inferential clucking a mite too quickly. "Not that there aren't some ogleworthy Juliets leoparding around on the stage, yassuh! But alas, this is a rehearsal for a heavily dresed play."

Alas? Was The Theatre, then, only burleycue to The Horse? Had The Horse no appreciation for Pantomine, Art, Verisimilitude, Grace, Literature, Scenery, Lighting, Costuming.?

"I have," The Horse sighed, "but Dior made them also-rans when he devised his new high-style Mother Hubbards which the femmes are wearing nowadays."

What did The Horse mean, Mother Hubbards?

"Wearing-apparel which covers everything while touching nothing," The Horse growled. "Like a politician's campaign speech, only worse. At least, a politician's campaign-speech features lotsa promise. These Dior deals the dames are wearing now promise nothing but higher clothing bills. Me, I'm a Marilyn Monroe stylist, myself."

Well, that style had its points. What was this play being rehearsed?

"It is yclept 'The Croosible,'" The Horse informed me. "And it is real up-to-date despite the costooming."

The Crucible? Arthur Miller's smash Broadway dramatic hit? Waaaaaadaminit, waaaaaaaadaminit! Wasn't that the play about the Witchcraft persecutions? It was true history dramatized, The Crucible! But as for being modern—why, that had happened back in 1692-93!

"Quit showin' off, Roger," The Horse chittered. "I took Doc Hugh Lefler's justly famous Colonial History course here on the campus, too. The North Carolina part of it, anyway."

Well, certainly Salem was in Massachusetts, not in the Old North State.

"Yeah, but Doc Lefler armed us with practical things," The Horse stated proudly. "He told us what the Damyankees sneered at we-uns about, and provided us-uns with things to sner at them-uns about. Salem Witchcraft Persecutions were high on the list."

Yes; but how did that make it modern, The Crucible?

"There's a lotta stuff going on to-day, Roger," The Horse said soberly, "that rivals Old Salem at its worst. Cotton Mather of Salem has his modern counterpart in Cotton-Mouth McCarthy, of our allegedly august United States Senate; the Reverend Samuel Parris, of Salem, is the archetype of a cult of present-day clergymen who run too Christian young ministers from campus pulpits because they try to live Christianity instead of just shouting it of a Sunday, or because another minister thinks it is safe to preach Christ, The Savior to unsegregated souls instead of to segregated epidermises. Yup, The Croosible is real modern. It is a warning to us that mass-hysteria is still mass-hysteria, and that crooked minds can hide behind the straightest of faces. It is a warning that—oh-oh!"

I followed The Horse's cross-eyed oglo of concentration and I saw upon the Playmakers' stage the several causes of The Horse's approving exclamation. And they weren't Actors Trotman and Sasser!

"Dior, you have been tested in The Croosible and beaten at your own game!" The Horse apostrophized the traitorous French male. "Aha, Roger, what say you?"

I said I agreed. I said I would like to see Dior negate those lines, by gum!

"Well, now, I wouldn't," The Horse snapped. "Nor do I think he could. Am I alone in my opinion?"

Mr. Wump whumped from a neighboring bush: and even Neckley, who is responsible for the high-level view in The Horse's world, managed a squeak of approval.

"An upstanding pair!" The Horse applauded his fellow-sightseers.

Or. . .has The Horse keener vision that I suspect. . .?

South Carolina Upsets Army In Last Quarter, 34-20

Tar Heel Sports

By TOM PEACOCK

TEEDEE BULLOCK DESERVES his chance.

Anyone familiar with the heretofore third string quarterback's story knows that it is filled with tough breaks, yet Bullock has shown in the past he may easily be the best signal caller on the team. Yesterday, a day when all the quarterbacks were looking good, Bullock stood out like an inflamed digit the short while he was in the game. Taking nothing away from the the excellent jobs done by both Al Long and Marshall Newman, Bullock satisfied the fans most and seemed to handle the team best.

Circumstances didn't lend themselves to a true appraisal of Bullock's job, however. He went in the game when State was tired and Carolina was deep in its territory. The game was virtually won before Teedee led the team to its insurance touchdown. Bullock deserves a start so he can show what he has from the very beginning.

Briefly, this is Bullock's story: As a freshman he started out at halfback, switched to quarter, and caught the fancy of the crowd against Virginia when he ran 69 yards for a score while Carolina sank in ignominious defeat. His sophomore year he was outstanding in the Maryland game until he hurt his ankle, an injury that never left him. Spring practice last year did without Teedee, who underwent an operation for internal injuries and missed the whole show.

THE CAROLINA COACHES could only shake their heads and shrug their shoulders when asked about Bullock before practice this fall, pointing out he missed the all-important spring workouts. Then, on the first day of fall practice, Bullock hit a blocking dummy and suffered a concussion, putting him out again. He kept at it though, and was allowed to start practicing last week. It would have been an injustice to Bullock if the coaches had played him too much yesterday, with his lack of preparation. But he has proven he is a bright boy, a good football player, and he will be ready soon.

Bullock is an active boy, with extra-curricular activities other than football. Some people take the attitude that football- and school is enough for any man to do, and that something must suffer if a player takes on more. It has been said Bullock doesn't want to play enough, that when the going gets rough he isn't there with the goods. Teedee will tell anyone he wants to play football, that he loves football.

Bullock deserves a chance, and I'm sure he'll get one. It will be up to him after that. The Ayden junior has a large following of people who firmly believe that he is the best quraterback on the team. It can't be denied that he is a cute ball handler and a good runner, one of the best. He calls a wide open game as shown by the plays he called while leading Carolina to a score yesterday, and that pleases the crowd.

Coach Barclay simply said that all three of his quarterbacks looked good and he was pleased. Coach Bill Edwards, who makes backfields his specialty, watched the game from the press box and gave instructions on the phone. He couldn't hide his pleasure over Bullock's work, and said, "Yes, he deserves a chance. And I'm sure he'll get one."

A hurt doesn't help the team a bit. The question is, can he take it? I think so. But it's up to him.

NOTES: CONNIE GRAVITTE seemed to be victimized twice on interference calls . . . Don Klochak has solved the fullback problem, but he needs to run with his head up, not watching his shoes. He can punt, too . . . Larry Parker showed he can get a good ofot into the ball . . . Bill Koman did a lot of wrecking from his backer-up spot . . . Will Frye looked like the outstanding lineman, and Dick Starner and Norman Lane made Carolina fans breath easier on the end situation . . . Why did Frye stand still on a punt return once? . . . The team missed halfback Ken Keller, as was expected, especially around the outside . . . In fact, Carolina didn't do much around ends at all . . . There was every indication that spirit was at a new high before the game, but from the sound of things yesterday it looks like we'll have to get Nose Jones back . . . Jim Fountain does a good job and has excellent ideas, but let's not get so engrossed in the game we forget to lead the cheers . . . Is it fashionable to curse again?

Aldridge Leads Duke Victory

Blue Devils Score 32 Points In Final Period

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 25 (AP)—Long-legged Bryant Aldrich broke down the door and a hard-hitting Duke team poured through to a crushing 52-0 victory over "new look" Pennsylvania today in an intersectional football opener at Franklin Field.

Coach Bill Murray cleaned his bench of 40 men and finished with third and fourth stringers in handing Penn its first humilating defeat since Army's Doc Blanchard and Glenn Davis rolled up a 61-0 score in 1945.

It was a sad debut for Penn's new coach, Steve Sebe, who brought in a new regime from Michigan State.

Aldrich a six-foot, 197-pounder from Kinston, N. C., personally marshalled a 76-yard touchdown drive which broke a scoreless deadlock late in the second period and set Duke's awesome scoring machine into motion .

Before the day had ended before a crowd of 35,000 the Blue Devils had pushed over two more touchdowns in the third period and five in the fourth in a out which saw Sam Eberdt, son of a famous Alabama great, also reach for stardom.

Eberdt, a senior fullback from Arlington, Va., scored two touchdowns in the last period and set up a third with a pass interception.

Aldrich also accounted for two touchdowns, his first coming on a two-yard plunge after he had picked up 65 of the 7 yards in the second period and his second in the final period on a four-yard plunge.

Other Duke scorers were Jeerry Barger, on a one-yard sneak after a 69-yard drive: Sonny Sorrell on a 35-yard pass from Buddy Bass; Bernie Blaney on 20-ya d run and Bill Conner on a 55-yard maneuver after taking a lateral from Eberdt, who had intercepted a Penn pass.

Aldrich and halfback Bob Pascal of Bloomfield, N. J., carried the Duke attack through the first three periods when Penn effectively bottled the Devils headline starts. Worth (a million) Lutz and Jerry Barger. But it was Eberdt, a bench sitter for the last two years, who fired the last quarter assault, scoring on a 14-yard play and another time from seven yards out.

Brazel, Caskey Score Twice

Wet Ground, Fumbles Injure Army Chances

WEST POINT, N. Y. Sept. 25 (AP)—South Carolina double-platooned a green and undermanned Army football team with a horde of fleet backs today and handed the Cadets a crushing 34-20 defeat in their opening game of the season.

It was only the third time in Army football history that the Cadets had lost an opener. It happened in 1890, when Army lost the first and only game it played. And again when Villanova won in 1951.

Carl Brazell and Mike Caskey, who scored two touchdowns apiece, were the leaders in the potent South Carolina running attack, but it operated just about as well when Bill Tarrer and Tommy Woodlee replaced them at the halfback spots.

Four of the five South Carolina touchdowns were scored on the ground and three of them on drives of 96, 97 and 80 yards.

Army suffered a crushing blow when Bob Kyasky, heralded sophomore halfback who had done much to keep the Cadets in the game, went out with an injured shoulder just after South Carolina's Gamecocks had tied the score at 14-14 late in the second period.

A series of costly fumbles, due in part to a wet ball after showers had drenched the field just before the game began, also hurt Army's chances. The first two touchdowns were set up by recovered fumbles and Army, leaning 14-7, seemed headed for another, when Pat Lebel fumbled on the South Carolina four and tackle Bob Schwartz recovered for the Gamecocks.

From there South Carolina went all the way, with just one pass, to score and tie it up 14-14.

In the third period the Carolinians opened up again with wide runs and pitchouts from the sliding T formation that seemed to have the Army defense completely bewildered. They moved 93 yards this time, all on the ground, to send Tommy Woodlee over.

Tech Downs Wake, 32 To 0; Georgia Edges Clemson Tigs

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 25 (AP)—Virginia Tech's fast-moving backs, operating behind vicious blocking, reduced Wake Forest's usually stout defenses to a shambles here today as the Gobblers routed the Deacons 32-0 in a football game that featured Richmond's sixth annual Tobacco Festival

Halfback Howie Wright of Dover, Del., a defensive specialist back in the days of the two-platoon system, was the most offensive of all the Gobblers.

Wright brought the crowd of 17,000 to its feet with two spectacular touchdown gestures. He grabbed quarterback Bill Cranwell's second quarter pass on a play covering 62 yards and ran 25 yards unmolested.

Wright struck again in the third quarter, springing off right tackle for 64 yards and six more points.

Before Wright's dashes, quarterback Johnny Dean had put the Techmen out front on the first play of the second quarter with a one-foot sneak.

Georgia-Clemson

ATHENS, Ga., Sept. 25 (AP)—Slim Jimmy Harper, endowed today with a large measure of predecessor Zeke Bratkowski's passing wizardry, hurled the Georgia Bulldogs to a 14-7 triumph over Clemson.

Harper, a 6-ft 1, 171-pound junior from Thomasville, Ga., guided Georgia to a tying touchdown in the second quarter—a 55-yard drive in eight plays that included six aerials. With the Clemson defense loose, he sent fullback Bob Clemens 17 yards up the middle for the score.

Then, with the final quarter half gone, he lofted a 32-yard beauty deep into the end zone to halfback Jimmy Williams for the six-pointer that gave the Southeastern Conference Bulldogs a mild upset. The betting fraternity called the game even, but sideline observers rated Clemson a slight favorite.

Clemson, a highly regarded team in the powerful Atlantic CoCast Conference, hung up the first six points on the second play of the second quarter when Sophomore halfback Jim Coleman scurried over from the three to climax an 83-yard drive consisting entirely of ground plays from a winged-five formation which fooled the sophomore-studded Georgia line.

Georgia	0	7	0	7	—14

Carolina Smashes N. .C. State For Eighth Successive Time

period Marshall faded back to his own 25, but before he could get the ball away cleanly, Al D'Angelo, State guard, batted the ball out of his arms. Nardone, the other State guard, grabbed the pigskin before it hit the ground and raced away from the milling throng to State's only touchdown.

Carolina was bugged from the very beginning by an old nemesis . . . the fumble. State kicked off and moved to its 30 in three plays. On fourth down, as Newman tried for a first and 10, he fumbled and the ball was picked up by State's Ben Kapp. The Wolfpack then moved to Carolina's 13 where a field goal attempt by John Bagonis was wide. Most of the remainder of the first period was played in Carolina territory.

Carolina Scores

It was late in the second quarter before Carolina began to move with determination. The Tar Heels drove into State territory and as the downs ran out, Larry Parker punted to the State 12. State halfback Ted Kilyk ran back down the sidelines to the UNC 30 but a clipping penalty left State on its own 11.

An exchange of punts and a State fumble, recovered by Carolina guard Roland Perdue, placed the ball on State's nine. Newman moved the Tar Heels to the two and on the next play took it over on a quarterback sneak. Gravitte converted and Carolina took the lead, 7-0.

Less than three minutes after the third period opened Carolina scored again. Newman intercepted a Billy Franklin pass on the 50 where he was immediately tackled. Larry McMullen, operating out of the fullback position, drove through the line to the State 44. Newman then hit Gravitte about 20 yards downfield and Connie waltzed to the goal. Newman's kick was deflected by State's Harry Lodge.

Six minutes later Nardone snatched Newman's lob and tallied for State.

Klochak's running was one of the highlights of the Carolina victory. The 213-pound fullback carried eight times for an average of five yards per carry. In the last quarter he bulled and stamped like a mad bull, his head down and legs pumping him toward the goal. McMullen also looked good, averaging 4.2 yards per try.

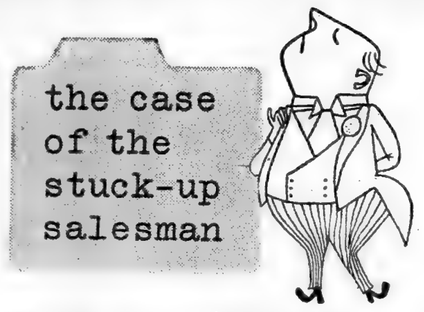
Meyner To Speak

The Honorable Robert B. Meyner, governor of the state of New Jersey, will speak here on Oct. 8 in Hill Hall.



The governor's address will be sponsored by the Carolina Forum, sponsor of many speakers during the past few years. Gov. Meyner will speak at 8:30 p. m., and will hold a question and answer period after his talk.

Gov. Meyner will arrive at Raleigh-Durham Airport on October 8 at 1 p. m. Upon his arrival at the University, he will be taken on a tour of the campus. At 6:30 he will be feted to a private dinner, and from there he will proceed to Hill Hall for the 8:30 address.

The Carolina Forum, headed by Joel Fleishman, is the official agency of the student government of the University. Its main purpose is to bring leaders of state, national and world importance to the campus.

Robert B. Meyner was born in Easton, Pa., the son of a loomfixer in a silk industry. He moved to Phillipsburg at an early age, where he received his public school education. During his life there he worked as a newsboy, grocery clerk and apprentice coremaker and silkweaver. He went to Lafayette College and Columbia University Law School, where he cut his political teeth by giving addresses from sound trucks at street corner meetings and high school rallies.

In 1953 he was elected governor of New Jersey by a plurality of more than 150,000 votes. He was inaugurated January 19, 1954

When police arrived at the college haberdashery, they shook their heads in disbelief. Instead of being gagged and bound, the salesman was actually glued to the floor. They took quick stock of the clues . . . an empty glue pot, several odd-shaped pieces of cloth scattered about, an empty show-case, an empty cash drawer. Ingenious shirt-robbery!

"Ugg glub," said the salesman, still all stuck-up . . . stuck down, rather.

When they finally got him extricated with hot water and chisels, he thanked them nicely and said, "What's the matter with you jerks? I haven't been robbed."

"No," he explained, "I was simply making a demonstration of the Van Heusen Century shirt for some of the boys. Showed them why the revolutionary one-piece Century collar just won't wrinkle ever. Told 'em how regular collars are made of three layers of cloth, "glued" and stitched together. I glued a set, just for emphasis . . . learned to demonstrate in Woolworth's."

"Get on with it," said the detective.

"Well, I showed 'em how these 3-piece jobs wrinkle and wilt quickly even with starch or stays. I said the Van Heusen Century collar would stay neat always—without starch or stays—or their money back. When I told 'em that Van Heusen Centurys gave 'em lots more wear than ordinary shirts, yet cost the same price (just $3.95 for whites and $4.50 for colors) they bought me out. I was so overjoyed, I did a little jig and tripped over the glue pot. Got stuck up."

"Oh, yeah?" yeahed the detective. "Well, where's all the dough?"

tablished a study of book store profits at Carolina, State and WC to be presented at its next meeting, and agreed to confer with President Gordon Gray on abolition of compulsory classes scheduled outside regular class hours.

President Gray, in preliminary remarks to the Council, asked the members to help make consolidation work. He said, "It is up to all of us to make consolidation of the University as effective and useful as possible."

And Gray took note of criticism he has received for not "being close to the students." He said (as a repetition of a remark he made to the CUSC last year) that he regretted his acquaintanceship with students is so limited. He asked the Council for "practical suggestions with respect to that problem."

scored one of the Tar Heel's touchdowns in the 20-6 win, summed up the feelings of many of his teammates. "They were just better than we thought, but of course they are always good when they play us."

Guard Bill Koman, who Barclay and Bass had special praise for, felt that the State team had improved "600 per cent" over last season. "Their defense was really good. I think that we'll be as good as any before the season is over, though. We'll play a lot better when (Ken) Keller recovers completely from that bad ankle."

Almost everyone was in agreement that halfback George Marinkov was State's outstanding player. Barclay felt that the entire State line played well and singled out center Dick Tonn for a fine performance. "State has a fine team," the Carolina coaches all agreed.

Barclay was particularly pleased with his quarterbacks. "I believe that (Marshall) Newman, (Al) Long games and called signals well. Don and (Len) Bullock played good Klochak played a fine second half and really came into his own," the Tar Heel mentor said.

Coaches Bass and Bill Edwards saw nothing but hard work in the future for the Carolina gridders. "We're going to have to really work and do a lot of improving," Bass said.

Music Series Starts Second Year Soon

The Hill Hall Music Series, now in its second year since its opening last fall, is this year presenting to the student of Carolina some of the best musical entertainment to be obtained. In a series of eight performances, entertainers from practically every field of music will be represented.

Among those to be presented are performers in piano, string instruments and voice. The programs scheduled are to be every other Tuesday night starting on Oct. 5, with the name, Tuesday Evening Series.

The first program will be presented by Graham Memorial, and is to be held at Hill Music Hall Tuesday, Oct. 5, at 8 p. m. John Ellis, pianist, is the center of this program.

The selections Mr. Ellis will play are: Beethoven's "Adante" in F major, Bach's Partita Number IV in D major, including "Overture," "Allemande," "Courante," "Aria," "Sarabande," "Menuet," and "Gigue," Braham's Intermezzo" in B flat minor, Op. 117, No. 2, and Rhapsody in E flat major Op. 119, No. 4. Following the intermission, Mr. Ellis will perform Prokofieff's Third Sonata (1917), Chopin's Ballade in F major, and Nocturne in C Sharp Minor, Op. 27, No. 1.

John Ellis was born in Raleigh. From there he moved to Sherman, Tex. where he spent most of his earlier years. It was there that he received his first musical training He left Sherman and returned to North Carolina to enroll at the University. While here he studied under Dr. Newman of Hill Music Hall for four years. Upon graduating he was awarded the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts. After his graduation he was appointed to the teaching staff of the Julliard School. He is also a faculty member of the Westtown School in Pennsylvania. Mr. Ellis has appeared as soloist with the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra, as well as in recital at many universities and colleges in the East and South.

Appearing after Ellis will be Maurice Wilk, a violinist from New York. The program for November 2 is to be announced later. Nov. 16 will see the Chapel Hill Choral Club, with Joel Carter conducting and Mary G. Clark as celloist. Following the Choral Club is the University Symphony Orchestra on Nov. 30, with Earl Slocum and William Newman as pianist. Occasionally one of the players came through the door with a bruised cheek, a scraped nose or a slightly colored jaw. With the entrance of a man they obviously knew, one of the team, Ted Kilyk, approached and said "Say Doc', What am I 'spose to do?" And he held up a bandaged arm. "I'll be with you in a minute, son; we'll cut that jersey off."

The entire coaching staff, from Coach Edwards down, seemed pleased with the showing the N. C. State team had made, and rightly so. They almost turned the trick on the Tar Heels in the first half, with some speedy backs and a few Carolina bobbles.

"Carolina has a nice team. We enjoyed playing them, and I wish them luck." With that remark, Coach Edwards turned and began to walk up the aisle speaking to each player as he passed.

til her name was called on the football field. She previously won out in semi-finals conducted here, in which three UNC girls were chosen, and came out on top of the finals, held in secret yesterday morning.

Other Contestants

The UNC coed won out over eight other contestants from UNC, Woman's College and State College.

Vivacious Vesla Johannessen, from Kristiansund N., Norway, plainly had the best time at yesterday's final eliminations. The blue-eyed, brown-haired WC freshman said she had been in the United States for three weeks, and she didn't quite know who Andy Griffith is. The Norwegian miss, who says she stands 172 centimeters tall ("I don't know how many that is in feet"), said she was planning to stay at Woman's College for one year, then go back to Kristiansund N.

UNC Senior Martha Crowell, from Hendersonville, is 5'7½" tall, has green eyes and brown hair. She was in last spring's Yackety-Yack beauty court.

Miss Barbara Stone, another Hill entry, is a senior, majoring in elementary education. She was chosen Miss Chapel Hill last spring, and competed for the title of Miss North Carolina. Miss Stone, also a green-eyed, brown-haired beauty, is 5'9" tall and from Bethesda, Md.

State's Entrant

State College's one entrant, Miss Marilyn Collins, is a sophomore textile student who plans to go into textile design. The 5'6", brown-eyed, brown-haired State student is from Raleigh.

Another WC contestant, Miss Carol Epstein, is from Baltimore, Md. Miss Epstein is a freshman in drama at WC who "probably" will go into television work later on. She's 5'6", with brown eyes and black hair.

A first year commercial student at WC, Miss Jo Ann Beasley, is a 5'4", brown-eyed, black-haired beauty. Miss Beasley is from Salisbury, and plans to go into commercial work.

Nancy Childress, 5'4", blue-eyed, dark brown-haired miss, is a freshman in home economics at Woman's College. Miss Childress, from Washington, D. C., said she didn't know "whether I'll stay at WC four years or not. I don't know whether I want to stay in the South that long or not."

University Painter Undoes Weekend's Doings

While UNC Beat State, State Vandalized UNC

Three noticeable acts of vandalism were reported; if there were others, they went unnoticed.

"Silent Sam," the confederate monument next to Graham Memorial, was splashed with black paint and a beer bottle was attached to his rifle sling. Then, to top the evening off, the initials "N-C-S" were burned into the grass on the lawn of the planetarium building.

Director of Operations J. S. Bennett, who is in charge of grounds, declined to comment on the incident.

Only Two Arrests

In spite of the fact that 22,000 people attended the Carolina-State football game, only two students were arrested Saturday night.

One student was arrested for drunken driving while the other made the grave error of parking in front of a fire hydrant. The Chapel Hill Police were happy to note that there was not one student picked up at the football game for drunkeness, and they also reported that they did not see any student intoxicated.

Student Pieter Hogaboom removes a Schlitz bottle (empty) from the sling of The Confederate Soldier's (Silent Sam's) ever-ready rifle. The bottle, along with quite a quantity of black paint, appeared on Sam after last weekend's Carolina-State game. Pieter hastened to tell reporters that he didn't put the bottle up there.—R. B. No Action Yet On IFC-DTH Disagreement

The Inter-Fraternity Council met last night but did not consider again the question of whether to allow The Daily Tar Heel to cover its meetings.

The reason for the Council's failure to consider the question again last night was the sparse attendance at the meeting, according to Ed McCurry, IFC vice presridents.

The IFC voted last week to keep its meetings secret. Since then it has been suggested that the Council might be willing to have a reporter at its regular meetings if it could retain the right of calling a secret executive session to consider matters which it did not want reported.

McCurry indicated that the IFC will probably consider the matter at its meeting next Monday night.

Chess Meeting

The Chess Club will hold its first meeting of the year tonight at 8 o'clock in Roland Parker rooms 1 and 2 of Graham Memorial. Plans for tournaments and other activities will be discussed and a rapid transit tournament will be held for all these who would like to participate. There will also be instruction for beginners and interested advanced players. All are cordially invited.

Assistantship Grants Are Obtainable

Graduate students or secondary teachers of French and German may now attain Fulbright assistship awards which will enable them to study in France and Germany with maintenance and incidental expenses paid. The persons selected need only instruct conversational English in the institutes of the countries involved.

The selections, to be based on academic achievement, knowledge of the country's language in which the applicants study and physical Jan. 15, 1955. Applicants may apder the auspices of the Institute of International Education in association with the French and German Ministries of Education.

A joint board of American, French and German educators will announce the nominees, who in turn will be given a Fulbright grant.

SP Delays Committee Findings

By RUTH DALTON

A committee report was begun and then abruptly stopped when it was learned that a member of The Daily Tar Heel reporting staff was present at the meeting of the Student Party last night.

David Reid, vice chairman, who presided in the absence of Chairman Joel Fleishman, called on Charles Wolf for a report on the committee appointed at the SP meeting last week to investigate or formulate plans for introducing a bill in the Legislature which would prevent executive sessions from being closed to the press.

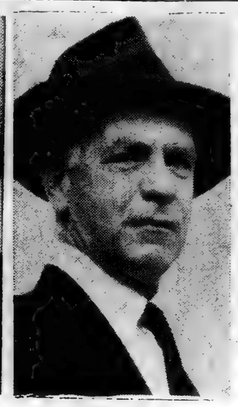
The committee was organized after The Daily Tar Heel was barred from an IFC meeting. Wolf started by commenting that members of the newspaper staff had come running to the SP last Monday night for the party to take action. At this point, Wolf asked if a member of The Daily Tar Heel staff were present, and upon receiving an affirmative answer, he stated that he had no report to make.

After some discussion a motion was passed to give the committee another week in which to formulate its report.

Wolf also presented the program for the evening by giving his conception of the most pressing problems on the campus which the SP should try to remedy.

Among these were a means of improving or changing fraternity rushing, integration of student government, the introduction of a civil service system into student government and investigation of current social problems on campus.

Wolf also passed out copies of some 86 problems of varying importance which he thought that the party should consider during the year.



Chuck May was elected unanimously to fill the vacancy of Dorm Men's 5 in the Legislature.

Advisory Budget Commission Group Decides UNC's Biennial Fate Today

The State's Advisory Budget Commission met with Governor William B. Umstead in Raleigh yesterday to begin deciding what recommendations it will make to the legislature concerning the University's budget request for the next biennium.

It has been hinted that the commission will consider also whether to recommend to the legislature a raise in tuition and dormitory fees.

The possibility of increased fees came up at a meeting of the commission two weeks ago during which Consolidated University Vice President W. D. Carmichael told commission members he would ask them to join him in requesting the legislature to pass an act allowing the University to build dormitories with loans to be repaid from rentals.

Commission member LeRoy Martin asked State College Chancellor Carey Bostian what would be the effect on his student body if fees were increased. Bostian answered that an increase would "deprive many youths of an opportunity to obtain technical training."

Since then Bostian, Prersident Gordon Gray and Chancellor Edward K. Graham of Woman's College have come out against a raise in student fees.

John Larkins of Raleigh is commission chairman. The commission will meet with Umstead again today.

The legislature will convene Jan. 5 and consider the commission's recommendations. It usually follows the recommendations in making appropriations.

What the commission decides to recommend will not be made public until the legislature convenes.

Gray, Chancellor Robert B. House of Carolina, Graham and Bostian met with the commission earlier this month to ask appropriations for the 1955-7 biennium.

Gray asked for an increase in his general administration budget from $79,207 this year to $129,263 for the first year of the next biennium and $188,255 for the second year.

Gray also asked for $15,000 for the new office of business manager-treasurer and secretary.

House requested an increase in the maintenance budget for the University at Chrpel Hill of $905 044 for 1955-56 and one of $867,-738 for 1956-57.

The University at Chapel Hill requested $1,603,500 to build a new pharmacy building and remodel Howell Hall for occupancy by the School of Journalism.

Other requested appropriations for permanent improvements were an addition to, and remodeling of, Peabody Hall: $735,000; dormitory for men, including dining room and kitchen: $1,000,000, and an addition to the physics building: $760,-000.

The Advisory Budget Commission makes its recommendations to the legislature each biennium to a book called "The Budget." The book lists expenditures for the last biennium, requests for the new biennium, and the commission's recommendations as to how much of the requested appropriations should be made.

The book includes similar data on all state departments, institutions and agencies to which appropriations are made.

For Maryland Game:

Classless Saturday

The University Administration has granted an official holiday for Saturday, Oct. 16, so the student body may attend the UNC-Maryland game at College Park, Md.

Tom Creasy, president of the student body, said yesterday "Last May I submitted the petition for the caravan weekend to Chancellor House, and along with his favorable recommendation the petition was handed over to the schedule committee. One week later, on May 19, I received a letter from Dean C. H. Holman in which he said, 'It is the decision of the committee that a holiday should be granted for Oct. 1. No classes will be held on this day and it will be considered a football holiday. Please note that as a scheduled holiday the customary absence regulation effecting absences before and after a holiday will be in effect'."

Creasy further stated "A caravan weekend is something we have all looked forward to for several years. I am happy it could be made possible this year. Head Cheerleader Jim Fountain has done a tremendous job getting the weekend organized. At present both Jim and University Club Chairman Bob Litaker are busy arranging transportation, hotel reservations and all the necessary details of the weekend."

Phi Inaugural Slated Tonight

The Assembly of the Philanthropic Literary Society will officially begin its one-hundred and fifty-sixth year with inaugural ceremonies tonight at 8 o'clock in the Phi Hall on the fourth floor of New East.

Dr. I. G. Greer, executive vice president of the Business Foundation here at the University, will deliver the inaugural addrerss. Dr. Greer is widely known throughout the state. He was for many years a professor at Appalachian State Teachers College and superintendent of the Baptist Orphanage at Oxford. He came here to head an office set up to foster the growth of the School of Business Administration. Dr. Greer will speak on college citizenship. Mr. Claude Teague, business manager of the University, will introduce Dr. Greer.

Officers to be inaugurated this year are: Speaker, Lewis Brumfield, a junior from Yadkinville; Speaker Pro Tem, Richard Iobst, Danville, Va.; Parliamentarian, Wade Matthews, Winston-Salem; Sergeant-at-arms, Frank Warren, Clerk, Harry Whitlock, Baltimore, Md.; Carolina Forum Representative, Bill Porterfield, Goldsboro, and Treasurer, James Duvall.

IDC Prexy 'Very Pleased' with Weekend

"I am very pleased with the visiting in the dormitories over the week-end. All the reports that I have received are quite favorable," Manning Muntzing, president of the Interdormitory Council, said yesterday.

Muntzing had warned dorm residents prior to the week-end that students "must be on their toes" so that "we can expect visiting on other game days to follow."

As to how much the plan was used by students, Muntzing said "The few dorms that I observed were busily engaged with entertaining their guests."

The president of the IDC said "I feel that the advisors did a tremendous job of making every one feel at home. As soon as the officers are elected, they will assume this responsibility with the assistance of the advisors. I'm sure they will do an equally fine job. Not only have the advisors done a good job, but the entire roll of residents, I feel, have responded to the new privileges.

"Some dorms not having a TV set used record players or radios, belonging to the residents for the enjoyment of the guests. Such gestures as this and the residents' making a special effort to keep the social rooms clean show the fine way in which the residents in the dorms have responded to the visiting agreement."

Roy Holsten of the Office of Student Affairs said on Sept. 22 that the present agreement was for football season only and may or may not be the first step in a permanent plan.

Di Senate

The Dialectic Senate will meet tonight at 8 o'clock in Di Hall, third floor, New West. Bev Webb will introduce the bill of the evening, which provides that men should be allowed to consume alcoholic beverages at parties with coeds, as long as the coeds do not participate.

Lynn Chandler will preside in the absence of the President, Joel Fleishman. Guests are invited to attend and participate in the debate, with the regular five-minute limitation on speaking time.

Yack Contract Signing

The Yackety-Yack office will be open this week between 2 and 5 p. m. for the purpose of signing contracts for pages in the '55 yearbook.

The contracts must be signed by representatives of organizations wanting the pages.

Business manager for the Yack, Tom Spain, said yesterday that all societies and organizations which had not paid for their pages in last year's Yack would not be eligible for pages this year. Contracts for these organizations may be signed on payment of last year's bill.

Anybody Seen Our Vehicle?

Draw nearer. Let us tell you our troubles.

The time has come for a general laying before our rearedship the difficulties of The Daily Tar Heel. We had hoped to avoid this, and we would have, but yesterday came the straw that broke the camel's back plumb in two.

Somebody swiped our truck.

It is not enough that we should be burdened by insufficient funds (so that we cannot hire a proofreader to supply you with a perfect newspaper), not enough that we should have a too small staff (making a harried managing editor work a twelve hour day), not even enough that our engraving machine should break down just before press time nightly.

No. Somebody had to steal The Daily Tar Heel truck. At this writing, the Chapel Hill police are still looking.

Its a Chevrolet panel truck, see, with the name of the newspaper across the sides. And there is a cauldron of oil boiling in the newsroom for the culprit who made off with it, once he is delivered into The Daily Tar Heel's hands.

Higher Education Searches For An Aim

College enrollment and tuition rates are going up all over the nation; the number of college educators on the horizon is diminishing. What is in the crystal ball for higher education?

"We need a much clearer and altogether more sharply defined conception of the aims and the nature of higher education in America than any now available. We . . . have been remiss in the formulation of an adequate philosophy of higher education."

We think that Dr. Wright has touched on one of the bottommost veins of the question. When he says the question of the future of higher education is a philosophical one, he is not inviting us to train our speculation on some loftly pinnacle of pure theory; he is pointing out what we can certainly see around us.

We can't agree on the proper balance between scholarship and teaching; so we often lose the effect that a clever blend of the two can achieve. We can't agree, oddly enough, upon just what an educated man should be; here is a parting of the philosophical ways unmatched for ironic mystery. Some believe that the educated man is one who leaves college loaded with a vast technical know-how in the specific field he wnts to enter, regardless of what he knows about mathematics, or languages, or history, or religion. Others feel that the educated man is one whose mind is geared to fit into the humanistic tradition, no matter what he knows of the technical skills of his anticipated profession. Beneath these broad headings, scores of less generalized problems branch off.

The Daily Tar Heel is convinced that higher education should take Dr. Wright's comment to heart. If, as he suggests, the colleges and universities are foundering, if they are "remiss" in an adequate ideology, we should be hatching a remedy. It is after such a remedy is applied that we can iron out the lower academic kinks.

It is then that the face of the crystal ball would brighten.

Another Floor Nearer Earth For Politics

Louis Kraar

AT THIS past week's session of the student Legislature, the first session of that body this year, the representatives of the campus (at least of that part which voted in the last election) decided that it was too far away from its constituency.

Thus, a special committee—not an investigating one, though, —has been appointed to investigate the possibilities of moving the Legislature's meeting place from Phi Hall (which is four flights up New East) to Di Hall (mere three-flight climb up New West). This according to my calculations, brings the student legislators one floor closer to the earth—and those whom they represent.

Why not meet in Gerrard and really be close to the students?

Campus politics here at Carolina is to me always exciting. And the Legislature and other student government bodies do bring about some very definite progress for the students they represent.

"POLITICIAN" ISN'T really a dirty word. And those who talk about the mud of campus politics are only presenting one side. There's mud in any politics when the wrong kind of people are running the show. And an interested electorate can do much to provide the right kind of people.

The biggest criticism I have of current campus politics is that the students on both parties frequently take themselves much more seriously than what they are doing.

MANNING MUNTZING, who is a student politician for the Student Party, has $949 to install 15 television sets and 4 UHF adapters in dormitories. In addition, he has to buy 45 chairs with what's left after the TV installation costs.

I think Muntzing may run out of money. He told me last week that it was next to impossible to get an estimate on TV installation costs. At the same time, when asked his "personal opinion" on whether the $949 would cover all the items, Muntzing said, "No."

This would probably mean that Muntzing, head of the TV and washing machine - buying Social Improvements Committee, will have to ask the Legislature for more money.

WORD COMES from the Inter-Dormitory Council's quarters that a plan is being arranged so that dorms could be invited—free of charge—to attend advance performances (dress rehearsals with a few frills) of the Playmakers productions.

This would be another improvements for the heretofore sorry social plight of many dorm men. And it sounds good.

ACCORDING TO the newspapers, girls are now smoking pipes. I'm not sure whether this is part of the female conspiracy to outdo males or whether the lung cancer scare has started mucous membranes to twitching. But the gals are surely smoking pipes.

Rochelle Goldstein, a sophomore at the University of Texas, recently said (for publication), "My pipe has a leather pouch to keep it and the tobacco in. It has a red stem and a blue bowl with lots of white rhinestones on the bowl. I just got mine today from my mother, and I'm so excited! I use Rum and Maple tobacco in it."

IF ANY of you guys want to meet a shapely coed who can kick a football, keep your eyes on the stretch of grass from B-V-P to the student union. A yellow - sweatered eye - catcher was out there booting the old pigskin around the other day.

'Goodness — Is That The Way I Look?'

Utility Probe Due

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — It's been a long time sence the nation's capital saw a real, honest-to-goodness rock-bottom probe of the biggest lobby in Washington, namely the public utility lobby, which, according to the official records filed in the House of Representatives, spends more than any other pressure group. However, as a result of the Dixon-Yates deal, such a probe is now being discussed.

Two members of Congress would like to conduct it. They are: Sen. William Langer of North Dakota, nominal Republican, and Congressman Sterling Cole of New York, 100 per cent Republican.

Senator Langer, who is head of the Senate Judiciary Committee, has already tried to stage an investigation. He persuaded Sidney Davis, former assistant to Justice Hugo Black, to leave a lucrative law practice in New York and undertake a monoply investigation.

But from that point on, Langer ofund himself stymied. Senator Jenner of Indiana who, as chairman of the Rules Committee, controls the purse strings of all Senate investigations, would not let Langer have a red cent to probe the utilities or any monopoly. Davis ended up paying his own expenses, and even those of witnesses, while Senator Langer finally decided to take three big law cases in order to finance his investigation.

Friend Of Utilities

The other solon, Congressman Sterling Cole, who would like to probe the Dixon-Yates utility situation, is chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and already has a certain amount of investigative money at his disposal. However, he smiles so benignly on the big utility - atomic combines that any probe conducted by him would mean little.

Congressman Cole even tried to wipe out the Eisenhower proposal to let all private companies share in a five-year pool of new atomic patents. The original Eisenhower atomic bill provided for such a pool because some big companies which have been favored by the Atomic Energy Commission have the inside track on new atomic patents, and it was considered only fair to let less-favored companies have a chance to catch up.

Democratic leaders amended the bill in the Senate to make it a ten-year instead of a five-year pool, but when the bill got Back to the House, Congressman Cole knocked out the patent pool altogether — despite pleas of fellow Republican Senator Hickenlooper of Iowa to stand by the Eisenhower program.

The debate illustrated how far Cole leans over on the side of the big atomic - power combines. A lot of people wondered why, and this may be the explanation.

Cole's Background

Mrs. Cole, the former Dorothy Thomas, is the daughter of the Secretary of the Corning Glass Company of Corning, N. Y. Cole is also a great friend of Amory Houghton, chairman of Corning Glass. Houghton and the Corning Glass crowd are Cole's best backers.

And General Eletric, of course, is one of the biggest companies already having a foot in the atomic - energy industrial door and wanting to get in further. It is among the companies which might not wish to pool its atomic patents with other companies.

Congressman Cole has announced that he will probe the Dixon - Yates contract. Senator Langer has announced that he will do likewise. It will be interesting to see who gets the investigation money from GOP leaders.

Mystery Man Gives

If you look over the private records of mystery-man Henry Grunewald it's easy to understand why certain people would like to get him behind bars on a perjury charge. First, they would like to impeach his veracity; second, they doubtless would lke to get him in a place where he has less chance to talk.

In talking to Grunewald myself I found that he had receipts to show that he had contributed heavily to the Democratic National Committee, plus canceled checks from ex-Sen. Owen Brewster of Maine, Republican, plus an account of cash contributions to Governor Dewey and Herbert Brownell totaling $13,000 when Dewey ran for President in 1944 and 1948.

"To be fair to Mr. Dewey," said Grunewald, "he said, 'Is this cash?' I said yes. 'Well,' he says, 'I can't handle that, but I'll introduce you to a fellow whom you can give this money to.'"

Grunewald then was introduced to a man he later found was Herbert Brownell, now attorney-general, then Dewey's campaign manager. The amount then contributed was $3,000. Later Grunewald said he gave Brownell another $5,000 in cash "in the presence of Gene Tunney." And, in 1948, another $5,000.

Grunewald said he had given $1,700 to the Truman campaign in 1948, and he produced a letter from President Truman thanking him. He also produced a receipt signed by Howard McGrath, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, for $500; another signed by Joe Blythe, Demoratic Treasurer, for $500; another for $1,000 signed by Blythe; a receipt for $500 signed by Sidney Solomon, a St. Louis, friend of Truman's. These contributions were given during seevral campaigns.

Grunewald produced a canceled chek to ex-Senator Brewster of Maine dated 1941 for $2,500. This was in addtion to the $10,000 he advaned Brewster in 1950 —$5,000 each on behalf of vice-President Nixon and Sen. Milton Young of North Dakota.

"Did Nixon ever thank you for that?" Grunewald was asekd.

"No," he replied.

"Has he ever helped you in your present troubles?"

"No."

"Did Nixon record that $5,000 in Califorhia?"

"I don't know."

Mr. Truman's letter to Grunewald, written in 1948, read in part: "Dear Mr. Grunewald: I've heard o fthe generous way in which yo uexpressed confidence in my leadership, and I want you to nkow my heart-felt apprication. I'm more grateful than I can say. . ."

Grunewald can't help wishing that soem of these people showed more gratitude today.

Power Lobby

The Federal Power Commission opened hearings yesterday on natural gas rates affecting the housewives of Michigan, Wisconsin and other northern states. simultaneously certain commission members have become palsy-walsy with gas and electric lobbyists.

In contrast to previous years, FP commissioners today think nothing of going on free junkets paid by the gas and utility industry in a manner that never could have happened when Sen. George Norris was watching the power lobby.

And since one of President Truman's assistants, Don Dawson, reaped headlines for getting his hotel bill paid during a visit to Miami, it might be a good idea to scrutinize the Federal Power Commission, whose members influence the nation's economy far more than a White House assistant.

Last year, the three Republican members of the Power Commission were taken on a grand tour of the Southwest by the Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association — all expenses paid.

Bushy and I looked around in the stands at the game to check up on whether Chief Sloan was bluffing or whether he meant what he said. We caught an eyeful. Then Jerry Reece reports htat it was "big oranges instead of bourbon" being consumed by the partisans on the Carolina side. I showed the paper to Bushy on Sunday. "What do you think about this?" I asked him. "Well," Bushy replied, "it's part right. The color of that stuff they were guzzling up there was kind of orangish, I guess. But I never saw anyone get the blind staggers from orange juice before!"

Ed Yoder

Science, especially since it took on a modern design, has had, more than any other pillar of the world, a babel of controversy centered about its base.

Needless to add, opinions vary as to the place it should ahve in the perspective. What is the proper position of science and scientists? We have advanced, from many highly respectable quarters, equally respectable answers to the question, ranging from the proposal that we give to science complete laissez-faire to the proposal that we tie it around with a very narrow and compressing boundary.

Within the the last 30 years, one of the most jolting and most thought - provoking pieces of literature to be centered about this very question was Aldous Huxley's Brave New World. Brave New World, often heralded as a tawdry commentary on a society that has no morality, has much deeper meaning than that — and much of that meaning clusters about scientific advancement and what it does to the human individual.

In the preface, Huxley writes: "The theme of Brave New World is not the advancement of science as such; it is the advancement of science as it affects human individuals."

Science, in the cosmos of Brave New World, has degenerated, more or less out of the general pressure man has applied to its needs and uses, to the status of a quarry slave for a blind, automatic world, the authority of whose masters is both arbitrary and absolute.

The most tragic symbol of the novel is the "Savage" — the only man in a common position who knows any Shakespeare (his being called "savage" speaks a haunting discourse on the relativity of our own present world)—and he hears the grand arbiter of the "brave new world" tell him:

"It isn't only art that's incompatible with happiness; it's also science. Science is dangerous; we have to keep it most carefully chained and muzzled."

Happiness — that ephemeral bug — has been made the mainspring of a Huxley world that has (as Miranda says in the Shakespearian words from which the author extracted his title) "such people in it." ("Universal happiness keeps the wheels steadily turning; truth and beauty con't.")

So, searching for happiness, the society of Brave New World shackled science, truth and beauty, and the world became a dull wheel, turning over in the the gross monotony of shallow variety, unethical and machiavellian moral codes, and treachery.

I wonder if the ephemeral bug, happiness, of Huxley's world can't be easily equated to the bug, "security," of our own. I wonder, too, if we are running too heavily after science with our own version of the ball and chain declarations of disloyalty, removal of "clearance" because we aren't allowed to "exercise "mature practical judgment." And all of the time, forgetting more about what science, as a free and untrammeled intellectual discipline, has meant to the evolution of the modern Twentieth Century. Despite its lags and often despicable fallacies, I am not personally disappointed with what science has helped to make it.

I'm glad to think that many still have their back turned to the lustreless expediency of Mustapha Mond's happy world and are weighing evaluations of science's place like J. Robert Oppenheimer's: "The plan (for science). . .must develop the beneficial possibilities of atomic energy and encourage the growth of fundamental knowledge, stirring the constructive and imaginative impulses of man rather than merely concentrating on the defensive and negative. It should, in short, be a plan that looks to the promise of man's future well-being as wess as to his security."

Those who believe that we must cast science in a dungeon in order to have truth and beauty and happiness and above all, security, are tragically wrong. As the theologist Dr Richardson said here the other night, the beautiful truth of Genesis has shaped man's thought under Ptilemaic, Copernican, Newtonian, and Einstein world systems. We have the truth and beauty and it can't be terribly damaged. But the world systems which science alone produces will neevr come and og for us unless their progenitor is free.

People interested in the tobacco industry will appreciate the statement of Dr. Merrill C. Sosman at the annual meeting of the American Roentgen Society urging doctors to be cautious in the condemnation of tobacco. Dr. Sosman seems to be a pretty bold man himself, however. In his speech as chairman of a symposium on lung cancer, he declared: "I honestly believe that smoking, especially the smoking of cigarettes, gives more pleasure to man than anything else."

Then the doctor went on, according to the associated Press, to enumerate the foremost pleasures of man as eating, the drinking of alcoholic beverages, smoking and "what might be referred to as the Kinsey area." But he said he believed that of all these, "smoking has given the most pleasure to the most people all over the world."

The doctor may be right in putting ahead of wine, women and eating in the pleasures of this world. As a man with such an opinion, he should be a welcome testifier for the tobacco advertisers. But as a man who not only puts tobacco first in his order of human pleasures but leaves out entirely apparently music, are, literature, the drama, sports, fishing and just frolicking, he certainly does not qualify as a man wholly devoted to caution in picking, choosing and praising among all the pleasures of man. — The News and Observer

Tar Heels In Excellent Shape After State Victory

Dressen Is Named Senator Manager

Charlie Dressen, former manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, is the newly-named manager of the Washington Senators, it was announced yesterday.

The announcement came as no surprise. It has been rumored for some time the 55-year-old veteran was going to replace Bucky Harris at the helm of the Senators.

No salary was announced, but it was estimated to be about $40,000 a year plus a bonus based on attendance.

Dressen's return to the big leagues came only one year after he relinquished the reins of the National League champion Brooklyn Dodgers for a managerial post with Oakland of the Pacific Coast League.

The veteran Californian did right well with the Acorns. He took a seventh place club and raised to third. He then won the PCL's playoff championship.

Dressen's parting with the Dodgers after winning two straight pennants was one of the major news stories and surprises of 1953.

After losing to the Yankees in the World Series for the second straight year, Dressen insisted on a long-term contract of two or three years. President Walter O'Malley of the Dodgers stood pat on a one-year offer. They couldn't agree and Dressen quit the club on Oct. 14.

The appointment was announced by Calvin Griffith, vice president of the Senators.

Dressen said he had four propositions during the year from major league clubs and finally settled on the Senators Saturday. He did not say who the others were.

Calvin Griffith said Clark Griffith would be in New York tonight or tomorrow and the three will sit down and talk over plans for the team.

Keller To Be Set For Tulane

Green Wave Has Top Guards In Southeast

By LARRY SAUNDERS

With one down and nine to go, Carolina's undefeated Tar Heels began practice yesterday for their encounter with Tulane at New Orleans next Saturday.

The entire squad is in fine shape after their 20-6 win over N. C. State. Only Ken Keller, who saw limited action Saturday because of his badly sprained ankle, was not fully dressed yesterday. However, Coach George Barclay and Trainer Fritz Lutz feel certain that Keller will be in good shape for the Tulane clash.

Monday's workout was rather light with the first and second teams running through plays and taking wind sprints. The third squad, however, scrimmaged the frosh and showed up well, with Don Lear breaking away for several nice gains from his fullback post. Freshman Buddy Payne was a standout defensive end, breaking through the varsity offense to smear backs on several occasions.

"We'll spend most of the week working on our blocking and tackling," Barclay commented. "I believe that we were rather weak on them." The Carolina mentor also felt that the Tar Heels did not take advantage of State's mistakes.

Carolina fans watched something new Saturday afternoon. Tar Heel quarterbacks Marshall Newman and Len Bullock threw 15 passes and completed eight, more than any other Barclay coached team has ever done. "You can bet we'll be throwing the ball a lot from now on," Barclay told reporters.

The Tar Heel coach had special praise for the defensive work of Guard Bil Koman and the fine all around play of end Will Frye and fullback Don Klochak. He said, "In Klochak I think I have solved my fullback problem."

Freshman Coach Ralph Floyd, who has scouted Tulane in their loss to Georgia Tech and their tie with Memphis State, believes that the Tar Heels will have their hands full next Saturday. "Tulane has a fine team, a lot better than most people around here believe, and they have one of the finest lines in the Southeastern Conference. Guards Tony Sardisco and Bryan Burnthorne are the best in their conference," Floyd related.

Contrary to local belief, Floyd emphasizes the fact that Memphis State has a fine team and Tulane's tie to that school was no disgrace. The Green Wave runs from the split-T formation and have a couple of fine backs in quarterback Earl Hubley and fullback Bobby Saia.

Roy Mack Is On Spot About Philly Athletics

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 27.—The American League gets an official report on the status of its Philadelphia franchise tomorrow when Roy Mack, executive vice president of the Athletics, appears before his fellow clubowners in New York.

The only sure thing about the Athletics5 situation is that the club treasury is bare and unless outside help is secured, someone, maybe the American League, will have to take over operation of the team.

It is believed that Roy will present two alternatives to the owners: (1) Allow the club to be sold to Arnold Johnson, Chicago business man who wants to transfer the team to Kansas City, or (2) help him to raise the money necessary to carry on the operation.

City Showers Giants In Parade Tickets Are Scarce For Series

NEW YORK, Sept. 27 (AP)—The giddy New York Giants rode up Broadway in a ticker shower today as the big town began to heat up for another World Series, opening Wednesday at the Polo Ground.

Tickets were extra hard to get with the brokers selling only to friends of friends because of the limited capacity of the Giants' home park. Hotels were jammed and the first wave of visiting baseball men and writers crowded the lobbies.

The two managers still refused to make it official that Sal Maglie 14-6, the Giants' veteran right-hander, will oppose Bob Lemon 23-7 of the Tribe in the opener.

Manager Leo Durocher is expected to name Maglie after the Giants' final workout tomorrow morning. He also will pick his starting lineup with left field the only debated position. The "hunch" players think Durocher may start Dusty Rhodes, a left handed hitter, instead of Monte Irvin, a right-hander.

With Durocher, nothing ever is certain. He opened with Dave Koslo against the Yankees in 1951 and might try to pull another one out of the hat. Those who expect him to pitch Maglie, point out the "Barber" can't come back again unless he has a three or four-day rest. Some think he might name lefty Johnny Antonelli, 2-7, on the theory the strong youngster then could be counted upon for three starts if it goes the seven-game maximum.

Lopez probably will go with Lemon if Maglie pitches, for Bob is a lefthanded hitter. If Durocher uses Antonelli, he might switch to Early Wynn, 23-11, a switch hitter who could bat righty against a southpaw.

The fact Lemon lost his last start and was wild while Wynn almost pitched a no-hitter Saturday might influence Lopez. He said in Cleveland he wouldn't decide until he knew about the Giant starter.

Cleveland also has one doubtful spot in its outfield, right field. Dave Philley, the switch-batting regular, has been in a bad slump. Lopez has been toying with the idea of two-platooning Dave Pope and Wally Westlake. The rest of the club is set although third baseman Al Rosen has trouble running. In recent games, Lopez has been using a pinch runner for the all-star game hero.

For whatever it's worth, at this stage of the game, the weather man said "Wednesday looks like not too bad a day." The long range outlook is for partly cloudy skies with temperatures between 65 and 70.

The Giants expect to pack about 56,000 into the Polo Grounds, including about 3,500 standees. All reserved and box seats have been sold for many days. About 4,000 bleacher seats at $2.10 each will be on sale the day of the game.

After the first two games in New York, the series shifts to Cleveland for the next three games and then back to New York for the sixth and seventh until one team wins four in the best-of-seven competition. All games start at 1 p.m. EST with no day off for travel. In the event of postponement, the clubs will play the postponed game the following day and move the entire schedule back.

Both managers and the six-man umpiring staff—Al Barlick, Jocko Conlan and Lon Warneke of the National and Charley Berry, John Stevens and Larry Napp of the American—will meet with Commissioner Ford Frick tomorrow morning to discuss ground rules.

The Giants will work out for about an hour and a half and then will turn over the field to Cleveland.

Trio Of Starters Back In '54 Folk

By BERNIE WEISS

Three starters from last year's team will return for action with the 1954-55 edition of the North Carolina basketball squad, according to an early report from Coach Frank McGuire.

The returnees are Al Lifson, Jerry Vayda and Paul Likens. Vayda a junior, was named to the all-star team of the Atlantic Coast Conference last season. Lifson and Likens are seniors and will be closing out their careers.

The team will be an improvement over last year's outfit, which won only 11 of 21 games. "We were lucky to finish better than .500 with that team against the competition we played," said McGuire. "This year will see an improvement, but not to the extent that we will regularly beat teams which have been in business all these years."

Practice sessions will not begin until the first of November. Until that time McGuire can only sit and speculate, although his players are getting into playing condition on their own time.

Tony Radovich and Jerry McCabe will also be returning from last year's varsity. Up from the freshman squad will be Lennie Rosenbluth, the talk of the Conference after his frosh debut. Two junior college graduates now attending Carolina, Hillard Greene, who played for Chowan for two years, and Ollie Harrell, of Campbell Junior College, will also be available.

Five other cagers who will probably see some varsity action are Richard Ward, Buddy Clark, Willis Henderson, Frank Goodwin and Ed Sutton, all of whom played for the frosh.

One question is the situation of Joe Quigg. Quigg began to play for the frosh last January and has another half year of freshman eligibility this season, which he undoubtedly will use. McGuire would like to see Joe, an excellent ball-handler with an eagle eye, move up to the varsity when his freshman eligibility runs out. But this would mean Quigg's varsity eligibility would expire in the middle of a season, too. Whether Quigg will play varsity ball beginning in the middle of this season or wait until next season is his puzzler. "I'm leaving the decision up to Quigg," said McGuire.

Likens, (six feet, nine inches), Young (six feet, six inches), and Rosenbluth (six feet, five inches), will provide the height.

The freshman team, the quality of which has been grossly exaggerated, nevertheless will be in good shape. In addition to Quigg, McGuire will have three other metropolitan New York boys in the fold. They are Tom Kerns, of Burgenfield, N. J.; Bob Cunningham, Manhattan and Pete Brennan, Brooklyn.

Kerns was voted the outstanding player in the Metropolitan area last year. Cunningham and Brennan were both among the outstanding high school payers in the state.

Two North Carolina boys are also being counted on . . . Roy Searcy, of Tri-City and Charley Adams of Carey. Searcy was one of ten players picked on the All-State team. Adams has developed a good point shot frorm the outside.

Buck Freeman will coach the frosh.

The schedule:

December: 1, McCrary Eagles, (away); 4, Clemson, (home); 9, South Carolina, (home); 11, William and Mary (away); 18, Maryland (home); 27, Southern California, (Dixie Classic in Raleigh); 28 and 29, Dixie Classic.

January: 3, L. S. U., (away); 4, Alabama, (away); 8, Wake Forest, (home); 11, Virginia, (home); 14, South Carolina, (away); 15, Clemson, (away); 18, N. C. State (away).

February: 4, Duke (home); 11, Virginia, (away); 12, Maryland (away); 16, Wake Forest (away); 22, N. C. State, (home); 26, Duke, (away).

March: 3, Atlantic Coast Conference, (Raleigh.)

Soccer Squad Better: Allen

"They can't be praised too highly," is the feeling of Coach Marvin Allen over the prospects on his 1954 soccer squad.

"The team spirit is very good and every man is hustling in an effort to get a starting position for our first practice game with Fort Bragg next Friday," explained Coach Allen.

The Tar Heels will be host to Fort Bragg on Fetzer Field next Friday at 3 p.m. The Soldiers will field a team which will include many former European stars. Although the true strength of the Ft. Bragg team is not known, the contest is expected to be a close one. Another practice game will be played against the Soldiers on the 8th of October.

Freshman Soccer

Freshman soccer Coach Harry Pawlik has announced that freshman practice will begin today at three o'clock on Fetzer Field. Coach Pawlik points out that previous experience is not necessary and that practice will be from 3:00-4:00 daily.

Did The Boys From State Do This?

...no one knows exactly who, burned the name of a foreign college into the lawn beside Morehead Planetarium over the weekend. The initials, quite plain to Planetarium passers-by, spell out N-C-S. Several sources said they thought the initials might stand for North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering, whose football team took a licking here Saturday, but no one has come forward with any actual proof that the boys from Raleigh did it. See story on page one.—R. B. Henley Photo.

Freshman Fellowship Sponsors Trip To Averett Next Friday

Last Friday six boys from the Freshman Fellowship went to Averett College in Danville, Va. to plan the dance which Averett College will give next Saturday.

The six who went were Bob Leonard, chairman of the programs committee; Jim Turner and Frank Livingston, steering committee advisors; Mitchell Borden, chairman of the deputations committee, and Joe Clapp and Stewart Colson, deputations committee members.

The Committee was met by seven girls from Averett's upper classes and were taken downstairs to a social room, called the "Spot." From there they were taken to the main dining room and were given a delicious supper.

After supper a meeting of the two dance committees were called to order and plans for the dance were discussed and decided upon. It was decided that each boy who goes to the dance from UNC will pick out a girl of his own height or thereabouts, and she will be his date for the first dance. The program is as follows:

At 6:30 p. m. the chartered bus will leave from the Y Court for Danville, arriving there about 8 o'clock. The Dance Committees will match up the boys and girls for the dance, and the first dance will begin at 8:15.

For all the freshmen who are interested, a booth will be kept open in the YMCA lobby through Wednesday. Freshmen may sign their dates there or see Mitchell Borden in room 108, Lewis.

GMAB Holds Weekly Events For Students

The Graham Memorial Activities Board is sponsoring three series of weekly events for the student body.

Ballroom dancing lessons will be given each Tuesday beginning Sept. 28 in the Rendezvous Room. Mrs. V. L. Bounds will be the instructor. This activity will be sponsored by the GMAB Dance Committee and the Freshman Fellowship.

Football movies of previous UNC game will be shown every Wednesday night at 8 o'clock in the Roland Parker Lounge. Coach George Barclay or assistants will narrate and refreshments will be served. The movies will be sponsored by the GMAB Recreation Committee.

The World Series Baseball games will be on TV each Wednesday afternoon as long as they are shown. Refreshments will be served at this time also.

Auto Registration

The office of the Dean of Student Affairs yesterday reminded all students who have cars at the University that they are required by a regulation of the board of trustees to register them with the office in 206 South Building at the beginning of each school year.

The traffic committee also reminded students that all parking lots on the campus proper are restricted to full time faculty staff and physically handicapped students between the hours of 7 a.m. and 3 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

(The campus proper is defined as that area bounded on the north by Franklin Street, the south by Raleigh Road, on the east by Raleigh Street and on the west by South Columbia Street and Pittsboro Road.)

University Party

The University Party will meet for the second time this year tonight at 7:30 in the Roland Parker Lounge of Graham Memorial.

A spokesman for the party said yesterday that all interested freshmen are urged to attend the meeting as plans will be made for the year's work.

He also said that all old members should attend as "much committee work was to be done."

ALpha Phi O Service Frat Sets Meeting

There will be a meeting tonight at 7:30 o'clock in the APO room, downstairs in Graham Memorial, for all brothers, pledges and rushees of Alpha Phi Amega, campus service fraternity, according to Charles Katzenstein.

Katzenstein said the first rush meeting of the organization this fall was held last Thursday at the Lutheran Church, "where a sizable group of interested Carolina men heard two distinguished friends of APO," Dr. Lee Brooks of the Sociology Department, and Roy Armstrong, University director of admissions, "praise the work of the group."

Alpha Phi Omega, organized for former Boy Scouts, is dedicated to carrying on the Scout ideal of service. Two hundred and 27 chapters are located on campuses throughout the nation.

APO information booths were set up and in operation during last Saturday's Consolidated University.

Katzenstein invited all interested persons to attend APO's meeting tonight.

Visiting Professor Kunstmann Once Roomed With 'Dr. Frank'

By TOM PEACOCK

"He always said 'Frank P. Graham'."

"I would introduce him to people as Frank Graham, and he would stick out his hand and say, 'Frank P. Graham."

Dr. J. G. Kunstmann was reminiscing about an old friend of his. Dr. Kunstzmann, a visiting professor in Germanics from the University of Chicago, roomed with Carolina's Dr. Frank Graham when Dr. Frank was in his late twenties and a student at Chicago.

"I always wondered if Frank was consciously insisting on the middle initial, so when I felt I knew him well enough I asked him if he was. He admitted he did insist on the 'P'.

"It seemed that when he was a student at the University his father was president, and since hte school was much smaller than it is now, everyone knew him. There was a young fellow in town, a colored fellow, who was a fine man but who always had a little too much to drink on Friday night. His name was Frank Graham, and he always spent the weekend in jail. The following Monday the Chapel Hill paper would say, 'Frank Graham spent the weekend in jail.' Frank would get a terrific ribbing from his friends, and since this happened every weekend, he got in the habit of introducing himself as 'Frank P. Graham,' and never got out of the habit."

This is Dr. Kunstmann's first visit to Chapel Hill, and like most visitors, he has "fallen in love with the place." He is teaching graduate courses and a couple of undergraduate courses, too.

"I don't worry about the grad students," he says. "You can't hurt them. But I'm scared to death of the undergrads, since a teacher can do them a lot of harm. That's why I'm doing this," and he pointed to a stack of hand-written notes and a number of typewritten pages that indicated a lecture he was preparing.

Dr. Kunstmann is an australian by birth, from the colony of Victoria. He attended a public school there, comparable to our private school, and then went to the Universtiy of Leipzig in Saxony, Germany, now in the Russian zone.

At least one memory from each place has stayed with him. In Australia, it was the way he had to shine shoes at school.

"The mud down there is terrible. We would go outside, and when we came into the building there would be mud caked up over our socks. In a hall each of us had a scraper to get the mud off, and then we had to shine them up. Not only on the tops, but here on bottoms (as he slipped a loafer off) where you don't walk."

From Germany, he remembers registration.

"I watched your registration and thought of Germany. There, I sat down in a waiting room for about five minutes, then went in to see a full-time registrar who checked my papers. Then he said, 'Here, you must pick out the courses you want to take, the time you want to spend in class and the way you want to get your practical work. Come back and tell me when you know.'

"Then he told me to go to such-and-such a room to pay certain fees. I went there and paid about 25 cents registration fee and another 25 cents health fee, and that was it."

"At Chicago," he shakes his head sadly, "they have installed a new 'efficiency system' that is supposed to eliminate waste time and motion. Now, if you meet someone on the campus you don't know, you are safe to call him Dean, we have so many. If he isn't a dean or an assistant dean, he's a deanlet."

The professor is a man of medium build with a shock of Einstein-like white hair that is receding only slightly at the forehead. He wears pure white sideburns about an inch-and-a-half further down than most men, and coupled with stern rimless glasses, he looks typically Prussian. Though he has been at Chicago since 1922 he still trills his r's, an Australian leftover, and speaks in a clipped, pointed manner.

Football, or the lack of it, is sure to come up in a discussion of Chicago.

"I'm partially responsible for the death of football on the campus," explains Kunstmann. "Chicago was synonomous with football then, and the coach was the daddy of all coaches, Amos Alonzo Stagg.

"I met Coach Stagg shortly after I became appointed permanently to the staff in 1927. I was at my boss' house next door to Stagg's

University ROTC Department Starting Seventh Year Of Work

The Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps of the University of North Carolina is starting its seventh year with a total enlistment of 442 members. This group, called a wing, is divided into four sections: Air Science I, comprised of first year cadets; Air Science II, sophomore cadets; Air Science III, junior cadets, and Air Science IV, senior cadets.

The Air Force became a separate branch of the Department of Defense in 1947 with the passage of the National Security Act of that same year. At the same time the Air Force created a Reserve Training Corps for the purpose of training officers for the AF. The University Air Arm was organized in 1947, but due to the fact that all the students were veterans and did not require Air Science classes I and II, the first class was not held until 1949.

The staff of the Reserve CCorps is the same as last year with the following exceptions:

Lt. Col. Raymond H. Baker, instructor in Air Sciences II and IV, has been assigned to Newfoundland. Taking Col. Baker's place is Major Thomas Gilchrest, who will instruct Air Science IV.

Captain Edward Robertson, also an instructor in Air Sciences III

Don't Join DTH-IFC Dispute - UP

The University party in a meeting last night heard a recommendation from a study committee that the party take no action in the Inter-Fraternity Council - Daily Tar Heel dispute.

Jack Stevens, chairman of the study committee, made the following report to the party:

"This committee has decided, rather than issue a report or findternity Council - Daily Tar Heel dispute, that such a dispute or controversy has no political implication as far as the University Party is concerned.

"This committee recommends that, for the present, the University Party take no action regarding the dispute, and furthermore that the University Party refrain from wildly jumping on any "political bandwagon."

Bev Webb presented a report of the meeting of the Legislature to the party. After this, Webb said he hoped party members would come forward with any new ideas they might have. He said he knew the party would continue to work this year for the betterment of the student body.

Charlie Yarborough, president of the senior class, also spoke to the group. He was very optimistic about the coming elections and said he felt that this would be a very promising year for the party.

Rueben Leonard, chairman of party, appointed Stan Shaw as chairman of the membership committee. Leonard also briefly outlined the work of the committee for the coming year.

Famed Author James Street Passes Of Heart Attack In Memorial Hospital Collapsed In Carolina Inn Meeting

Novelist James Street, author of "The Gauntlet," "Tap Roots," and many other best-sellers, died here last night following his collapse of a heart attack at a meeting.

He was rushed to Memorial Hospital and died at 10:50 p. m., EST, a few minutes after his admission.

The novelist had resided in Chapel Hill since 1946.

His wife and his daughter, Ann, were at his bedside when he died.

Street was born in Lumberton, Miss., and would have been 52 on Oct. 15.

Dr. Fred Patterson, who was called to Carolina Inn where Street became ill, diagnosed the cause of death as a heart attack.

In addition to his widow and daughter Ann, Street also is survived by two sons, James Street, Jr., of New York City, and John Lee Street of Greensboro, N. C.

Street had been a Baptist minister, newspaper reporter, circus hand, hobo, publicity campaigner for th elate Sen. Bilbo, Associated Press reporter and Hearst feature writer.

Trustees Will Hold Business Session Today

John Motley Morehead, benefactor of the University and chairman of the Morehead Foundation, will arrive here today for the semi-annual meeting of the Morehead Foundation.

One thing the Foundation members are expected to discuss is the selection of the sundial, scheduled to be placed in the center of the Morehead Planetarium parking lot. At present, framework for the dial has been erected.

Business Meeting

Morehead Foundation trustees will meet this afternoon for a business session and will be hosts tonight at 6:30 at a dinner for Morehead scholars now enrolled in the University. The dinner will be held in the Planetarium dining room.

Trustees arriving today for the meeting will be, in addition to Morehead, Norman Cocke, John L. Morehead, R. H. Hanes and Hugh Chatham.

Short Stay

R. A. Fetzer, secretary of the Morehead Foundation, said yesterday that John Motley Morehead will probably leave Chapel Hill tomorrow afternoon.

The site for the sundial has been spaced off, but no definite details are available, since the one to be bought has not been selected.

Scholars

Trustees of the Foundation will meet in Chapel Hill again in March for selection of next year's Morehead scholars.

John Motley Morehead is donor of the Morehead Planetarium, a joint donor of the Bell Tower and founder of the Morehead scholarships.

Saint Anthonys Help Fight Fire

Tom Spain, married student who lives on the Airport Road, came into the Saint A house at 6:15 Monday evening and reported there were two forest rangers fighting a rapidly spreading fire in the Airport area and that they needed some help.

Saint A's Jack Spooner, Jay Zimmerman, Bill Wood, Neil Bell, Don Kentopp and Chal Schley immediately donned their fire-fighting outfits (didn't have a pole to slide down, though) and rushed to the fire.

The brothers divided into two groups, using pine boughs to beat flames and clearing a firebreak to prevent the fire's spread.

At 9:30 p. m. the fire was out, but was still in the smouldering stage. Rangers said they hoped a heavy dew would completely extinguish the embers.

Only damage done, according to the Saint A's, was total destruction of a chicken coop.

Yack

All sophomores and law students who have not had their Yackety-Yack photographs taken have only three days to do so.

Yack Editors Jackie Park and Cornell Wright said second-year and law school men may have their pictures taken in the basement of Graham Memorial today, tomorrow and Friday between 1 and 8 p. m.

There will be no extensions, they said.

Tell 'Em Right Address, Say Chapel Hill Postmen

The Post Office yesterday requested that all students notify their correspondents of their correct mailing address as soon as possible, in order to speed up delivery of mail to students.

The address should include the room number as well as the dormitory.

All old students are to file a change of address form if their addresses have changed since last year. These forms may be obtained at the Central Records Office, basement of Hanes Hall; information desk, first floor, South, and the housing office, 2 New East Annex.

Chapel Hill Personalities:

Pianist 'Doc' Jackson Started Out As A Lonely Freshman In '38

'DOCTOR' GIBSON JACKSON
. . . in his day at Chapel Hill "they could hold it"

By RON LEVIN

Okay, so you're a long hair and would like to hear a Chopin prelude. Or maybe your tastes run to red hot Dixieland and something like "St. Louis Blues." No? Then how about the familiar strains of "Malaguena" or a quick change to the forever haunting mtlodies of "Laura" or "Ruby?"

Whatever it is you're looking for in the way of keyboard antics, you'll more than likely find it wherever you find "Doc" seated at the piano.

You don't know who "the doctor is? Wake up and enjoy life, man! His real name is Gibson Jackson, and his hobby is enjoying life to the utmost. His business is helping other people to enjoy themselves.

Gibson came to Chapel Hill in 1938 from Savannah, Georgia, where he was reared in a musical atmosphere at home. He started here as a lonely freshman working toward an AB in English, and later changed to history.

It was during this time that Gibson wrote several short stories for the campus literary publication, The Carolina Magazine, and also for The Buccaneer. He also started work on his "great American novel" and on occasion will pick it up and read its ninety-odd pages when he feels the need for a good laugh.

In '40, Gibson's studies were interrupted by the war, and after an interim during which time he fulfilled his military obligations, he returned. In '48 he received his AB in history. After spending several years in graduate school and completing his work for his MA in medieval history, save a thesis of which 41 pages lay quietly and unobtrusively in a desk drawer in his room, Gibson decided to abandon the plan for an MA and turn to other interests. His reasons were quite valid. Since the only recourse from an MA in history was teaching (and he could never picture himself as a teacher), he bade farewell to the classroom and has not been back since.

However, though all formal attempts at further education were discontinued, "the doctor" continued educating himself at home and today will gladly discuss with you any subject that you might have in mind. Wheher it be a Shakespearean tragedy or one of Beethoven's symphonies, or perhaps some choice lines by T. S. Eliot or the best-selling novel, he can talk about it. Gibson is as much at ease talking about these and others, as he is while rendering a fragrant version of "Honeysuckle Rose" at the piano. You will find him an excellent conversationalist and an even better listener. "Doc" is a reader—"I make a point to read a different Shakespearean play each year, though as of yet, I haven't decided which one it will be for this year."

After leaving school, Gibson turned to the keyboard in earnest as a livelihood and means of enjoyment. He has played through Chapel Hill in the old Harry's at the University Restaurant, and at present may be heard during the dinner hour at Danziger's Old World Restaurant or later in the evening downstairs at the Rathskellar. He also plays with a dance band on the weekends at various engagements throughout the state.

Many listeners of Gibson have probably wondered to themselves just what his favorite type of music is. "The doctor" says he prefers anything, just so it was written before 1750. He is extremely fond of Gregorian chant (two or more melodies in one composition, usually with sacred text) and madrigals (amorous lyric poetry, set to music) of this period. His favorite selection is "Dido and Aeneas' by Purcell.

"Doc" says he likes Chapel Hill, because the people are so friendly and intresting a reason many give for their residence in the University town), and their educational level is much higher than in other towns of comparable size. The biggest change, Gibson says, since the days when he was a lonely freshman, has been the decline of liberalism and the steadily increasing conformity and desire for conformity. The bespectacled and smiling pianist will tell you that in the older days right after the war the freshman were largely veterans and knew how to enjoy life more. They seemed to have a better time than do the freshmen of today. As Gibson sums it up, "they could drink it, and they could hold it."

To most of his friends Gibson is known as "the doctor." The origin of the name seems to be somewhat hazy, but Gibson is truly a doctor. His consistent prescription for what ails you is laughter—the best medicine in the world. It's one medicine with which there is no danger of an overdose.

The Uphill Path Of Justice

Through history, the path of justice has been rough, tortuous, and uphill. Taking note of that fact, a great American spoke these words over the weekend:

"As Americans we are proud of our system of government and our standards of justice although we claim neither originality or perfection for them. . . As a nation we make no pretense except to a passion for justice based upon the dignity and rights of the individual.

"We stake everything we have on our belief that only through this kind of justice can there be order and contentment within nations and peace between the countries of the world.

"We believe this kind of justice is the rightful heritage of every human being and that it is his right and duty to achieve it."

That statement was made in Virginia, at Williamsburg. But it was not heard by Virginia's governor, Thomas B. Stanley, or by Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., or by most of the state's congressmen.

They refused to listen to Chief Justice Earl Warren's words because he was the man who handed down the Supreme Court's unanimous verdict on segregation.

This happened, we repeat, in Williamsburg, where Thomas Jefferson reminded Americans that "the most sacred of the duties of a government is to do equal and impartial justice to all its citizens."

The Corpse Deserves Re-Burial

President Tom Creasy took the liberty to disagree with the administration Saturday, and today, we'd like to disagree with him.

While speaking to the Consolidated University Student Council, President Creasy remarked that he's not in favor of all campus book store profits going to non-athletic scholarships. This is an old issue, which the administration has finally settled by announcing that less and less of the money from book store profits will go to athletics in succeeding years, until finally all the money will be channelled into academic scholarships.

In reviving the issue's corpse, Creasy said he didn't think the scholarships should be "limited to any one group." That, of course, is the reason for putting all the money in the general scholarship fund. Football players are still eligible, but as students, not football players.

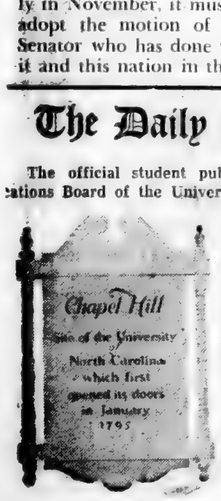
The Daily Tar Heel believes money, which comes from all the students, should continue to be available to all the students, whatever their weight or bodily speed.

Objection!

In the whole history of the United States Senate, only three Senators have been censured.

In 1902, both South Carolina members, John L. McLaurin and Benjamin R Tillman, were censured for getting into a fist fight on the Senate floor.

In 1929, Sen. Hiram Bingham of Connecticut was censured for a breach of ethics in a committee meeting.



Thus, the serious nature of a censure resolution becomes clear. As the special Senate committee which considered the censure of Sen. McCarthy said in its report, there were no precedents which were particularly helpful in tackling its job. "The path is narrow and the guideposts few," it said.

But the select committee strode that narrow path, and becomes thereby, the most powerful group yet to raise its voice in objection to the ruthless and brutal methods of Joe McCarthy.

If the Senate considers this matter fairly in November, it must carry through and adopt the motion of censure against the Senator who has done the most to degrade it and this nation in the eyes of the world.

A Hearing In The Life Of Joe McCarthy

Louis Kraar

APPARENTLY, THE pounding of Senator Arthur V. Watkins' gavel in Room 318 of the Senate Office Building was like the thunder before the storm that will inevitably come down upon the controversial head of controversial Senator Joe McCarthy.

But like a Chapel Hill thundershower, the future of the Watkins Committee report asking censure of McCarthy is uncertain — perhaps as uncertain as McCarthy himself.

AS IT stands now, the Senate will not consider the Watkins report until after the election. By then, the Democrats may be in control of that body, and Sen. McCarthy would be dethroned as chairman of his Government Operations Committee and its investigating subcommittee. And assuming the Democrats do gain control of the Senate, a censure-favoring vote against McCarthy would be almost certain.

If the Democrats do not step into the Senate driver seats, there is a good chance that the Senate will not vote to accept the Watkins Committee recommendation to censure McCarthy. This is not to say that the McCarthy issue is strictly a party affair (since obviously it isn't), but at the same time a GOP Senate fresh from an election victory is going to be reluctant to censure one of its influential members.

THE STORM, however, has already been brewed by the widely-viewed, marathon Army-McCarthy hearings, and the full blast of public opinion against the Wisconsin senator will probably wash away his political future.

Just what is it about the stocky, gravel - voiced senator that attracts a following?

I wondered this in Washington last spring when I left Chapel Hill between exams to get a peek at the Army-McCarthy battle. A full hour before the hearings were due to start, the long, marble circular hallway outside Room 318 was alive with people waiting to get inside.

"You should have seen it yesterday," a lady behind me in the line was telling another woman who clutched the hand of her small child. "I haven't missed a day since Cohn took the stand," she added.

"This is my first time," said the lady with the child. "I did want him to see this. He'll appreciate it when he's older," the woman said pointing to her child, who — McCarthy or no McCarthy — was growing childishly impatient.

A GUARD inspected all the woman's handbags and instructed each of us against "audible manifestations of emotion" when we were inside. And then I moved inside with the rest of the crowd, took a place in the back of the room, and watched the familiar faces take shape behind the long table. Roy Cohn was on the stand.

Cohn was cagey when drawling Counsel Ray Jenkins closed in for the cross - examination showdown. Jenkins seemed to be trying to establish that Cohn, in pleading for Schine, cursed McCarthy and the Army's Adams.

AFTER SOME typical Cohn question dodging, he admitted that he had used "some words I wouldn't say over television."

Finally Cohn admitted using profanity, and added, "Let me remind the group that I didn't use any new words other than ordinary profane ones."

"So you haven't been plowing any new fields, Mr. Cohn," quipped Jenkins. And the audience proceeded to audibly display their emotions with laughter.

As for McCarthy, he strolled in and out of the room — accompanied by a group of followers. But I think they are leaving him now because the storm is coming. And the public's conscience is becoming that of the Senate.

Warm Days At The Steam Plant

National Forest Giveaway

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON. — Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay is one of the most friendly, amiable, talaktive guys in the Eisenhower administration, but there is one thing his aides will hardly open their mouths about. It pertains to the way a choice of the Rogue River National Forest was sliced off and given away for only $5 an acre to the McDonald family, of Mobile, Ala.

On the land is one of the finest stands of Douglas fir in the Northwest—which will now be subject to the ax.

For no less than six years, the McDonald family has been trying to persuade the Interior Department to let them get this juicy piece of timberland. But Democratic secretaries of the Interior refused. Alabama Congressman Frank ("all is made for love") Boykin frequently pestered the Secretary of the Interior, Frank Chapman about it on behalf of his Mobile constituents, but got nowhere.

But when Doug McKay got into power things changed.

The McDonald family shifted their tactics. With Republicans in they left Democratic Congressman Boykin for Republican Congressman Harris Ellsworth of Roseburg, Ore. They also got a boost from Senator Eugene Milliken, of Colorado. The shift worked. They got the timberland.

The story of how Doug McKay's boys justified the giveaway is fantastic. It constituted one of the cleverest pieces of legal finagling this writer has seen in a long time. It was even necessary to send ore all the way to the McDonald's home town of Mobile, to be assayed.

The obstacles to the giveaway were considerable. In the first place, the Democrats were against it. Second, the staff of a notable Republican, Secretary Ezra Benson, who sits in the same cabinet with McKay, were against it. Another important Republican, Congressman Cliff Hope, of Kansas, was against it. He even introduced a bill in the 1953 congressional session trying to plug national forest giveaway loopholes.

Hope's bill pointed out "the Rogue River National Forest . . . is an area of exceptionally fine timberland . . . mineral values in that area are known to be negligible . . . a single 20-acre claim in the Douglas forests may easily carry a stand of timber worth $25,000."

But despite that, amiable Doug McKay let 454 acres of the Rogue River National Forest go for $5 an acre, when it should have brought $170,000—or rather,, according to Democrat Chapman, shouldn't have ben sold at all.

How It Was Done

The way the McDonald family managed this was both amazing and complicated. It had to be complicated to be sucessful.

First, their mining claim to the land, through the Al Sarena Mining Co., had long given them the right to mine gold and silver ore under the forest but not touch the forest. This is a common practice in the West, and they had mined for some years.

But what the McDonalds wanted was not only the underground mineral rights, but the above-ground timber rights. So they tried to convince the Forest Service, which is under the Agrisulture Department, and the Bureau of Land Management, which is under Interior, that in order to continue their mining operations they must take over the surface rights. Their first application was made in 1948.

Both Bureaus, when under the Democrats, said no. They ruled that two-thirds of Al Sarena's claims for land obviously were not mining claims; that it contained no ore worth mining.

Five years passed. Secretary McKay took office. A few months later, in early 1953, his fellow Oregonian and good friend, Congressman Ellsworth, began writing him long, pleading letters that the McDonald family must have surface rights in the Rogue River National Forest.

Davis Is Annoyed

The letters, which increased in frequency, were handled by solicitor Clarence Davis. He seemed annoyed at them. Finally, on June 1, according to the Interior Department, Davis received a six page, single-spaced letter from Congressman Ellsworth, plus a two-hour visit.

On June 4, according to Interior Department files, Davis wrote an exasperated memo that Ellsworth had taken up two hours of his time with "this seemingly hopeless conflict."

Despite Davis' irritation, however, he let the Oregon congressman win an important concession. According to his own memo, Davis agreed to let him submit interested people."
"some independent reports of disinterested people."

The "disinterested" and "independent" reports arrived on June 24. But they were not exactly from "independent" or "disinterested" people. One report was from D. Ford McCormick, who had worked for Al Sarena and the McDonald family ever since 1937. He claimed that the McDonald's mineral rights contained enough ore to justify giving them service (timber) rights.

Three months later, the persistent congressman from Oregon persuaded the yielding solicitor of the Interior Department to have two engineers re-examine the entire Al Sarena case. And, believe it or not, Davis agreed to let "disinterested, independent" Ford McCormick be one of the engineers.

Another amazing thing: Instead of taking the bulky ore samples to a near-by Oregon assayer, they were shipped all the wya across the United States to Mobile, Ala., home town of the McDonald family.

There the ore was assayed by the A. W. Williams Inspection Co., located in an area which has little experience in assaying gold and silver ore.

On the basis of this assay, the long-contested claim of the McDonald family for 4 sites of the Rogue River National Forest was granted. Shortly thereafter Solicitor Davis was promoted to the No. 2 job in the Interior Department—Undersecretary.

The Ram Sees

Haven't heard a word so far about anyone going to the Big Game this weekend in the Deep South. For the information of those who may be making the trek, New Orleans is to be pronounced "New Or-leens" if you want to sound like a native; pronounce it "N'awlins" if you are a professional grits-and-honeysuckle Southerner; and say it "New Or-leens' if you want to sound like a tourist. BEAT TULANE!

It was no surprise, of course, that so many fraternity houses violated the just-signed visiting agreement on Saturday. The surprise was that the violations were so well carried out. There may have been a few houses which absolutely told their alumni and visitors that no drinking was allowed on the premises, but the Ram's check-up hasn't revealed any so far. Most houses carefully kept alumni drinking in bars and out-of-the-way rooms. Imports were also drinking in bars and side rooms in most of the houses, but only a few houses went all the way and permitted coed drinking. The few that did were the old perennial violaters of the agreement who have permitted undercover coed drinking in their houses for years. They were the same houses which were so unhappy when the hoop-raw began last spring for coed drinking. They knew a hornet's nest was being stirred up, and they didn't like it, for they already had what they wanted.

The Ram Sees where sorority rush is over for another year, and he's breathing a sigh of relief. Now that the hen parties are over, he's looking for invitations to the open houses which inevitably follow. He promists to polish up his horns and trim his hooves. Invitations may be sent to The Ram, %The Daily Tar Heel, Box 1030. All will be honored.

Reaction Piece

David Mundy

Louis the Liberal in his Sunday column gets off some of the best examples of the typical "liberal" demagoguery. His hand shows with the first word, "REactionary." "Reactionary" is a dirty word in politics. It is considered good practice in most writings by liberals to dub your opponent a Reactionary at the very beginning, and never demonstrate why. I'm conservative when compared with Mr. Kraar, sure, but not a reactionary; I see nothing in the past I want to go back to—especially the 1932-1952 era. What with my believing in a moderate amount of socialism, Kraar's readers may well imagine where his political sympathies lie.

My criticism of the National Association for a Free College Press still stands. Sure, Looey, you may not have drawn it up to threaten your more conservative critics. But it still stands as a defense against criticism, and, in some situations, as a possible blackmail threat. Should some organization, say the American Legion, be foolish enough to dare criticize the editorial policies of the DTH, I can just see the NAFCP swinging into action. The American Legion, of course, will be immediately labeled REACTIONARY, and an enemy of a free press—when in fact it was only criticising the editorial policies.

Looey also adds some comment about my being a "campus Westbrook Pegler." That seems to be a dirty word, too. Not being at all familiar with Mr. Pegler, a newspaper columnist, I believe, I can but assume that he is one of Looey's imaginary Reactionaries." He also comes up with some sly references to my "Pegler-like logic." How about some specifics, Mr. Kraar? You may be able to sick mud on most of the people on the other side of the political fence, but it doesn't stay so well on me.

Admittedly, Looey's article did contain two items of fact. Both were completely untrue. He did a pretty good job of painting me as an adolescent, would-be cynical and sophisticated grown-up who had been disappointed in compus politics. Some inferiority complex also came close to being inferred. Ain't true, Looey. A subscription to the Democratic Digest goes to everyone who has ever been me at a meeting of either campus party. You were absolutely incorrect when you stated my membership in one of the parties. This, I might say, shows the typical liberal's disregard for factual matters.

Looey, in a fashion which I wish was inimitable, manages to confuse my criticism of "liberal" editorial policies in student newspapers with freedom of the press. Surely, I'm favoring freedom of the press. I don't like for the liberals to have such a weapon as the NAFCP, especially since it could be used by less enlightened editors.

Kraar's column carried only one other item of a factual nature, the number of freshmen checking the YRC blank on the CMAR interest cards. Maybe liberals have a different number system, but I counted 57 instead of 51. I have the names to prove it, too. Shall we refer to the Math department? I insist, of course, on a bipartisan commission.

Why only 57 freshman Republicans? There were almost three times as many young Democrats on the cards—and the proportion is almost the same among the registered voters of North Carolina. I have also had occasion to meet a few new students who didn't care to indicate their party preference. The reason? They say that they fear possible discrimination. I am tempted to suggest to the YRC that it maintain a "closed roll," especially for those who don't care let their affiliation be known.

Looey also seems to have the wrong story on why this column is in the DTH. I had it from the editor that it would be good to have a little controversy in a generally one-sided paper. I signed up for that reason, not because I wanted to propagate my "ultra-conservative view and banter the 'petty' politics of the campus of which I am a part."

By the way, I like your column, too, Looey.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Cox

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others. —Hipponatis, circa 500 B. C.

THE HORSE was fetlock-deep in sports reports of local, state and metropolitan by-liners and columnists, when I saw him slurping coffee in Doc Monroe's Pine Room.

Why all these sundry sports-sections, I queried?

"They aren't only Sundry, but they are Mondry and Tuesdry also," The Horse beamed. "Man, our Atlantic Coast Conference has struck it rich! Duke's gargantuan win over Pennsylvia, and South Carolina's brigging of Army's touted team, are bright feathers in our new ACC caps."

Yes; but I had heard some moans of apprehension in Kenan Stewdium at the State game when those scores were announced over the public-address system. And everybody had heard the Tar Heel stands sing their perennial favorite: I-Don't-Give-A-Damn-For-You-Know-What University.

"Me, I don't go along with the lads who want to see Dook trimmed by no matter what opponent," The Horse shrugged. "When you examine the proposition closely, you will agree that Dook, like us, is a Liberal Arts, a Law, and a Medical School set up, and thus closer to our form of edueation by far than is State. Also, aside from these aforestated reasons why we should be in academic harmony with the Methodist Flatters, if and when Dook beats us at anything, be it Mambo or the legalized mayhem called Football, I'd much rather they did so as an unbeaten team, than as a bunch of prostrated doormats over which all other opposition had trod."

I was inclined to agree, much as I favor going in the opposite direction to The Horse's, as a general thing. I looked more closely at the papers The Horse had perused and discarded, and I saw the Durham Morning Herald's Jack Horner daily stint there.

"Jack has a durned good column along these same lines," The Horse said. "Albeit I do not find The Durham Herald-Sun papers to be consistently as sunny as their publishers herald them to be, they do a good job; and where they stray from the paths of superior journalism, they but give support to my stated position that Creative Writing is a legitimate and important function in a Journalism School. That newspapers are printed in black-and-white is not to say the words which they display need not be colorful. Accuracy does not inhibit entertaining writing."

Without being too quodlibetically profound, would The Horse elucidate further?

"Try and stop me," The Horse entered. "Now, if I were a young sportswriter, I would try and pattern myself along the classical lines of W. O. McGeehan, or Damon Runyon, or Grantland Rice, or Hype Igoe, or H. I. Phillips, or of Westbrook Pegler in the happier days when Wes was a crack sportswriter and not a cracked general busybody and professional scold. I would steep myself in History and in Mythology and in enough of the Forms of Poetry so that, come some rainy day when Dook isn't running wild against Penn or when Choo-Choo has chugged off to better parting pursuits and being pursued, I'd be able to sit down at my battered typer and entertain my readers with more than a gun-to-gun spray of first-downs, penalties and points-after."

Poetry? The Horse thought a newswriter should be a poet?

"Not in the T. S. Eliot meaning of the word," The Horse specified. "But certainly such eye and ear-pleasing devices as Alliteration, Assonance, Cliche, Conceit, Epigram, Epithet, Euphuism, Metaphor, Simile, Hyperbole, Inversion, Metonymy, Onomatopoeia, Parody —"

Okay, okay. This was too quodlibetical. But just as an example, could The Horse give me a good example of Parody in writing of Sports?

"Granny Rice," The Horse stated promptly, "unless memory does me a disservice. The year Babe Ruth had the boom lowered on him for his frantic antics, and he made his record-breaking home-run comeback; and Grantland Rice (I hope) parodied, 'Ruth, Crushed To Earth, Will Rise Again.' Or just last year when an unsung writer had his parody singing over the wires to every paper in the U. S.: 'It's not if you won or lost, my lad, But how well you played Notre Dame.' Get the idea?"

Yes; but could such devices be taught?

"Student and workaday writers can expose themselves to them," The Horse stated flatly. "They can spend occasional time working at it until they develop a facility for these forms, also occasionally. Like food seasoning, it should be used sparingly. There is no more sense to eating caviar all the time than there is to eating oatmeal all the time. The Golden Mean, me lad, The Golden Mean. Moderation, to be sure; but—be entertaining as well as informative. Don't James Joyce your readers; but neither give them a sports account that is as confusing as a Bloodhound Bus Lines schedule of arrivals and departures."

The Horse, then, exemplified moderation in everything?

Mr. Wump gave with a derisive whump. . . .

Follow The Simple Directions; Go To The Maryland Game

Maglie, Lemon Slated To Pitch Today

Tar Heel Sports

By TOM PEACOCK

IF I WERE WALKING down Franklin Street and a ragged looking fellow pulled me down the alley by the Rathskellar with a furtive look in every direction, I'd be on my guard for something phoney. And if this man offered me a train ticket on a Seaboard Air Line streamliner, with club car, to Washington, D. C. and back for half price, I'd be even more wary. But if a fine upstanding person such as the president of the student body or the president of the University Club made this offer, and guaranteed it was good, then I'd be inclined to buy the ticket.

And then if these gentlemen said that they had arranged to cancel classes on Saturday, I'm sure I would plunk down that half buck for a full ticket right there on the spot. I'd go up there simply for the ride (that club car means a lot) and because Washington is a good town and all that stuff.

However, there is something extra. A football game or two has been thrown in at a slight extra charge. Carolina's heretofore undefeated Tar Heels play Maryland University at College Park on Saturday, October 16, and this is the weekend on which you can go cheap and with fear of retribution in that eight o'clock on Saturday. Those Tar Heels could easily be undefeated when they take the field against Maryland, too, though it's probably an ill omen to mention the possibility of it. Carolina will be slightly favored against Tulane Saturday, and the following week should be rated even or a small underdog against Georgia.

WHATEVER THE RECORDS ARE, it is a fact that when Carolina and Maryland take the field it is usually a tossup ball game with the underdog playing inspired ball. The UNC band will be along to give everybody moral support, and all sorts of festivities are planned for Carolina students up at the nation's capital, but I'll come to that later.

You say you belong to a fraternity, and you all are planning a small car caravan up there, complete with confederate flags? Well, don't leave the flags behind, but let old Uncle Tom Cressy and his boys do your planning for you. Just follow these simple steps. Got your pencil ready? Here's what you do: Go to the Y, or Graham Memorial travel agency, or to the Town and Campus, and make reservations for you and your organization. Reserve a whole car, complete with head and water cooler, just as long as you pay for it. Then call Woollen Gym and reserve tickets for all the fellows and their dates, and those folks down at the gym will bill the house; then you send the charge home on your house bill under "Dues." Isn't that simple?

This train goes through Raleigh, but you don't have to worry about getting over there. Special buses for the students leave the campus at three o'clock Friday afternoon and take you right to the station to catch the train at four, arriving in Washington at 9:30.

FOR THOSE PERSONS who don't want to miss out on another exciting Chapel Hill Sunday there will be a train leaving Washington at 12:45 a.m. Sunday morning, and the buses will be patiently waiting back in Raleigh. But George P. Marshall, owner of the Washington Redskins, has declared Sunday "Charlie Justice Day" in honor of a halfback on the team who is an erstwhile Carolina player of some note. The Redskins play the Philadelphia Eagles Sunday afternoon, and if you want to stay around town, a train leaves at 6 p.m. and another at 10 p.m. Sunday. This might cause the cords to break the local sanity code, but steps are being taken to remedy that situation at this very moment.

Up here in the capital of the Union plans are being made. There will be a pep rally Friday night, probably on the Monument Grounds. It is reported that Jim Fountain wanted to hold it on the Capitol steps but it interfered with the newsreel cameras. In 1949 a rather impromptu parade, led by the Carolina band in full uniform, marched up 14th street and blocked traffic for hours, and we hope that this deplorable situation isn't repeated. Saturday night after the game there will be a free dance for Carolina students at the Shoreham Hotel, and finally, if you want a place to stay, these people will make reservations for you.

No hot water bottle service is provided.

Irish Now First In Nation; Duke Jumps To Quick Sixth

Notre Dame, a familiar figure, rules the roost as the No. 1 college football team today in the weekly Associated Press poll, but there are enough newcomers among the next nine to require introductions all the way around.

Coach Terry Breannan's Irish, who rocked Texas 21-0 in their opener, replaced Oklahoma in the No. 1 spot. Oklahoma, top team in the first regular poll last week, had its difficulties in defeating Texas Christian 21-16 and dropped to second place.

But among the others in the honored group only the name Maryland has a familiar ring. The top ten is completed with Iowa at No. 3, UCLA at No. 4 and Wisconsin at No. 5. Then come Maryland, Duke, Mississippi, Southern California and Penn State.

In the nationwide poll of sports writrers and sportscasters, Notre Dame received 94 first place votes and 1,438 points based on 10 for first, nine for second, etc. Oklahoma got 24 first place votes and 1,224 points.

All of the top 10 teams except Oklahoma will see action this week and old man upset is always lurking just around the corner.

Notre Dame meets Purdue, rated No. 19, at Notre Dame Saturday, and Maryland goes to Los Angeles for a game with UCLA Friday night in the only head-on clash of teams in the top 10 this week.

Five of the top 10 teams a week ago are missing this week, and two of them—Georgia Tech and Illinois—disappeared from the first 20.

Penn State, not even among the first 20 a week ago, jolted Illinois 14-12, while Florida shocked Georgia Tech 13-12. Tech was fifth and Illinois sixth last week.

Texas skidded from 4th to 12th, Michigan State from 7th to 13th, and Baylor from 10th to 11th. Iowa, 12th last week, beat Michigan State 14-10, while Baylor had to work for a 25-19 verdict over Vanderbilt.

Two other newcomers to the first 10 are Duke and Southern California. Duke blasted Penn 52-0 and USC trimmed Pittsburgh 27-7. Southern California was 15th and Duke 18th last week.

Notre Dame, in meeting Purdue Saturday, will be remembering 1950 when the Boilermakers won a 28-14 upset and ended a 39-game undefeated string for the Irish. Purdue thumped Missouri 31-0 in its opener last week.

Other games involving teams in the top 10 this week are Montana at Iowa, Wisconsin at Michigan State, Tennessee at Duke, Mississippi at Villanova, Southern California at Northwestern and Penn State at Syracuse.

Cleveland Is Favored, 9-5

Durocher Should Pick Irvin, Rhodes Today

NEW YORK, Sept. 28 (AP)—Crafty Sal Maglie, the New York Giants' 37-year-old curveball pitcher, and Bob Lemon, Cleveland's 23-game winning ace, will open the World Series tomorrow at the Polo Grounds to the complete surprise of practically nobody.

Although Managers Leo Durocher of the Giants and Al Lopez of the Indians held up official announcements until early afternoon, almost every fan has "selected" the pitchers days earlier.

Strong support for the American League champs, who set a league record by winning 111 games, sent the Las Vegas gambling odds to 9-5 on the Indians. Solid front line pitching and the tradition of American League victory, unbroken since 1946 edged the price higher.

A survey of baseball writers who turned up at the Polo Grounds to watch the two clubs in their final workouts showed a lopsided vote vote for a Cleveland victory. In this corner, it looks like the Tribe in six.

Durocher, who kept the press waiting for about two hours while he met with Commissioner Ford Frick, Lopez and the umpires at Frick's downtown office still held out one bit of information—his starting left fielder. Depending on how he feels about it tomorrow morning, Durocher will play Dusty Rhodes, a left-handed hitter with a .341 average, or the veteran Monte Irvin, right-handed with a .262 average.

If Rhodes plays he'll bat in the No. 7 cleanup spot, followed by Willie Mays, the league batting champ, and Hank Thompson, Irvin starts, Mays will hit fourth followed by Thompson and Irvin in that order.

There were no "ifs" in the Cleveland lineup with Dave Philley, a switch hitter, definitely assigned to right field, the only doubtful spot. Some thought Lopez might use platoon Wally Westlake and Dave Pope in right because Philley batting only .226 has been in a bad slump.

Lopez will follow Lemon with Early Wynn, another 23-game winner, in the second game and Durocher will use Johnny Antonelli, his game winning left-hander. Mike Garcia will work for Cleveland in the third game at Cleveland Friday but Durocher isn't ready to go that far yet. It will be Ruben Gomez or Don Liddle, depending on what has happened.

Maglie has made a fine comeback after suffering with a bad back and a sorry 8-9 record last season. The scowling "barber" with the long sideburns applied the clincher last week by beating Brooklyn just as he had won so many big games all season. In his only previous World Series start, he lost to the New York Yankees in the fourth game in 1951, lasting five innings. During the 1954 season, Maglie completed nine of 32 starts for a 3.26 earnde run average and a 14-6 record. The veteran righthander's main stock in trade is a wide-breaking curve, often thrown after an inside fast ball.

Lemon, a specialist in breaking stuff with a good fast ball, uses a "sinker" for his strikeout pitch. The 34-year-old right-hander won two games for the Indians in the 1948 series against the Boston Braves.

Whiz On Defense End Will Frye Is Named First 'Athlete' Of Week'

By BERNIE WEISS

Will Frye, 6-foot North Carolina end, has been chosen as the "Athlete of the Week" by vote of the sports staff of The Daily Tar Heel.

Frye was given the title after a close battle with Bill Koman. Both boys played triple A brand football Saturday when the Tar Heels whipped N. C. State in their opening game of the season, 20-6.

Frye played an excellent game defensively, said Coach George Barclay. "On three occasions he stopped State when State had to be stopped, throwing the backs for big losses."

Barclay also commented that Frye's play at the end position Saturday was better than any Carolina had had in the past three or four years.

A junior, Frye won a football monogram here in 1952 as a freshman when the frosh were allowed to play on the varsity. He also lettered last season, and holds two monograms in baseball.

Saturday, Jim Weaver, commissioner of the Atlantic Coast Conference, remarked that Frye was easily the outstanding player on the field. He was in on a large number of tackles. Offensively, he made a tough catch look easy for a 10-yard gain.

But it was his defensive play, either directly or indirectly, which won him the award and a gift from the Town & Campus clothiers. At the outset of the game Frye nailed George Marinkov, fleet State halfback, for a five-yard loss. Thereafter Marinkoy either did his running through the line or around the other side, and was able to net only five yards the remainder of the game. Two other times he halted the State backs when it appeared as if the Wolfpack was destined for touchdowns.

'54 Cross Country Team Opens Season Saturday

Carolina's cross-country team will open its 1954 schedule here Saturday afternoon, playing host to N. C. State.

The freshman runners will toe the mark at 3:45, and the varsity teams will get off 15 minutes later. The boys will race over a four-mile course which begins and ends at Fetzer Field.

Carolina coach Dale Ranson expects lots of trouble from State, Atlantic Coast Conference champions last season. The Wolfpack is paced by David Miller the conferenec two-mile titleholder.

Carolina has eight lettermen returning and 11 frosh who have graduated to the varsity. The squad is headed by Bobby Barden, No. 1 man last year, and Jim Beatty, the outstanding freshman candidate. Cross-country co-captains are John Houghton and Don Wright.

Redskins Drop Paul Lipscomb, Lineman With Squad 10 Years

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28. (AP)—The Washington Redskins today dropped two players, including tackle Paul Lipscomb, a 10-year veteran in professional football.

The club, which lost 41-7 to San Francisco in its season opener last Sunday, also asked waivers on Walt Cudzik, a rookie from Purdue. Cudzik played a linebacking role against the 49ers.

Lipscomb, a University of Tennessee standout a decade ago, has been one of the National Football League line stars for years. He didn't fit into the youth movement begun by the Redskins' new coach, Joe Kuharich.

Team Scrimmages Freshmen, Romps For Five Touchdowns

Carolina's Tar Heels got down to serious work today for Saturday's tussle at Tulane with a lengthy scrimmage session against freshman competition.

Both the first and second stringers displayed easy-moving ground and air attacks. Five touchdowns were scored with halfback Ed Sutton's 70-yard gallop, the longest run of the day.

Also highly impressive in the strictly offensive session were fullback Don Klochak, halfback Sonny Ridenhour and quarterback Leonard Bullock. Klochak and Ridenhour each got off runs of better than 30 yards while Bullock's passing consistently accounting for yardage.

Bullock, who gave an outstanding though brief performance against N. C. State Saturday, superintended the No. 2 team with Marshall Newman quarterbacking the No. 1 combination. Al Long handled the varsity forces in the latter part of the session.

Freshmen Play South Carolina

The Carolina freshman football team, which opens its season Oct. 7 against the South Carolina frosh at Laurinburg, will boast a mansized line and a flock of fleet backs.

Coach Ralph Floyd, in his first year as coach of the Tar Babies, has had his squad in daily workouts since Sept. 6.

Heading the Tar Baby line candidates are a couple of North Carolinians—Greensboro's Jim Jones and Belmont's Jackie Lineberger—and Haines City, Fla., gridder Beetle Bailey.

Jones, who at 180 is the squad's smallest center, has lived up to pre-practice notices. The former Greensboro Senior High star came to Carolina with a long list of honors, among them selections as All-Western Conference, All-State, All-Southern, All-American, most outstanding North Carolina member of the All-Southern squad, to the Shrine Bowl Game, and as the most outstanding player in last year's East-West All-Star Game.

Science At UNC

UNC Professor Directs Expedition

By Charles Childs

Lac Duplix, located in northern Canada, was the site of a two-week scientific expedition directed last June by Dr. Morris Davis of the Physics Department.

The nearest settlement to Lac Duplix was Neoskweskan, a group of four huts more than 250 miles from the expedition's camp.

The expedition included Dr. Davis, Dr. Robert Blackwell, David Herring and Robert Brehme, who at that time were with the University. They were flown to the site by the U. S. Air Force, which sponsored the $20,000 undertaking.

Their job was to determine the time which the total eclipse passed over their position. Since this actual job did not consume all of their time, they managed to take hikes through some of the unchartered area. While hiking one day, they came across an old Indian settlement and there they found some Indian clothing.

Food for them was no problem, but this was because the Air Force had left them with a four months' supply of army rations. The men lived on this for six days. It was on their sixth day that they had their first contact with the outside world. Contact was a supply plane which could not land because the water around the party was too rough. The plane dropped the fresh food and 15 dozen eggs fell into the lake. Two men managed to retrieve 15 of the eggs, but the surrounding trees had already got their share.

The group fulfilled its purpose of determining the time of the passage of the total eclipse. This information, correlated with that from the 15 other expeditions throughout the world, will enable the Air Force to determine with greater accuracy the distances between any two places on the earth. As an example, the distance between the American and European continents is known, within 1,000 feet.

With the new data on the total eclipse, the Air Force will be able to determine this distance within 100 feet. Such accuracy is of the greatest importance when using guided missles.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Dr. Davis will report on the expedition and show slides of the expedition at 4:30 this afternoon in room 206 of Phillips Hall. Interested students are invited to attend.)

and I heard a voice in the next yard instructing a tree surgeon exactly what to do in a rather brusque and rude tone.

"I didn't like the tone, and asked my 'boss' who it was. 'Haven't you met Mr. Stagg?' he asked, and took me next door.

"He introduced us, and though I'm not a big man at all, Stagg was a head shorter than I am. He drew himself up to his full height and threw out his chest, despite the fact he was wearing dungarees and a sweat shirt. He bowed low, stuck out his hand and said, 'Welcome, sir, to the University of Chicago.' I had been there for five years then.

"A very famous coach was named an assistant coach, and with him came his son from Indiana, a brilliant boy and a fine football player. He was in my class, and never did a lick of work, so I had to flunk him. Then he took the course over again under a young first year man from Wisconsin, and the instructor came to me saying that the boy was flunking, but he couldn't flunk a football player.

"I told him he was mistaken, that he could flunk one, and that I had flunked him myself. He said I was different, I had tenure, but I insisted there was no difference, so the young man got flunked again. He took the course the third time, this time by correspondance, and he was doing the work perfectly.

"Coincidentally, he had the same young instructor, who noticed that all the lessons were typewritten, including the signature. It was required that the exams be taken in a certain place, in sort of a glass cage, so we decided to stroll over and watch him take the exam, did, and it wasn't the boy at all. We asked him who he was, and he got so flustered he spilled the whole story, that he had been hired by the boy to take the course for him. Stagg didn't even know about it.

"It was a funny thing; Stagg wanted to win, but he wanted to build character more then win. It sounds corny, but he put a lot of stock inathletics and character."

Dr. Kunstman has an apartment in Mrs. Patterson's house on franklin St., and from his desk he watches Chapel Hill go by.

"I like this placFe," he says. "It fascinates me. Things like that wonderful view from the Castle, what do you call it? It has tradition. Chicago is young you know, and doesn't have much tradition. Chicago is like the young Southern college that had the sign on the lawn, 'It is a tradition here not to walk on the grass. This tradition will start Monday.'" and IV, has been re-assigned to the European Theatre.

M/Sgt. Michael Pennella, previously the NCO in charge of the Cadet Training Corps, has been re-assigned to the Philippines. His place will be taken by M/Sgt Marion W. Hudson.

T/Sgt. R. J. Wifliams, assistant to the supply officer, has been assigned to Keesler Air Force Base, Mississippi. His place will be taken by S/Sgt. John W. Hawk.

The curriculum of studies also remains unchanged except for the new Air Science IV program. This group has been re-organized into three sub-studies; leadership and Management, Military Action and the Art of War and Military Aspects of World Political Geography.

The list for the new officers and staff of the cadet corps has not as of yet been completed, but will be finished and posted in the next two weeks.

Colonel George J. Smith, Professor of Air Science, is the head of the University Air Wing. As his assistants he has Lt. CCol. Mark T. Orr, Director of Instruction and Capt. James A. Schofield, Director of Administration.

Colonel Smith said yesterday on behalf of the Corps, "The principle purpose of the Air Force ROTC program is to select and train University students who are capable of becoming Air Force pilots and aerial observers as well as good leaders. Recent changes in the physical, academic and leadership standards have reduced the size of the corps of cadets, but I feel that all of the cadets now enrolled in the program are officer candidates of the highest calibre."

A new director of library extension services in the University has taken over guidance of the wide-scale activities of the department as it begins its 36th year of service to the citizens of North Carolina.

Mrs. Charles C. Hopkins has assumed her new role as head of the UNC Library's Extension Department, succeeding Miss Nellie Roberson, who retired recently after 39 years of University library extension work.

The Extension Department, which lends book and other materials to teachers, high school and college students, individuals and clubs throughout North Carolina, helps prepare programs for women's clubs and other organizations, and publishes several study outlines each year.

Mrs. Hopkins has been with the library for the past six years, working in the general college and current affairs reading rooms before joining the extension department.

Before coming to Chapel Hill, she was librarian of the May Memorial Library, Burlington, for six years, and prior to that was children's librarian and first assistant at a branch library, Lakewood, Ohio.

Born and reared in Evansville, Ind., Mrs. Hopkins holds a librarian's degree from Western Reserve University in Cleveland. Her husband is on the staff of the Duke University Library's Catalog Department.

Mrs. Hopkins writes regularly for library extension publications, and for the past three years has edited "Bookmark," published by the friends of the library.

Miss Roberson's career in extension work closely parallels the history of the department which she headed since its organization in 1921. A native Chapel Hillian, she attended Meredith College and graduated from Woman's College of the University of Richmond with a Bachelor of Literature degree. Later she completed a Bachelor of Arts degree at UNC.

After teaching school in Chapel Hill a short time, she became secretary in the University Extension Division at its creation. Miss Roberson's main work was correspondence with women's clubs, answering their requests for material.

Since these requests increased yearly, and were largely for printed matter, a University Division Library was set up, headed by Miss Roberson. Later the service became a part of the University Library, but has always worked closely with the extension division.

Library extension offices, located on the lower level of the University Library Building, receive the thousands of inquiries and requests yearly from all types of organizations in all sections of the state, which are filled as a service of the University to the State.

'. . . A Neighbor To The Whole Community'

Praise Comes In From All Over Country For Street

Prais epoured in from all over the nation as well as the University campus yesterday for Author James Street, Chapel Hill resident for the last eight years, who died of a heart attack here Tuesday night.

As might be expected, the tributes came not only from literary celebreties but from people in all walks of life. From the Chancellor of the University down to rural churchcman, people praised Jimmy Street.

Chancellor Robert B. House said "James Street was a splendid friend and neighbor not only to the University but to the whole community."

And a box of fruit came to the Street residence yesterday from a leader in a small rural church who said "I don't know how we could have gotten along without you."

Street died at Memorial Hospital here Tuesday at 10:50 p. m. after a heart attack suffered while he was presenting awards at a meeting of the North Carolina Associated Press broadcasters in the Carolina Inn .

The famed author was born in Lumberton, Miss., on October 15, 1903.

Funeral services for Street will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock at the Chapel of the Cross Episcopal Church. The Rev. David Yates will conduct the service and interment will follow in the Chapel Hill Cemetery. The family has requested that flowers be omitted and that, instead, contributions be sent to the Journalism Foundation at the University.

Said Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver yesterday: "In Mr. Street's death the South has lost one of its most accomplished writers and Chapel Hill, one of its most colorful and vital personages. We will all miss him."

Kermit Hunter, well known author of "Horn in the West" and Universiti graduate student, said "His passing is a double loss. As a friend he was as humble, as honest and as kind a man as I ever knew.

"As a writer he added something above and beyond literary style and technical facility—an abiding love for his fellow man."

Typical of tributes from former newspaper associates was a message from Allen J. Gould, executive editor of the Associated Press, who referred to Street as an "outstanding newsman before going on to greater writing achievements, who is well remembered as a grand person and fine friend by all of us."

JAMES STREET
". . . we will all miss him

Lester C. Stratton, director of Boy Scouts of America: "Jimmy was a wonderful husband, father and friend. He will be greatly missed."

Chapel Hill Novelist Betty Smith said: "I and so many others shall miss the kindly friend who was ready always to give of his time and health and wise understanding to those who came to him."

Edmond H. Smith Jr., Hickory, president of the North Carolina Associated Press Broadcasters, the group Street was addressing when he collapsed last night, said yesterday: "We can never forget how Mr. Street's graciousness and wit made our banquet last night such a happy occasion."

From New York, former University President Frank P. Graham wired "This great loss is shared by the people in Chapel Hill, the South and the country."

Noel Houston, Chapel Hill novelist who shared with Street pages in the recent copy of Holliday, said "Aside from his great writing ability, the thing that impressed me most about Jimmy was his genuine desire to help everybody around him, especially those in greatest need."

Henry P. Davis, an editor of Field and Stream, said "The world is better off for his having lived. He will be sorely missed and long reemmbered."

Paul Green, Chapel Hill playwright, said he knew "of no one who was more effective in puncturing sham and falseshood."

Lambert Davis, director of the UNC Press: "To any one who ever knew him, James Street's books, however, accomplished they were, were always overshadowed by the man himself. He had a fine professional devotion to his craft, and he was a tireless worker; but his wonderful outgoingness went to all around him."

A number of close friends and associates, as well as relatives from out of town, planned to attend Street's services.

They include Harold Matson, Greenwich ,Conn., Street's literary agent since he began his writing career; H. Allen Smith, of "Totem Pole" fame, a close associate in newspaper work, and Mrs. Smith, Mt. Kisco, N. Y.; LeBaron Barker, chief editor of Doubleday, New York publishers, and George Joel, chief editor, Dial Press, New York.

Relatives planning to attend include Mrs. John C. Street, Meridian, Miss., the author's mother; John Scott Street, Chilicothe, Ohio, a brother, and Mrs. Street; Mrs. D. A Ellitt, Meridian, Miss., a sister, and Mr. Elliott; Dr. James Street, Jr., New York literary agent, a son, and Mrs. Street; John Lee Street, Greensboro, a son, and Mrs. Street; Mrs. Leo Weston, Cincinnati, Ohio, a niece; John Scott Street, Jr., of Chillicothe , Ohio, a nephew; Charles Turner Street, Laurel, Miss., a cousin, and four grandchildren.

Other survivors include Mrs. Street, the former Lucy Nash O'Briant, and a daughter, Miss Ann Street of the home.

Active pallbearers will be N. B. Adams, C. D. Van Cleve, Noel Houston, W. L. Wiley and Harold Walters, all of Chapel Hill, and Harry Golden, Charlotte.

Honorary pallbearers will be Calvin Burch, Paul Green, Cecil Johnson, George Shepard, Roland McClamrock, Walter Spearman, Dr. Fred Patterson and Robert F. Schenkknan, all of Chapel Hill; Frank Borden Hanes, Winston-Salem, and Dr. Malcolm Kemp, Pinebluff.

Reid Will Introduce Leniency Bill For Honor Council First Offenders

Student Party Veep To Tender Measure Asking For Probation As Usual Discipline

David Reid will introduce a bill tonight in the student Legistature calling for probation as "the usual punishment" for first offense Honor System violators.

Reid, Student Party vice-chairman, will also outline in his bill a system of faculty counselors to whom first-offense violators would be assigned if put on probation.

This "additional flexibility in the distrbution of penalties" would "elevate the Honor Councils from their positions as mere juries to a position of a true judicial body," according to Reid.

No Vote Discussion

Although Reid's bill will not be considered tonight on the floor of the Legislature, it si expected to oe widely discussed among student leaders.

The proposal would fill the need "for rehabilitation and correction instead of mere punishment in firrst offense cases," Reid said yesterday. At present most offenders in honor cases are suspended, even on first offenss, according to Reid.

Teach, Not Punish

Reid states in his bill that "the primary function of the educational institution is to teach, not punish."

The action of the bill continues: "Convictions of persons for cheating where it is the first offense shall carry with it a maximus penality of suspension for a period of one semester. The maximum penalty for first offense cheating shall only be imposed on such rare offender as are judged by the council involved to be flagrant and premeditated violators. The usual punishment for first offense cheating convictions will be probation for a period of not less than one semester nor more than two semesters.

"Individuals who have been placed on a probation status for cheating will be assigned by the Dean of Students Office to a faculty counselor to whom the probationer shall report bi-weekly and at other times when needed to report progress and/or problems of adjustment."

The bill concludes, "No portion of this bill is to be interpreted as prohibiting or discouraging the imposition of more moderate penalties in cases where the council involved feels that the circumstances warrant a more lenient penalty."

The Legislature will meet at 7:30 tonight in Phi Hall.

3 Great Concerts Coming

Helen Masloff Concert Scheduled Here Sun.

The program for the Helen Masloff concert to be presented here Sunday night was announced yesterday by Jim Wallace, director of Graham Memorial Student Union, sponsor of the event.

Miss Masloff, a well-known lyric soprano from New York, is coming directly to Chapel Hill from New York appearances to open Graham Memorial's "petites musicales" concert series for the new school year.

Her concert will be held in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial at 8 p.m. Dr. Walter Golde, Chapel Hill, pianist, will accompany.

Selections from the Masloff concert include "Deh vieni, non tardar," an aria from Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro"; the aria "Air de Lia," from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue"; Tiersot's arrangement of "L'Amour de Mo!"; Richard Strausses "Morgen"; Richard Hargeman's "All Paths Lead To You," and three selections from the Rogers and Hammerstein hit broadway musical "The King and I," "Getting to Know You," "I Have Dreamed," and "We Kissed in the Shadow."

During the past year, Miss Masloff has appeared on the Godfrey Show, the Robert Shaw Collegiate Chorale, numerous radio and television solo appearances in New York and as soloist with the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra.

Alec Templeton To Be In Chapel Hill Oct. 14

Alec Templeton, described in a music magazine as an artist who treats music as a human thing, will appear here on Oct. 14, sponsored by the Student Entertainment Committee. All students will be admitted free with I. D. cards.

Born in Cardiff, Wales, and an American citizen since 1940, Templeton began studying the piano at the age of 4. Since then he has played throughout the world, charming audiences with his music and wit.

At the age of two, he climbed to the family's piano and played in the same key an organ grinder's tune he had heard from the street below The absolute pitch of Templeton has developed into such a remarkable accurate ear that he can identify and assortment of eight or nine unrelated notes; hearing a glass tapped, can tell how many overtones result and exactly what they are; or, hearing a new piece, regardless of its length or technical difficulty can play it through after only one hearing.

The list of his published works includes both serious music, such as his "Piano Quintet," and his Modernizing the Master series, such as "Mr. Bach Goes to Town."

Chamber Orchestra To Play Here Oct. 20

On Wednesday, Oct. 20, the Graham Memorial Activities Board will present The American Chamber Orchestra at Memorial Hall. The orchestra is part of the Chapel Hill Concert Series.

The American Chamber Orchestra was founded in 1950 by Robert Scholz. It was first known as the Mozart Orchestra. This unique group is the result of many years' experimentation before 1950, and when the orchestra started its performances in the music school of the Henry Street Settlement of New York, it was discovered that The American Chamber Orchestra was as good or better than the best of Europe.

The basic aim of the orchestra is not only to play the old masterpieces well, but to play them in the style in which they were originally played, which is in the intimate aristocratic environment for which they were intended, a spokesman for the group says.

Robert Scholz was born in Steyr, Austria, shortly after the turn of the century. He played the piano at the age of four, and when 14, became a pupil at the Moxarteum to Salzburg, where he later began to teach in 1924. He and his brother formed a piano team which made many successful European tours. Scolz became an expert on Mozart, and made many arrangements of the master's music.

Reisner will talk on jazz history and his musicians will demonstrate all varieties from the old time Dixieland type to more sophisticated contemporary concepts.

The year's entertainment schedule, announced yesterday by committee chairman A. C. Hall, includes operetta, drama, literary criticism, modern dance , poetry readings and lectures on science, art and current world problems.

Following the jazz concert, the American Savoyards, in full cast, will give the Gilbert and Sullivan "H.M.S. Pinafore" on Nov. 2.

Brazil Students Tour Campus, Eat Peanuts, Buy UNC Pennants

Eighteen senior students and two professors of the University of San Paulo, Brazil, toured the UNC campus Tuesday.

They arirved here from Miami and after their tour continued on to New York and Boston. Their stay in the States will last for 22 days.

The tour of the campus was conducted by Louise Gray, Ginger Currin and Joanne Tannehill of the Spanish Club. The tour included visits to the language laboratory, the law building, the gym, the Library and the Y building.

Of these places, the group seemed to be most enthusiastic about the indoor pool, the rare book room of the Library, and, of course, the Y according to their coed escorts. They spent much time there, consuming Cokes, strawberry ice cream and buying Craolina pennants. The tour ended with a reception in Carroll Hall lounge.

As only two out of the whole group spoke any English at all, the girls spent most of the afternoon trying to make themselves understood.

Chancellor House overcame the language barrier at the assembly held for them, however, when he played several folk songs on his harmonica, noting that "for the students who do not speak English, music is the language we all understand."

Upon leaving Chapel Hill the Sao Paulo students presented the girls who had accompanied them on their tour with pins and folders from their university.

The Pan American Union arranged the trip to the States for the group to give them an opportunity to tour the Eastern Seaboard and to visit the schools of business administration, industrial firms and points of general interest.

The Girls Got Dunked

Sorority rush is over now, with its memories. Here's one that will live a long time:

The ADPi's were standing in their front yard singing some songs that had been left over from the evening's rush party Monday night. The PiPhi's heard them and decided to join in. Then both groups moved down to the Chi O and Alpha Gam area where they were joined by more coed sonsgsters and the group, now about 40 in number, decided to move on down to the KD house.

As they passed the ATO fraternity house they stopped for a few choruses of "Hark the Sound." Then, for reasons known only to themselves, the boys in the house put a damper on the song fest by turning their garden hose on the assembled beauties.

Yi Ts'ien Wants Glasses

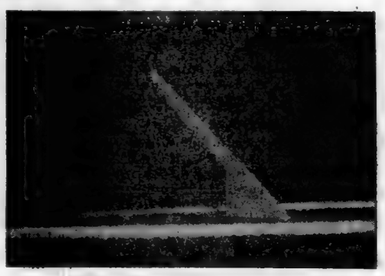
Yi Ts'ien, a graduate student in political science from Formosa, lost his glasses during the rush after the State game on Saturday. Ts'ien, who lives at 103 Connor, said that he lost the glasses at Gate 5 at the entrance of Section 16. Naturally, he has requested that the young gentlemen who found them return the glasses to him. Or if it is more convenient, if they will get in touch with him, Ts'ien will be glad to pick them up himself.

James Street

Certain arty extremists in our midst withheld approval of James Street's writings and considered that since one did not have to walk through forests of symbols and elegant diction to get to the heart of them they were not, in the truest connotation, literature.

Perhaps their judgment will prevail. But there is another side of the fence, another and as telling a test: What pleasure did he give his readers? Despite all that may be hoped or said, readership is a final and exacting arbiter. Here, most of all, James Street was a vastly successful writer. People read and anticipated his books and stories. As a writer he may not have plumbed the depths like the Tolstois, but, as his masterpiece, "The Biscuit Eater," testifies, his stories rang a note of human feeling that many liked.

As sound as his work as an author, we think, is the image of a peppery, outspoken, and perceptive sojourner in his age. The sickness of the age did not afflict him. He feared no repercussion when he had something to say. He thought, had opinions, and didn't hesitate to let others know about them.



Brutus feared that "The evil that men do lives after them; but the good oft lies interred with their bones." In the case of James Street, we don't think there will be any danger.

Anybody Got The Time?

And so we're going to get a sundial.

Mr. Morehead came to town yesterday and talked it over with the Trustees of the Morehead Foundation, everyone took a look at the site (in the parking lot beside the Morehead Planetarium) and after a while, we're going to get it. A sundial.

Not exactly what we always needed, of course, in this day of the 21-jewel Bulova. But presumably nobody tried to talk Mr. Morehead into giving us a new dormitory, even just a little one, to alleviate the three-man room situation; and likely, no one mentioned the fact that the Pharmacy School needs a new building desperately or that our student union is hopelessly outdated, or that things are so bad in the general fund that the Legislature wants to raise the tuition.

All that being as it may, a great, big sundial is on its way. Those who think (as we do)) that the money might be better appropriated, will doubtless find some amusement (as we did) in the fact that as the Foundation Fathers gazed at the wooden replica yesterday afternoon, the skies suddenly darkened, and the hardest rain Chapel Hill has seen in a fortnight came pelting down on the Fathers, the site, and the sundial.

A Sad Ballad About The Old Campus Cafe

Louis Kraar

"THE SPIRIT of a cafe is altogether different."

I couldn't help thinking of that description of a cafe the other day when I noticed that the old Campus Cafe has died, leaving its place for another eating establishment.

Carson McCullers wrote those words in her "The Ballad of the Sad Cafe." And they remind me of the atmosphere of the Campus when Chris and Helen Fotiadis ran it.

EVEN THE richest, greediest old rascal will behave himself, insulting no one in a proper cafe. And the poor people look about them gratefully and pinch up the salt in a dainty and modest manner. For the atmosphere of a proper cafe implies these qualities: fellowship, the satisfactions of the belly, and a certain gaiety and grace of behavior," writes Miss McCullers.

Such a place was the long, smoky Campus Cafe on the evenings when I would go in for coffee and conversation.

The drama addicts gathered in one corner to talk drama, the politicians sprawled in the booths smoking and talking politics, and the coeds sat and talked as only coods can. In between talking about drama and politics, the drama addicts and politicians talked about the coeds.

CHRIS WAS in the Greek navy when he was young, and when he thought of the perils of the sea, he said, he wondered how a man can do one thing when he's young then be scared about the same things when he is older. But Chris was like that, he said.

He knew his customer's names, and when things weren't too busy he would talk—usually about what the students were currently discussing.

CUSTOMERS ATE and drank in the Campus, but you never felt you had to be eating or drinking the whole time you were there. It was okay to nurse one cup of coffee even when the guy at the next table was drinking beer after beer. The main thing Chris and Helen were concerned about was that their students were happy. And if the conversation was good, they were.

Perhaps all this seems a bit too nostalgic for a student, a little too much like an old Chapel Hillian. But I'm worried about the future of the fine art of conversation. With television, dull people, and pedants closing in from every side, one wonders if there is any place left where you can go to eat or drink a little in an unhurried manner and talk to friends.

WE ARE a talking campus. But, it seems to me, we have few places left where we can talk to each other.

The library is a fine place, but conversation is not in order for some are poring over the great (and often the immaterial) books.

Many of our dorms have three men in two-man rooms. And if you've got two roommates in those small rooms, it is difficult to get into the room when both roommates are in an upright position.

The grass-covered grounds or South Building steps are nice talking places, but you can't be served food there.

So you see why I'm sad about the passing of the Campus Cafe. For "the spirit of a cafe is altogether different."

Point Of Order

The McKay Giveaway

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — Charley McNary in whose name a great dam was dedicated last week, would have been uneasy in his grave if he heard the dedication speech of the President of the United States. In fact, he might be uneasy on several counts these days.

McNary, who was a great senator from Oregon, a great Republican, and a great friend of mine, was the author of the McNary-Haugen Bill, the first start toward setting up economic guarantees for farmers. He was also a great conservationist, a great protector of the national forests, and a great advocate of public power. He helped to pioneer Bonneville Dam when others scoffed that this "socialistic Boondoggle" would never pay off, and it was because he stood for these things that the Republican Party picked him in 1940 to run for Vice President of the United States.

So Charley McNary may have been a little restless when President Eisenhower stood on the dam named for him and expressed his opposition to the McNary dams of the future.

Charley also would be restless if he knew what another Oregonian was doing with the national forests, the national parks, and the oil reserves of the nation.

Generous Doug McKay

That Oregonian is amiable, likeable Doug McKay, the auto dealer from Portland, who as Secretary of the Interior has just given up a slice of the beautiful Rogue River National Forest and has appointed a commission to study what national parks should be turned over to private enterprise. Behind the latter move is a plan to turn 50,000 acres of the Olympic National Park over to lumbermen.

Perhaps even more important, Secretary McKay is now maneuvering to turn over the vast oil reserves of Alaska to private exploitation, despite the obection of naval ofifcers and career men in his own Interior Department.

This may be the biggest bonanza the oil industry has been handed for some time, and it may also be a hot political potato once the Democrats get wind of it. So far it's been kept reasonably hush-hush.

Saltonstall Warns

The question is so dynamite-laden that Senator Saltonstall of Massachusetts, Republican, has written a confidential letter to President Eisenhower warning him not to let himself get involved in another Tea-Pot Dome scandal.

The Interior Department has carefully cleaned its files of any critical corerspondence, and the Saltonstall letter has been removed. However, this column is able to reveal that Saltonstall's letter, dated March 4, 1954, warned Eisenhower that the great scandal of the Harding Administration resulted from exactly the same giveaway that Secretary McKay contemplates in Alaska.

"I suggest," wrote Saltonstall, who is chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, "that you lay the matter of the disposition of Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4 before the National Security Council for a determination respecting the essentiality of this property to the national security."

Saltonstall's letter caused hesitation in the Interior Department, and it now looks certain that Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4 would not be released to private exploitation without an OK from Congress. However, Secretary McKay has another Alaskan oil area of 25,000,000 acres set aside for the government under Public Land Order 82 which he also wants to turn over to private oil companies.

An order to this effect has actually been drafted and is now under hush-hush consideration in the Interior Department.

Harding Scandal

To get the full picture, it's necessary to go back to the days of the Teapot Dome scandal in the Harding Administration when Edward Doheny brought a little black bag containing $100,000 to Albert Fall, then Secretary of the Interior, and got in return the Navy's most valuable oil reserve.

After this scandal broke, the government in 1923 took over 23,000,000 acres of Alaskan oil lands for the Navy, now known as NPR 4 or Navy Petroleum Reserve No. 4. Then in 1944, during the war, the government set aside an additional 25,000,000 acres of Alaskan oil land under Public Land Order 82.

Meanwhile, the Navy has spent about $50,000,000 prospecting for oil and gas in this general area, and has located the Umiat field, partly in Navy territory, partly outside; also the Gubik gas field, which extends considerably outside Navy territory.

What Secretary McKay wants to do, together with former Secretary of the Navy Robert Anderson—now Undersecretary of Defense—is open both fields to private development. This would give private oil companies the benefit of $50,000,000 worth of government geophycisal research. All they would have to do is go down to Room 243 of the Interior Department where the charts are kept and take a look at them.

In other words, the oil companies can perform oil exploration work neaf the Arctic Circle without even getting their feet cold and merely for the expense of carfare to the Interior Deparrtment. And when they get the oil, they pay the government only 12½ per cent royalty, whereas the Navy gets 89 per cent royalty from Standard Oil of California, now leasing the Elk Hills Reserve.

Meanwhile, it loks as if Secretary McKay would hold up any disposal the Navy's first Alaskan reserve, called NPR, until Congress acts, but may dispose of the 25,000,000-acre reserve, called PLO 82, most any time. The latter area looks as if it had more oil than the first.

The Ram Sees

If anybody is really planning the long trek down to New Orleans for the Tulane fracas, which we doubt, here is another bit of sage advice. Perhaps this will be useful for sportscribe Tom Peacock if for no one else. The gal's name is Lily Christine, not to be confused with Lili St. Cyr (who's a right good stripper in her own right) or Christine Jorgenson (whom we havn't figured out yet). Lily's address is 500 Bourbon Street, and you can catch her first show about 9 o'clock in the evening. The place is Louis Prima's 500 Club, a raunchy little joint with a lot of smoke and dollar drinks, but who cares as long as the Cat Girl (that's Lily) is doing her routine up on the runway? If we weren't a Ram, we might be a cat-lover ourself.

Mad Man Manning Muntzing is all set to stage Act II of the the Great TV Giveaway! The Mystery of the Missing Television has apparently been solved. Now the problem is to grab some more cash with which to install them. The installation money is something the Stupid Legislature forgot to include when it made its big political grandstand play last year and spent all the the money in sight on TV receivers so no one in the dorms would miss an installment of Dragnet. Money is getting tight all over, but the power-happy Student Party has to make good on its TV promises so it can make political capital of them in the fall elections. The Ram just happens to be one of the suckers who isn't living in a dorm and who doesn't get a red cent of benefits out of the giveaway, even though his money has gone into the pot along with everybody elses.

It would seem to be an appropriate idea for Jim Fountain and his cheerleaders to sepnd the off weeeknd which is coming up thinking up some new cheers without profanity in them. Even Bushy got a little embarrassed at some of the stuff in the "cheers" of last Saturday, and the reaction of the students in the cheersing section was plain —they didn't go for cussing at all. In the meantime, the best cheer the Ram can think of is BEAT TULANE!

Ignorance Is On The March: The Attack On Free Thought

(The following is reprinted from the Decatur, Illinois Herald. We think it is a clear exposition of this country's greatest domestic problem — the trend toward a rigid intellectual conformity.—Editor.)

Today more Americans have college degrees than ever before.

Yet never before has the educated man been held in lower esteem in America.

A paradox? Yes, a disturbing paradox.

Even more paradoxical is the fact that the man who has been to college is often the most suspicious of education, of intellectualism.

The man with only a grade or high school education still looks up to the lawyer, the teacher, the doctor, the fellow down the street who always has his nose stuck in a big book.

But not the successful business man type, who, as likely as not, has been to college and may even have a degree from a school of business administration.

Anyone who doubts that anti-intellectualism is rife only has to look around him.

The McCarthyites are anti-intellectual although curiously enough a cult of pseudo-intellectualists seeking to justify McCarthyism in thesis-like books and articles has sprung up on the fringes of the McCarthy movement in recent months.

The recurring attacks on Harvard, the very symbol of intellectualism, are a symptom of the new know-nothingism.

In a recent article in the New York Times Magazine Kenneth S. Davis, a Manhattan, Kansas, novelist and biographer, attempted to answer, in terms of 1954, a question first put by the late William Allen White in 1896. In an Emporia Gazette editorial still to be found in collections of essays White asked: "What's the Matter With Kansas?"

Fifty-eight years ago White concluded that Kansas was too radical. Today, writes Davis, "a smug conservatism" prevails. He adds:

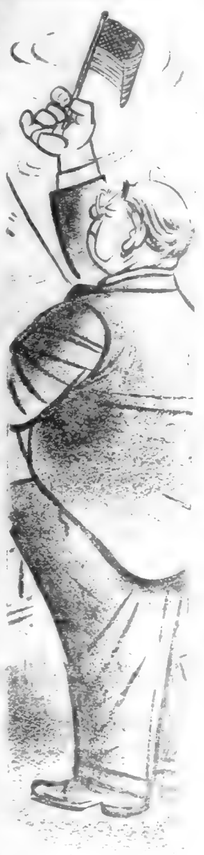
"The economic man has become dominant . . . There is a tacit assumption among our ruling elite that the proper aim of all education, scientific research and cultural activity is the increase of private profits.

"Education is defined as vocational and professional training; scientific research is the development of new, more profitable products and processes; cultural activities are good insofar as they bring new business to the community; and intercollegiate sports are very good because they do bring business, also providing entertainment for businessmen . . .

"A single-minded, unimaginative, timid conformism in key positions; a steadily more standardized intellectual life in consequence—that's what's the matter with Kansas and it is increasingly what's the matter with the United States, in my opinion."

A nation of culture can thrive only on ideas. Once a people become convinced that there is only one way to do things, that people will stagnate. That is one of the great lessons of history, but it is still a lesson that has not been learned.

"Eggheads of the world, unite!" Adlai Stevenson facetiously remarked not long ago. "You have only your yolks to lose!"



There is more truth than humor in Stevenson's exhortation. For the intellectuals, the educated men must come out from behind their books long enough to reassert themselves.

The conofrmists did not make America what it is today. Thomas Jefferson was not a conformist; he was a bristling intellectual. And who would be so bold as to say that Abraham Lincoln was a conofrmist? And what about Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson or Franklin D. Roosevelt? The conformists in American history have been forgotten — because they did so little to make the United States the great nation it is today. It was the innovators the men who thought, the men, if you please, who read books, who did it.

With Goethe, Americans must demand, "More Light! More More Light!"

It was just after one of the most gigantic rush meetings in the world—only the house was a skyscraper out by the East River in New York City and had big panes of glass for most of its walls and instead of Greek letters in the vestibule it had a quotation from the Bible that spoke of the time when the homo sapiens wouldn't study war any more. A hardened clique of big brothers wore a smug grin—and the United States wore the biggest grin of all. There had been a stupendous blackball, with the U. S. the most instrumental party, and the Red Chinese government was out in the chilly Manhattan air.

This may be an approach too flippant for a serious affair. But our attitude toward the United Nations and Red China's part in it has reached a tone that somewhat deserves humor. We have steadfastly maintained that the Communist government of China can't "shoot its way" into the United Nations. Through long recitations in which top diplomats and American statesmen lie between their sheets at night and repeat this catchy phrase like an aphorism from a Puritan copybook, we have become endlessly impressed, not only by its moral meaning, but by its infallibility.

If the current trend continues, we will probably alter the United Nations Charter to say that instead of a meeting ground for nations with differences that need to be resolved in the interest of a peaceful world, it will henceforth be looked upon as what it has become — a glorified international eating club, greek letter club, or what have you. The requirement for membership will not be that the exigencies of international relationship demand it, but that the clique at the U. N.'s inner core "likes the nation that knocks for admittance.

May some revival of sanity prevent this end which we seem now to be approaching!

Our objection to Communist China, intensified by the active and undeclared part that government took in the Korean War and by the nature of its antithetical political philosophy, has now become such an obsession hat it blocks an intelligent approach to the United Nations. In deference to our state as a big brother in the General Assembly, Britain voted with us Sept. 21 against the admission of Red China and brought along the sizeable bloc of votes that she commands. But the obvious question is: Just how long will our Allies, themselves taking a saner attitude toward the question of China's admission, defer to our monomania on the subject?

In our musclebound attitude toward the Communist government, we are undermining our own basic political philosophy—which generally holds that a legitimate government is the government of the majority. And that the Red Chinese government certainly is. Missionaries and other refugees from China tell us that the Communists, by dispatching the graft and many of the absolutely empty stomachs that the Kai-Shek government seemed to wink at, have at least the surface confidence of the vast numbers of the Chinese people.

Add to this the fact that our foreign allies are dismayed and baffled by our stand. William R. Frye, in the Christian Science Monitor, writes:

"There is a long-standing tradition virtually everywhere except in the United States that diplomatic recognition is not a badge of good conduct or approval but merely an acknowledgement of a power-politics fact—that a government does rule its people. The American doctrine that recognition applies approval is considered an aberration broad."

Will we continue to give ear to those gentlemen of the "China Lobby" who in worn voices stigmatize Red China as the little boy from the wrong side of the political tracks and say he should not be allowed the sanctity of our eating club? Or will we at last awaken to the real intent of the United Nations and let down our phony barriers?

Editor:

Just who does this "Ram" think he is anyway and while we are on the subject, WHO is he?

So far he has blasted everyone from poor ol Fred Weaver to your own news editor. And not only does he not have the courage to put his name on his columns but he takes the name of the mighty Rameses and corrupts it.

So far the only thing he has done in the way of imitating the original Ram is to push the football team (a little).

So I'm just writing this little note to let you and this "Ram-character" know that a movement is under way to "dehorn the 'Ram' " (the coward).

And I am sure that the movement will gather sympathizers hand over fist especially in big fraternity court (those poor boys). At last they got a visiting agreement (such as it is) and already this "Ram" is trying to intimate that it has been misused.

To quote an old Anglo-Saxon expression, "ham, ram, beef, or mutton," this character HAS GOT TO GO!

Dusty Rhodes Homer In 10th Wins Opener For Giants, 5-2

'Wasn't Trying'

Giants' Hero Claims Homer Just Accident

New York, Sept. 29. — Dusty Rhodes, mighty New York Giant pinchhitter whose home run in the 10th won the opening game of the World Series, confessed after the game today it was an accident of sorts.

"I wasn't trying for a home run," he said. "I was just trying for a hit."

But what a hit — a decisive 3-run homer for the Rock Hill, S. C., slugger.

"It was the best hit I ever got in my life," he said, laughing.

"Were you worried going up there as a pinch hitter?" he was asked.

"Nope," he said flatly. "The pitcher is the guy who worries. He's got to get me out."

Rhodes' homer was on a curve thrown by Bob Lemon, the Cleveland Indian ace.

Manager Leo Durocher of the victorious Giants, after praising Rhodes and Willie Mays, heaped his affection on his pitchers.

"It was great relief pitching," he said. "I got just what I wanted."

His reliefers were Don Liddle and Marv Grissom.

Liddle, as a matter of fact, pitched to only one batter. The scene was this:

Sal Magli, the crafty 37-year-old Giant starter, had weakened. In the eighth he walked Larry Doby to open the inning and then Al Rosen singled. Up came Vic Wertz. The Big first baseman of the Indians already had a triple and two singles to his credit, and was destined to get a double in the tenth.

So Durorcher waved in Liddle and Maglie made the long, slow walk to the Giant clubhouse.

Rhodes, Mays Responsible: Al

NEW YORK, Sept. 29 (AP)— "The longest out and the shortest home run of the season beat us, that's all."

That's how Senor Al Lopez, Cleveland's smiling-in-defeat manager, summed up today's opening World Series victory by the New York Giants over his American League champions.

He referred to the sensational catch by Giant centerfielder Willie Mays of a screaming 450-foot drive off the bat of Vic Wertz, and the climactic 270-foot homer with which pinch-hitter Dusty Rhodes ended the game in the tenth.

The Indians had two aboard, the score was tied at 2-2, and Wertz had three straight hits when he came up in the eighth. He blasted a 2-1 pitch into centerfield, but Mays turned his back to the plate, almost crashed into the wall while making the catch, fell to the ground, and then threw on deftly to second base to keep everyone away from the plate.

Of Rhodes' home run, Lopez said:

"I thought it was just a routine out when it left the bat. Dave Pope said he though he had the ball all the way, but the wind caught it. But it was a home run, and there's no defense against home runs."

Bob Lemon, who pitched all the way, had little to say about the homer.

"That's the way it goes," he said, "but I'll have to admit it's tough to lose on a hit like that one. I thought it was just another out, and all at once the game's over. Dusty hit under a curve ball and knocked it a mile high, but it got into the stands."

The ball bounded back into the playing field, as fans failed to hold it after it dropped on top of the 11-foot right field wall—about five feet fair—in front of the grand stand seats.

"We had a couple of chances to win the game in nine innings" Lopez said, "but it just didn't work out. In the eighth with men on first and third and one out, Pope looked at a third strike, but it was a good, fooling pitch—a fork ball.

"And in the sixth when Wertz led off with his single to right and Mueller threw wildly trying to pick him off first, Vic could have reached third instead of second, but for an unfortunate thing."

Grissom Wins In Relief Job

Indians Scored Two In First, Giants In Third

By JACK HAND

New York, Sept. 29—(AP)—Dusty Rhodes' 270-ft. pinch home run with two men on base in the 10th inning won a dramatic world series opener for the New York Giants today 5-2 after a truly sensational catch by Willie Mays and tremendous relief pitching by Marv Grissom blunted Cleveland threats.

Rhodes, a sensational pinch hitter in the Giant's pennant march, barely reached the right field stands with his homer. It bounced off the hands of a fan and rolled back onto the field as the umpire signalled a home run.

Cleveland had been threatening all through the late innings, leaving 13 men on base, while Grissom escaped by the thinnest of margins.

In the Giant 10th, after Don Mueller struck out, Mays worked Lemon for a walk. As Lemon threw a ball to Hank Thompson, the next hitter, Mays lit out for second, sliding in under the bouncing peg of Mickey Grasso who had just taken up Cleveland's catching chores.

With Mays on second, Manager Al Lopez ordered Lemon to pass Thompson intentionally, setting the stage for a possibel double play. Rhodes, who delivered 15 pinch hits in 45 trips during the regular season crossed him up.

Morehead Director

Fetzer Is Named As Member Of Track, Field "Hall Of Fame"

Robert Allison (Coach Bob) Fetzer, Executive Secretary of the Morehead (scholarship) Foundation at Carolina, and for 30 years the institution's distinguished director of athletics, has been named to the Helms Hall track and field "Hall of Fame."

Fetzer, while athletic director here, was track and field coach and was called the "dean of southern track." He turned out a host of Southern Conference championship teams and many individual stars, including three Olympians, Harry Williamson, Floyd (Chunk) Simmons and Bill Albans.

ROBERT A FETZER

One of the most beloved and highly respected men in intercollegiate athletics, Fetzer was largely responsible for the growth of the school's athletic program to what it is today. His first love was always track although when he first came here, with his brother Bill, he coached football and turned out many fine teams.

Fetzer was the founder of the celebrated Indoor Games, which was a Southern Conference event until the University pulled out of that conference and became a member of the Atlantic Coast Conference. The Indoor Games are now sponsored by the ACC.

The University's track stadium behind Wollen Gymnasium, where track meets and other sports events are held, was named after him and is called Fetzer Field.

When Fetzer first came here in 1922 the University had only a limited sports program and little in the way of equipment. While he was athletic director, Woollen Gymnasium and Kenan Stadium, along with many athletic fields were constructed. Fetzer, who retired in 1952 and assumed his new duties across campus, was always active in the NCAA, the AAU and other national organizations and served on many important committees.

All-Star Mural Teams Will Be Chosen In '54

With the opening of the intramural schedule last Monday, the Department of Intramurals added something new in the field of recognition for outstanding campus athletes. For the first time, an All-Campus Intramural Team will be chosen in the following team sports: tag football, volleyball, basketball, soccer, and softball.

The requirements for the teams are: an individual must have outstanding athletic ability, must have unlimited sportsmanship and teamwork, and should be a leader on the field of play. Anyone participating in either fraternity or dormitory leagues is eligible for the team, providing he meets the above requirements.

The selections for the teams will be made in the following manner: Prior to each game, each official and team manager will be given a form, on which he will place the names of the outstanding player or players. The forms will be given to the officials, who in turn will take them to the Intramural office. This department will keep a day-by-day record of the players listed on the forms.

At the end of the season a count will be made of all players receiving ballots. The players with the highest number of votes will make up the All-Campus Teams. Selection by position will be made only in the case of volley ball, with three "spikers" and three "set-ups" chosen. In softball, only the pitcher will be chosen. In all other sports, the selection will be made only on the basis of individual merit, with no regard to positions shown.

Also chosen will be the two most outstanding officials in each sport. These men will be selected by the managers and officials at the end of each season. At the end of each semester, managers will select the outstanding official, who will be awarded a trophy for his work.

Rain Fails To Stop Football Workout

Barclay Drills UNC Defense

"The rain isn't going to stop us, we're going right ahead with practice," Carolina football Coach George Barclay said yesterday as the sky blackened and the clouds opened up to give Chapel Hill one of the biggest downpoors of the fall season.

To the high-spirited Tar Heels the rain made little difference. The gridmen ran through pass patterns and did a little punting before settling down to a stiff defensive workout. Coach Barclay had the freshmen team running from Tulane's split-T formation against the varsity.

The Tar Heels meet the Green Wave in New Orleans Saturday, in a renewal of the series which began in 1922. Tulane has won five of the games, Carolina two, and one was a tie. The last time the two teams met was in 1942. A Carolina team hasn't won in New Orleans since 1922.

The Tar Heels will probably be at near top condition for Saturday's tussle. No one will make a definite statement on the condition of halfback Ken Keller's sprained ankle. Keller saw limited action against State last week and is still limping around during practice sessions. Whether the Carolina star will be available for full time action Saturday is still an unanswered question. Keller told reporters yesterday that "the ankle feels good."

Tulane will be operating without the services of veteran halfback Jim Partridge and of regular center Jim Wilson, Saturday against the Tar Heels.

When Coach Barclay was told that the bookmakers had given Carolina an eight point edge over the Greenies, he seemed very pleased and said he hoped they wre right. "I would be satisfied if we could win every game by eight points," he concluded.

Dusty Rhodes Hit Hump Backed, Problem Is Saying It In Chinese

New York, Sept. 29—How do you describe a Chinese home run in Spanish?

Dusty Rhodes' hump-backed blow in the 10th inning, giving the New York Giants the first game oevr Cleveland 5-2, offered this complication today when the World Series was beamed around the world in almost every language.

It was broadcast in English, French and Spanish and televised to every state in the union, and, for the first time, to Cuba where the commentary was in Spanish.

The game was kinescoped in Miami and flown by fast plane to Havana.

Latin American interest was reported at its highest pitch. Latin players dot the roster of both teams with Beto Bobby Avila, Mexico's American League batting champion, the standout.

Customers arriving at the Polo Grounds had a newspaper thrust in their hands with the comment: "Take it — it's free."

It was a special edition of the Phoenix, Ariz., Gaette, flown here ecpecially for the opening game. The paper carried the sztreamer: "Phoenix cheers Giants in Series."

The Giants trained at Phoenix, the Indians at Tucson.

There was one quick pinchhitter before the game even started. Perry Como, the warbling barber sang the National Anthem instead of the familiar Gladys Gooding, who has a franchise on singing the Star Bangled Banner in New York. Como made the anthem sound like a love song, which actually it is.

There were at least 5,000 empty seats in the stands when Cleveland scored two runs in the first inning, proving the first game World Series crowd is not the dyed-in-the-woll baseball variety. Some patrons were drifting in as late as the third inning.

It was a bit incongruous to see Joe DiMaggio, his hair flecked with gray, crammed into the tight press quarters. The ex-Yankee great chain-smoked nervously and looked much more ill at ease as special correspondent for a news syndicate than when he was up there with two out and the count three and two. Newsmen got cricks in their necks looking for Marilyn. She wasn't there. She's in Hollywood.

FOOTBALL THROUGH THE AGES

The football frenzy is upon us. But let us, in the midst of this pandemonium, call time. Let us pause for a moment of tranquil reflection. What is this game called football? What is its history? Its origins? Its traditions? These are not idle questions, for when we have the answers we will appreciate even more fully, enjoy even more deeply, this great American game of football.

First of all, to call football an American game is somewhat misleading. True, the game is now played almost exclusively in America, but it comes to us from a land far away and a civilization long dead.

Football was first played in ancient Rome. Introduced by Julius Caesar, it became one of the most popular Roman sports by the time of Nero's reign. The eminent historian Sigafoos reports a crowd of MMCLDDXVIII people at the Colosseum one Saturday afternoon to see the Christians play the Lions.

With the decline of the Roman empire football fell into disuse. The barbaric Huns and Goths preferred canasta. However, by the Twelfth Century A.D. football had emerged from its twilight and risen to its rightful place in the firmament of European pastimes. The eminent historian Sigafoos reports that the whole continent was in the grip of wild excitement in the year 1192 when the Crusaders, under Freddie Barbarossa, journeyed all the way to Damascus to play the Saracens in the Fig Bowl game. The Crusaders squeaked through, 23 to 21, on a field goal by Dick Coeur de Lion in the closing seconds of the game.

October 21, 1512, will ever remain a red letter day in the history of football. On that day Leonardo da Vinci, who has often been called "The Renaissance Man" because of his proficiency in a hundred arts and sciences, was painting a picture of a Florentine lady named Mona Lisa Schultz. "Listen, Mona baby," he said as she struck a pose for her portrait, "I keep telling you—don't smile. Just relax and look natural."

"But I'm not smiling," she replied.

"Well, what do you call it?" he said.

"Gee, I don't know," said Mrs. Schultz. "It's just an expression, kind of."

"Well, cut it out," said The Renaissance Man.

"I'll try," she promised.

And try she did, but without success, for a moment later the artist was saying to her, "Look, Mona kid, I'm not gonna ask you again. Wipe that silly grin off your face."

"Honest to goodness, The Renaissance Man," said she to him, "it's no grin. It's just the way I look."

"Well, just stop it," said Leonard testily and turned away to mix his pigments.

When he turned back to Mona Lisa and saw the smile still on her face, he became so enraged that he seized the nearest object—a casava melon, as it happened—and hurled it at her with all his strength. Showing great presence of mind, she caught the melon and ran with it from the studio until The Renaissance Man's temper should cool.

This was, of course, the first completed forward pass.

Another date dear to the hearts of all football fans is September 29, 1442. It was on this date, according to the eminent historian Sigafoos, that a sixteen year old lad named Christopher Columbus tried out for the football team at Genoa Tech. He failed to make the team because he was too light. (He weighed at that time only 12 pounds.)

And why, you ask, is this date—September 29, 1442—so dear to the hearts of all football fans? Because young Columbus was so heartbroken at not making the team that he ran away to sea. And if that hadn't happened, he never would have discovered America. And if Columbus hadn't discovered America, the world never would have discovered tobacco. And if the world hadn't discovered tobacco, football fans never would have discovered Philip Morris—which, as every fan knows, is the perfect companion to football. As Sigafoos, the eminent historian, says, "Land's sakes, I can't even imagine football without Philip Morris. I'd sooner go to a game without my raccoon coat than without my neat, rich tobacco-brown snap-open pack of mild vintage Philip Morris Cigarettes which come in regular or king-size at prices young and old can afford. Land's sakes!"

The end of football in Europe came with the notorious "Black Sox Scandal" of 1587, in which Ed Machiavelli, one of the Pisa mob, paid off the University of Heidelberg Sabres to throw the championship game to the Chartres A. and M. Gophers. It was a mortal blow to football on the continent.

But the game took hold in the American colonies and thrived as it had never thrived before. Which brings us to another date that remains evergreen in the hearts of football lovers: December 16, 1771.

On that date a British packet loaded with tea sailed into Boston harbor. The colonies had long been smarting under the English king's tax on tea. "Taxation without representation," they called it, and feelings ran high.

When on December 16, 1771, the British ship docked at Boston, a semi-pro football team called the Nonpareil Tigers, coached by Samuel (Swifty) Adams, was scrimmaging near the harbor. "Come, lads," cried Swifty, seeing the ship. "Let's dump the tea in the ocean!"

With many a laugh and cheer the Nonpareil Tigers followed Swifty aboard and proceeded to dump the cargo overboard in a wild, disorganized and abandoned manner. "Here now!" called Swifty sharply. "That's no way to dump tea overboard. Let's get into some kind of formation."

And that, fans, is how the "T" formation was born.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1 Spade	2 Diamonds	4 Spades	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of diamonds.

The 4 spade bid North made is a beauty. That "triple jump" response should be learned by all players. It is one of the most vital defensive and offensive bids there is. And I'll tell you why. Offensively speaking, there is no other bid that can describe North's holding. The hand is worth 12 dummy points and is too strong for a response of 2 spades and too weak for a response of 3 spades. Hence, the best description of the hand you can give to your partner is four spades. Let him carry the ball from there. Defensively, North's hand is a loser; if the opponents play the contract he can take only one trick. Then, too, if his partner can't make four spades, you can be sure the opponents can make a game, or at least more points by buying the contract themselves.

If the opponents have strength, North's triple jump short circuits their communication to make it very difficult for them to find the right contract. To make such a bid over partner's opening bid when you have not previously passed, these are the requirements: (1) you should have five trumps, (2) you must have a singleton or a void, and (3) you must not have more than 9 high card points.

Maybe by now you have already examined the hand and discovered that with the opening lead of the diamond king, declarer can wrap up seven spades in routine fashion. South merely trumps the opening lead in dummy, plays two rounds of trumps, runs five club tricks, trumps two more diamonds in dummy and three hearts in his hand for 13 tricks. Now don't perk up stupid like and ask why the slam wasn't bid. It's one of those freak slam hands that can't possibly be bid logically. If you're one of those persons who would jump into a slam with South's hand, switch to canasta.

Co-Captains

Quarterback Marshall Newman, a junior, and guard George Foti, a senior, have been named co-captains of Carolina for its game with Tulane at New Orleans Saturday.

Newman, who appears greatly improved over last season, ran for one touchdown and passed for another in the Tar Heels' 20-6 win over N. C. State last Saturday. For the first time in several years North Carolina does not have season captains and co-captains are appointed for each game. Bill Kirman and Connie Gravitte were the players honored in the opener.

Fountain Urges Enthusiasts To Make Reservations For Maryland Game Assembly

Head Cheerleader Jim Fountain yesterday urged all students and organizations tc make arrangements for the trip to Maryland game as soon as possible.

"The success of the weekend will depend on student participation. Let's all unite and let Washington and Maryland know that the Tar Heels have landed. Maryland, here we come," said Fountain of the weekend.

The weekend will include the train caravan to Washington and back; a pep rally Friday night—on Capitol steps, maybe—when trains arrive; a parade through downtown Washington on the morning of the game; the Carolina-Maryland game—a free dance at the Shoreham Hotel, and Charlie Justice Day on Sunday at the Redskin game.

The Athletic Association is taking the entire band and cheerleading squad.

Train Caravan

Train reservations can be made at the Town and Campus Men's Store, at the GM Travel agency, or at the YMCA. If students or groups want to buy their tickets now, they can be bought at the Travel Agency in Graham Memorial. Students or organizations will not have to pay out anything when they make their reservations. Groups may make reservations for whole coaches or parts of coaches. Each coach is air-conditioned, with 50 reclining seats.

There is no maximum on the number of students going. The train can handle three or four thousand students, but there must be at least 300 reservations by October 9th, Fountain said.

The price for the round-trip, including bus fare to Raleigh and back to Chapel Hill, is $11.75. The buses will leave from behind Graham Memorial at 3:00 Friday, October 15th and go directly to Raleigh. The trains will arrive in Washington at 9:30 Friday night. Students may either come back at 12:45 A. M. Sunday or Sunday afternoon at 6:00 p. m. If there are not enough students coming back Sunday morning, special coaches will be attached to trains leaving at the same time.

Fountain said, "I want to urge all students who are going to the game to go by train for a number of reasons: A better time will be had, no chance of auto wrecks, and the inconvenience of a car in Washington."

The rate for the trip is half the regular Seaboard fare.

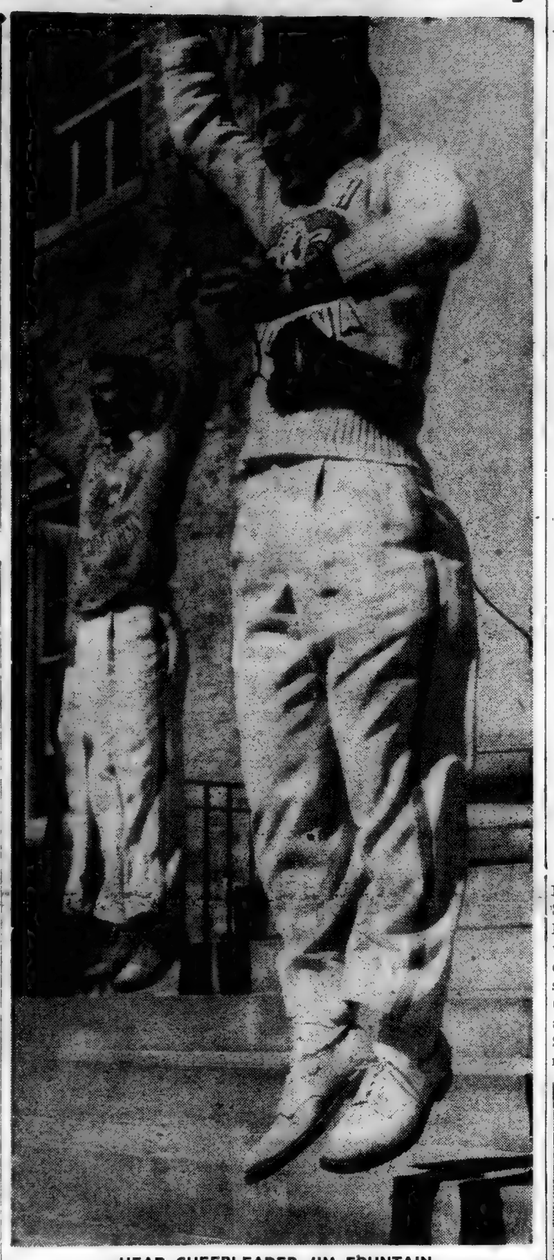
Hotel Reservations

The Graham Memorial Travel Agency will make hotel reservations at any hotel. Groups may reserve rooms in one hotel section.

Washington Pep Rally

Final plans for the pep rally are not ready. Permission has been asked of officials in Washington for holding the pep rally on the Capitol steps. No answer has been received of yet.

There will be a parade through downtown Washington, with the band, students and alumni participating, on Saturday morning.



Bus fares (approximately 50c) to the game at College Park, Maryland, will be arranged.

Game Tickets

Tickets to the game are being sold in Woollen Gym for $3.75. All organizations or students may reserve tickets now in a block or individually. They must be paid for by October 10th. Students are advised to get their tickets as soon as possible.

The Eastern District of the UNC Alumni Association is having an annual meeting in Washington during the weekend. The Association is sponsoring a free informal dance at the Shoreham Hotel Saturday night for students and their dates.

October 17 has been officially designated as Charlie Justice Day at the Redskin Park. "Choo-Choo" will be honored at half-time ceremonies. One thousand tickets to th egame have been ordered and are on sale at the Town and Campus Men's Shop. The price for the Redskin-Philadelphia Eagles game is approximately $4.50.

Deal Seriously With First Offenders—Dean Carmichael

First offenders of women's dormitory rules should be dealt with seriously, Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael told a meeting of women's house council members yesterday.

"If high morale is to be maintained," the Dean of Women said, "and if procedure is to be uniform throughout student courts, every offense must be judged in accordance with its own legal structure."

"The fact that it is a first offense, or a third offense," she said, "relates very little to this internal structure."

Miss Carmichael spoke at a training program for house council members of the women's dormitories. Miss Kendrick Townsend, House Council coordinator of the Women's Honor Council, presided over the meeting.

Miss Carmichael told members "The position of the house council is of never-ceasing responsibility. Your function is, in part, to hold meetings on Monday nights; but, your function also is to maintain a sense of responsibility throughout the dormitory at all times"

Columbia Exhibit Here

A Columbia University exhibit, prepared in connection with Columbia's bicentennial celebration, has been placed on display in the South Art Gallery of the Morehead Building.

Titled "Man's Right To Knowledge and The Free Use Thereof," the exhibit is so much in demand that it has been allotted the University for display only seven days, ending Sunday.

"The freedoms and obligations implicit in the theme of the exhibit are considered the property of all men, not only the academic world," said Dr. W. W. Pierson, dean of the UNC Graduate School and a member of the Consolidated University committee which obtained the exhibit.

"The challenge is not only to the learned and the powerful but to all of us, not only to those who must deal with great and international problems but to those who make decisions for the smallest groups, for a family, a village, a church or a school."

Late Permission

The Women's Residence Council, in conjunction with the office of the Dean of Women, has granted a one-hour extension of the closing hour Sunday, Oct. 17, for women going on the football caravan to the UNC-Maryland game.

The extension applies only to those women who will return to Chapel Hill by train or car after attending the Redskin game in Washington, Oct. 17. (The UNC-Maryland game will be played Oct. 16.)

Special sign-out sheets in the residences will be used.

University Party's Max Crohn Introduces Dorm Maid Bill

Also Introduces Gasoline Price Inquiry Bill

By LLOYD SHAW

Max Crohn, University Party floorleader, introduced a bill at the student Legislature last night calling for a study of the possibility of maid service in the dormitories.

The bill proposed that a committee of three should "investigate all possible angles which have thwarted the establishment of maid service in the past."

David Reid, Student Party vice chairman, introduced to the Legislature his bill "liberalizing punishment in first offense cheating cases. Reid made his bill public in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel.

A bill "concerning the price of gasoline in Chapel Hill" was also introduced by Crohn. The bill stated that "over the State of North Carolina gasoline prices are considerably lower than those in Chapel Hill" and "it is obvious that the townspeople and students are being taken advantage of."

Crohn asked that a committee be appointed to "investigate the conditions causing this price discrimination and determine what courses can be taken to cause the gas companies to cease these practices."

Forum Will Sponsor Him

Gov. Meyner To Speak Next Friday

Robert B. Meyner, newly elected Democratic Governor of New Jersey, will deliver a public address in Hill Hall here next Friday night, at 8:30 p. m.

Governor Meyner's appearance here will be the first in a series of addresses to be sponsored during the school year by the Carolina Forum, Chairman Joel Fleishman senior from Fayetteville, announced yesterday.

Governor Meyner will arrive at the Raleigh-Durham Airport at 3:30 on the afternoon of his speaking engagement after which he will tour of the University campus and will be honor guest at a private dinner. A reception will be held in the main louge of Graham Memorial at the conclusion of his talk.

A native of Easton, Pa., Governor Meyner graduated from Lafayette College and Columbia University Law School. He first practiced law in Hudson County while studying and later in Phillipsburg, where he still lives.

Governor Meyner qualified as counsellor at law in 1937 and was admitted to the bar of the U. S. Supreme Court in 1940. Two years later, after losing the race for senator of Warren County by 50 votes, he served as Warren County Counsel.

The New Jersey governor was elected to a four-year term in the senate in 1947 and served s Senate Minority Leader in 1950. It was in November, 1953, that he was elected governor of New Jersey by a plurality of more than 150,000 votes, and he was inaugurated in January of this year for a four-year term.

Governor Meyner is a charter member of the Phillipsburg Rotary Club, a former president of the Phillipsburg Civic Association and former national councilor of the Phillipsburg Chamber of Commerce. He is also a member of Columbia University Club of New York and Pomfret Club of Easton. He is also president of the Phillipsburg Veterans of World War II.

McElroy Is Named To Fill Executive Post

Larry McElroy was elected to fill a vacancy on the Executive Committee of the Young Democrats Club at a committee meeting recently.

Plans for a mass freshman rally in the near future were made at the meeting. An issue of the YDC News will be published and mailed to members during the week.

The YDC is planning to get an office on campus as soon as possible. The committee decided they will hold a regular meeting on the first Friday of every month at 3 p.m. on the third floor of the law school until an office is acquired.

All members of the executive committee, officers and committee chairman are required to attend meetings and make reports.

Members of hte club are invited to attend future executive committee meetings and participate in the discussion.

A district six rally will be held in Orange County within the next five weeks with the date to be announced later. District six is comprised of Guilford, Alamance, Orange and Durham counties.

The Quality Of Mercy

The Daily Tar Heel is emphatically in favor of the leniency bill introduced in the student Legislature last night. The student body and its leaders should welcome this modification to the honor system rules.

We refuse to accept the idea that a lightening of the penalty would make the honor system an edifice of straw. Leniency will strengthen the system; for it recognizes that a code of honor draws its vigor not from punishment but from prevention by the force of conscience.

Violations with which the Honor Council must deal, those which not baseness of character but human frailty breed, are punishment in their very realization. Except for a few habitual and hardened cases, toward which the Honor Council will still be empowered to act with due severity, first offenders, we suggest, learn their lesson in the recognition that they have sold out their codes of personal honor.

Most important of all, a change in the penal system will find that its value depends upon the spirit with which it is met, Leniency will avail little if it comes begrudgingly from those who sit on the judicial boards. The quality of mercy is not strained. . . . It blesses him that gives and him that takes.

Arthur Godfrey & Old East Dorm

We invite your attention to the photograph below. It is a picture of a television antenna, the new roof-top phenomenon of the national countryside.

You find them everywhere — atop Park Avenue apartments and Pennsylvania farm houses and tenement houses close by the Chicago el. But this one has given us cause to pause. For this one is buckled to the ancient roof of Old East Dormitory.

There it is. You can see it as you stroll the historic path past South Building—an aluminum monster towering even above the old brick chimneys, a thing admirably designed for the reception of Arthur Godfrey, but without symmetry or form: a gadget interrupting the classic, simple lines of a beautiful building.

It is really too late for protest. The workman's job has been well performed, and there is no questioning the dorm-wide popularity of television. This symbol of the new Philistinism, we suppose, will be with us for the century or two that Old East has yet to stand.

So this objection is just to record, for whoever may be interested, the time when they bolted an antenna—with tenna-roter—to the top of the oldest college dormitory in the land.

It's Not Really The Blues, But Plain Yellow

Louis Kraar

IN THE past few years students, educators and writers have been singing a blues song. And while the harmony hasn't always been perfect (as in most blues songs), the words have been in unison. And the words have been true.

There is little room for freedom of expression. Few speak their minds these days. And it is hard to disagree without being called "disloyal." These are the mournful words to the blues song. And they go on and on.

Here at the office, I notice that fewer people are willing to sign their letters — or even write them, for that matter. An investigator from the Army comes around from time to time and inspects the earlier writings of students applying for security clearance. And a column headed by an unknown person—The Ram—appears in the paper.

PERHAPS IF free people are afraid to use their freedoms, they really don't have any freedom.

All of this brings me to what I found on the bulletin board of the office this afternoon—a roughly scrawled note in red pencil. The note said, "The obvious odor in here is due to the corpse of Honest Journalism, who died in this office three weeks ago."

The note was unsigned.

CHARLIE WOLF, a campus politician who takes his job more seriously than himself, was "only kidding" Monday night at the Student Party meeting when he refused to read a report—because a reporter was present.

According to the report of the meeting in the paper, Wolf started to give a report on formulating a plan for preventing executive sessions. Wolf asked if a reporter was present, and—when told there was one — stopped his report.

According to Jim Turner, a Student Party member, Wolf's report wasn't even ready. He was "just kidding the reporter" when he got up.

Wolf has a good sense of humor, and he may have been just kidding.

THE FIRST collegiate panty raid was attempted this year at Cornell by the freshmen. And, like most of the stupid things, it failed. The coeds poured cold water from their windows, dampening the would-be raiders "both in spirit and body."

THE BOYS going to the Averett College this Saturday night know two things about their dates: Their names and their heights.

"What more do you need?" asked the boy in the Y who was signing them up.

STUDENT Legislature please note: A mysterious stranger, clad in a black robe and mask, broke into the University of Oklahoma's student senate and slammed a roughly scrawled message before the president officer. Then the masked stranger, who had a knife in his hand, turned and escaped in a car.

The Aggie student solons were so surprised that they didn't even try to apprehend the masked intruder. After he roared off in his car, the politicos looked at his note.

The note said, "What is the senate going to do about the parking problem?"

Apparently, though, the masked intruder had solved his parking problem by leaving his car in front of the building in which the student senate met.

Oil's Congressional Harvest

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — If you go down to the Interior Department to inquire about Secretary McKay's plan to lease Alaskan oil lands to private oil companies, you'll find the place like a tomb.

All you get are icy stares. Strict orders have been given that no Interior Department underlings shall talk to a newspaperman.

Reason is that generous Doug McKay, who has been more lavish with the public domain than any Secretary of the Interior since Albert Fall's day, almost got the Eisenhower Administration in stormy political water.

The Interior and Navy Departments have 48,000,000 acres of oil land in Alaska, hitherto set aside for national defense, and McKay, together with Undersecretary of Defense Bob Anderson, has proposed opening up the area to oil companies for private exploitation.

What makes this so dynamite-laden from a political viewpoint is, first, that many Naval officers oppose it. So do Democratic Congressmen and some Republicans. Third, Underseretary Anderson, who first favored the move as Secretary of the Navy, is himself an oilman. And though he is one of the most respected members of the Cabinet, his position as former Vice President of Associated Refineries in Texas and head of the Texas Mid Continent Oil and Gas Association makes him vulnerable.

Herbert Hoover Jr.

Finally and most important, it happens that the new Undersecretary of State, Herbert Hoover Jr., has long been a director of Union Oil and President of United Geophysical, which has had a contract with the Navy for exploring Alaskan oil lands. Hoover's company is more familiar with the whereabouts of oil in Alaska than any other.

It also happens that Herbert Hoover Jr., was one of the heaviest contributors to Vice President Nixon's secret $18,000 personal expense fund. Furthermore, it doesn't look too good from a political viewpoint that 15 of the secret donors to Nixon's fund were oilmen.

Another interesting point, as noted by the conservative New York Journal of Commerce, is that the oil companies got every law they wanted through the last Congress. They increased the public domain for oil and gas leasing. They got the right to develop both minerals and oil and gas on the same public land simultaneously. And they put across certain improvements in leasing regulations.

Go Slow, Ike

Taken together with tidelands oil, there was almost nothing the oil industry didn't get. And when you compare this with the long list of political contributions from the oil boys to the Eisenhower campaign, and then turn the 48,000,000 acres of Alaska oil lands over to the oil companies — well, no wonder some Republicans such as Senator Saltonstall of Massachusetts have warned Eisenhower personally to go slow.

Yet secretaries McKay and Anderson propose the Alaskan private leasing plan despite the advice of Ray M. Thompson, longtime expert for the Navy who worked in the Alaskan oil fields.

"At least one major oil field, plus big reserevs of natural gas," is what Thompson says have been discovered in Alaska. "I do not believe you could duplicate that record in the state of Oklahoma during the early years of discovery."

Naval officers were put on the spot by the decision of their chief, Secretary Anderson, to get the Navy out of the Alaskan oil lands. Cross-examined at a secret session of the House Armed Services committee, Capt. Robert H. Meade, the Navy's expert, testified:

"There has been a reasonable chance of finding a tremendous oil field. There is still a reasonable chance of finding a tremendous oil field. When we stop, it is still possible that someone else, ourselves or someone, depending on the national policy, of course, might find a very substantial oil field in that area."

The congressman who chiefly favored pulling the Navy out of the Alaskan oil fields was Leon Gavin, Republican, who, significantly, is from Oil City, Pa.

Venerable Congressman Carl Vinson, Georgia Democrat, however, asked two questions of Naval Secretary Anderson.

"Let's see what you are going to do. We have a great reserev up there that we spent $40,000,000 on," Vinson pointed out. "Now we are going to stop. Now what are you going to do, just let it stay there, or are you going to make contracts with private enterprise to go in there and develop it?"

"Oh, no sir," replied Anderson, "we will not plan to make private contract."

"Do you propose to turn this land back to the Interior Department or do you propose merely to let it remain in status quo for the time being?"

"I would just propose to let it stand in status quo," replied the Secretary o fthe Navy.

"If you decide to change your mind, will you tell this committee about it?"

"Yes," replied Anderson.

However, without telling Congress or the committee, plans have been under way in both the Interior and Navy Departments to turn the two big Alaskan oil fields oevr to exploitation by private companies. As a result of newspaper inquiries it's probable that the leasing of one oil field has been stopped. But what happens later remains to be seen.

The Ram Sees

The Ram Sees it as his unhappy duty to throw cold water on all the jubilation over the administration "generously" granting us a holiday on the Saturday when we play Maryland up at Collitch Park. The fact a holida that Saturday is a holiday means that cuts on both Friday and Monday will cost you exactly $2.50 per cut, so don't plan on making it a long weekend. However, if ye had not been given the "holiday" on Saturday, then you could have cut Friday classes, Saturdays classes, and maybe even Monday classes (if the party was that good) without suffering too much, if you had saved your cuts. You've been had, and for some reason most of you are happy about it. We're not happy worth a darn.

We're getting mightly tired of hearing people run down the way the football team played out in Kenan Woods last Saturday. So they lost a few fumbles and had a few passes intercepted, so what? It was the first game of the season, and they should be allowed a few mistakes. We won, didn't we? And the boys did a nice job of moving the ball when hey did have possession, not to mention the brilliant defensive work which saved us more than once when the Wolfack was knocking at the door. So phooey on you Monday morning quarterbacks who can do nohting but criticize! BEAT TULANE!

We hate to keep cluttering up the limited space of this column with corrections, but the Ram, although not human, can have his feelings hurt, and he doesn't like to be made silly-looking by a tongue-tied linotype machine. For the record, and for the benefit of those who might have appreciated the remarks in the first place, we repeat (correct version this time): If you go to New Orleans for the game this weekend, watch your pronunciation. "NEW ORLUNS" marks you as a native, "N'AWLINS" as a professional Southerner, and "NEW ORLEENS" as a damyankee tourist.

—Rameses.

Reaction Piece

David Mundy

REACTION PIECE seems to be the worst possible title that I could have chosen for the column. Behavior is supposedly made up of reactions to various stimuli. There seemed no more appropriate title for a column than an exact statement of what it was to be—a series of reactions to various situations. But the campus' little liberals, generally a pretty confused olt anyway, have found a wonderful opportunity to dub the column's views with their favorite dirty word, "reactionary."

The only other title I can think of comes from Seven Brides for As Many Brothers: "Lonesome Polecat."

BLANKET APOLOGIES are in order to the "administration." For long have they been the wrath-wreathed objects of campus politicos and/or Daily Tar Heelers. (It is fun, I've found, especially since they don't fight back.)

Politicos always have to hate someone, and newspapers have to write about something. South Building, the weather, and McCarthyism are the favorite topics on a campus once noted for its level of intelligent conversation.

A serious consideration of student-administration troubles shows the administration to have little room for improvement.

Drinking IS forbidden, but by the trustees. We may lambast the administration for a "hypocritical attitude" on drinking, but they are really being as lenient as possible.

Classes ARE required; else this would be a country club as our "Cow College" friends charge.

We do have three men in a room and a dining hall that isn't too good. These, however, and the few irritating restrictions that we do have, prove themselves either necessary or unavoidable upon a close analysis.

Admittedly, there may be some pretty undesirable creatures in South Building, Hanes basement, and New East Annex. But the much-maligned "administration" hardly deserves our harsh judgements.

They haven't one fear, however. No one wants to be in their positions.

BRIGHT SPOT of the week was the Carolina Political Union discussion last Sunday night.

The question discussed was "Resolved, that the recent Supreme Court decision regarding segregation will have an adverse effect on the public school system of North Carolina."

Only one person admitted that he thought the white race a superior one, and that chiefly because of its achievements. Another blamed the whole affair on those damned Republicans, their unfulfilled campaign promises, give-away program, and Ike's depression.

Two members of the Union declared themselves in favor of de-segregation, but argued half-heartedly that there would be some immediate adverse effects. The adverse effects mentioned were such implausible ones as race riots, mass murders, and lynchings.

Those arguing against the possibility of adverse effects remained unconvinced that any would occur. They recalled that jails existed specifically for people who broke laws.

Everyone ,incidentally, agreed that North Carolina was a very progressive state. (Despite its ranking not far above Mississippi and Arkansas in most national surveys, excepting those for such things as aggravated assault.

THE CAROLINA Political Union discussion this Sunday will probably be as one-sided, but with a deeper rift in opinions. The question? "Resolved, that the Senate of the United States adopt the 'Watkin's Committee Report.'"

Guests are invited to attend (8 o'clock in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial). They are requested to leave sidearms at home. Joe won't be there in person.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others. . . —Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.

The new Old Well was ready for Consolidated University Day, which fell on September 25, coinciding nicely with the day the new Tar Heel Football Club fell on the new State College Football Club.

The results of both unveilings were gratifying to UNC grads and undergrads alike, give or take a few thousand who pretend to view with alarm anything to which the majority point with pride.

The Horse, however, sees an incongruity in such an ornate shelter as The Old Well in offering but one drink-spout to the thirsty. Couldn't a six spouter have been substituted for the one-spouter now available?

Not that a merry party was ever observed congregated about a pump-handle, to be sure: but fonts of drinking-water, as well as fonts of Education, should offer constantly increased facilities. Besides, the consumption of water at football games is to be encouraged, at least until colder weather sets in. . .when plural 'chasers' will be needed.

It was gratifying to read, among the daily misprints and typographical errata, that the Chapel Hill Police Department approves of the sobriety of the Kenan Stewdium stands, both pro and con. But let not our uniformed minions of The Law remain uninformed as well: Hemingway's "Death In The Afternoon" is proclaimed by the cognoscenti as a tome of horror, but it is (or so The Horse has been informed) as a record of a Daisy Chain Romp compared to being "Drunk In The Afternoon." On a warm, sunny day, that is. . .The Horse has been informed.

Nightfall somehow accommodates itself to the shadowy world in which the enthusiastic potvaliant is wont to rubber-leg his vague and alcoholic course. There is something akin to indecency and almost, if not fully, obscenity in bibbing at Bourbon in bright, hot sunlight. Fishing, of course, is excepted, many otherwise blameless Izaak Waltons finding constant recourse to the flagon necessary to their pursuit of killing inoffensive piscine life.

However, at the risk of being listed as an alarmist, we would venture a guess that the Dook, ugh game may find the Kenan Stewdium more flattened and the Chapel Hill police less flattering. . .

The Horse heard with neighs of delight that our late and great and good teacher of Political Science, Dr. Woodhouse, is teaching at a South Carolina college in company of his good lady, Mrs. Woodhouse.

Dr Woodhouse fractured a rule against teaching when beyond a specified age. Sad as our loss is, it would be to some extent mitigated if the profound legislators who came up with this bit of legalizing against Advanced Years should be inspired to invoke a like ruling against their own tenure of legislative office at a like age: perhaps such laws would permit men with younger vision to see and to act to keep good teachers at work for the Old North State instead of driving them to furrin' pastures of erudition. . .

The crowd at the nightly rehearsals of the Playmakers' forthcoming production of Arthur Miller's "The Crucible" are mainly circus- and aquarium-scouts observing the performance of an aged student in the cast who plays the part of Giles Corey, an almost equally aged character of the story. Giles succeeds in portraying a singing seal, what with his spoken lines and his intermittent barks due to a combination of heavy bronchial cold plus some asthmatic allergy aggravated by the current dry spell—meaning the weather, of course. . . If they had seals in late Seventeenth Century New England, Giles Corey is it in rehearsals. The balance of the cast bears up under the coughing fits patiently, if grimly. . .

Mr. John Motley Morehead appeared simultaneously with the rain Wednesday afternoon, to bend an approving eye on the new sundial time-teller which is the piece de resistance of the Planetarium parking area just off East Franklin Street. The rain came in good time, if UNC's benefactor did not. Let no, ugh, Dook students henceforth say that Tar Heelers cannot even tell the time. Rumor has it that Sun Dial 51 will soon appear on the list of courses offered hard-working scholarship students, who will take to it like Corn on the Cobb. . .

The recent sudden, unexpected and untimely death of Chapel Hill Novelist James Street removes from our scene, but not from our memories, a devoted friend of the University, a showpiece of the town's literati, a friend of the students, and an example of wholesome intellectual honesty to everybody.

Jimmy carried the mirror to the men and to the women who needed to see themselves as everybody else saw them. Few men have helped so many with so little public recognition. Few men of more widely acclaimed works will be so missed as will James Street be.

"Ave atque vale, Mr. Street, sir!"

Quote, Unquote

It is always a tragic thing when a men of great talent dies in the midst of his best and most creative years.

Jim Street not only was a leader among those writers from all parts of the country who came to Chapel Hill to make Chapel Hill one of the centers of literary production in the United States. Also he was a man who in Chapel Hill retired to no ivory tower of literary production. In a very few years he had become a part of the place; he will remain an item of its tradition.

Sometimes Jim Street was caustic. He wal al ways an intense man, outspoken in his beliefs, sometimes impatient of those who seemed to him fools or phonies. He despised cruelty, hated pretentiousness. But he easily and honestly loved people. He himself was an easy man to love as his popularity in his new home state attested. The loss of his talent is not sadder than the loss of the man.

Giants Beat Tribe Again, 3-1

Rhodes Turns Tide Of Battle

Mike Garcia, Gomez Will Work Today

NEW YORK, Sept. 30—Dusty Rhodes, whose 10th inning homer won the opening game, blasted his second home run and a pinch-hit single today as the New York Giants took a two-game lead over the Cleveland Indians with a 3-1 World Series victory.

It was Rhodes' pinch hit single in the fifth which sparked a rally that broke pitcher Early Wynn's spirit after four hitless innings and it was his homer in the seventh—a towering blow which hit the upper facade in right field—which clinched the decision.

Excellent clutch pitching by Johnny Antonelli, the Giants' young bonus southpaw, contributed to the triumph. The Indians had men on base in every inning except the eighth but they could never muster a rally.

Smith Homers

The only Cleveland run came in the first inning when Al Smith slashed Antonelli's opening pitch over the left field roof for a home run.

Rhodes has become the individual stickout of the present series. As a pinch-hitter yesterday, he hit the first pitch into the right field stands for a game-clinching home run.

Rhodes, a pinch-hit sensation for the Giants all year when he had 15 hits in 45 times at bat, now has three hits in his only three bat appearances. His home runs have been the Giants only extra base hits.

Indians Hosts Friday

Now the two teams move to Cleveland where the Indians have the gigantic task of overtaking the National League champions. Mike Garcia, 19-8, is scheduled to pitch for the Indians, with Ruben Gomez, 17-9, going for the Giants.

Keller Will Not Start In Tulane Encounter

Kenny Keller, Carolina's star left halfback will definitely not be a starter Saturday afternoon when the Tar Heels take the field against Tulane in New Orleans.

Coach George Barclay announced yesterday that, although Keller would see more action than he did last week against N. C. State, the 185-pound "Mr. Outside" would not be in the starting line-up. Keller suffered a severely sprained ankle two weeks ago in a scrimmage and has not been in heavy equipment since, except for the State game in which he was used sparingly.

Barclay also said that he plans to use the same line-up that dumped State, 20-6. Marshall Newman will call signals while Connie Gravitte and Larry Parker will start at the halves. Don Klochak, the only sophomore in the starting eleven, will be at fullback. Will Frye and Ed Starner will be at ends, Jack Maultsby and Roland Perdue at the tackle posts, with Bill Koman and George Foti playing guard. Bill Kirkman is Barclay's choice at center.

Yesterday, the Tar Hells ran through their last practice session before their meeting with Tulane. Working in light equipment, Barclay had his men running through plays and working out punt patterns. Defense was also stressed in the short workout.

The Tar Heels depart for New Orleans from the Raleigh-Durham Airport this afternoon at one o'clock. Saturday's game time is set for 3:15 o'clock Eastern Standard Time.

Gomez Will Pitch, But Leo's Mind Is Open On Left Field

By TED SMITS

New York, Sept. 30.—Leo Durocher, manager of the high riding New York Giants, decided today to send his slender Puerto Rican righthander, Ruben Gomez, against the Cleveland Indians at Cleveland tomorrow—but kept his mind open about the left field position.

Left field is where Monte Irvin has been playing—except when Dusty Rhodes goes in to hit game-winning homers.

"I'll make up my mind tomorrow morning," said Durocher in the dressing room after today's 3-1 victory.

"That was a lot of pitching today. Johnny Antonelli was great."

"Elaborate on that, Leo," someone commanded.

"How can I?"

As for Rhodes, the modest Southerner, center of attraction as the star of two straight World Series victories, shrugged off his single that drove in the first run, and his homer that put the game on ice.

"This wasn't nothing beside of yesterday," he said.

Just as was the case yesterday, when Durocher heaped praise on his relief pitchers, today it was Antoneli who drew the bouquets from the peppery manager—with, of course, a large bow in the direction of Dusty Rhodes.

"John musta pitched 8,000 balls," said Durocher, "but he was great. That Early Wynn pitched great, too. I never really had any idea of taking Antonelli out, though."

Asked why he went to the mound in the first inning with the bases loaded, Durocher replied:

"I just wanted to slow him down. After that he was more deliberate. But he needed settling."

Antonelli, a clean-cut youngster from Rochester, said he liked to see Rhodes go to the plate on his side whenever he was pitching.

"I believe he was instrumental one way or another, in 12 out of 21 games I won this year," he said.

Antonelli, although dripping sweat, looked fresh and strong.

"I believe I can come back on Sunday, if the skipper wants me," he said.

It seems he did not have any one strong pitch today—"I just threw everything I had."

That coincided with the reports Durocher was getting from his catcher, Wes Westrum.

"My man had good stuff all the time, right through the ninth inning, Westrum kept looking back and telling me," said Leo.

As for the ninth, with two on and the dangerous Vic Wertz at bat, Leo said that even if Antonelli had walked Wertz he would have left him in — "I still would rather have Johnny pitch to Wally Westlake than anyone else I know."

There was more noise today in the Giant dressing room than after winning yesterday's opener. The feeling was strong the Giants are now riding the crest. They showered and dressed hurriedly to catch the plane to Cleveland.

Manager Al Lopez of the Cleveland Indians, wearing a weary and worried look, said today he plans some lineup changes tomorrow as the world series swings to the lake front stadium for the third game.

Terps Meet UCLA Tonight

The team that was rated No. 1 in the nation at the end of the 1953 season meets the one that figures to wind up the current campaign in the Rose Bowl tonight to open a busy week-end of football with a strong accent on intersectional competition.

Maryland, last year's top team, is ranked sixth in the current Associated Press poll; UCLA, favorite in the Pacific Coast Conference, is fourth. Some 70,000 fans are expected to turn out to check on those ratings and observe the Maryland split T, with Charley Boxold in Command, against Red Sanders' UCLA version of the single wing with sophomore Doug Bradley in the viatl tailback spot.

This game should be a suitable preliminary tussles on Saturday's schedule. But the nation's No. 1 team, as of the present, Notre Dame, will be engaged in a back yard brawl that may mean trouble for Terry Breannan's Irish lads.

Notre Dame, well ahead of Oklahoma and Iowa in this week's ranking poll, takes on the tough Purdue that wrecked Notre Dame's 39-game winning streak four years ago and the Boilermakers indicated they're ready to create another upset by the way they overpowered Missouri 31-0, last week.

Hutchinson Is Out As Pilot

Quits Amid Rumors That He May Join Baltimore

Detroit, Sept. 20.—Fred Hutchinson resigned today as manager of the Detroit Tigers amid rumors he next would be seen in the uniform of the Baltimore Orioles.

Hutchinson's resignation had been anticipated since he announced he would settle for nothing less than a two-year contract as manager. The six-man board of directors, led by Tiger President Walter O. Spike Briggs, voted today to offer Hutchinson the Tigers' usual one year contract and Hutchinson immediately declined.

Some sources close to the Tigers said Frank Lefty O'Doul, manager of San Diego in the Pacific Coast League, had not only been offered the job as Tiger manager but had indicated he would accept.

Briggs said he hoped a decision on Hutchinson's replacement would come Friday.

O'Doul, who guided San Diego to a league pennant this season, has managed San Francisco for many years and reportedly has had several major league offers, all of them declined.

Hutchinson, the youngest manager in the major leagues as 35, would say only that he was resigning because of "personal reasons."

His firmness in holding out for the two-year contract bolstered rumors he had been offered a job as coach of the Orioles and would work with his old friend, Paul Richards.

Booters Tangle With Ft. Bragg

Coach Marvin Allen's 1954 soccer squad gets its first outside competition today against Ft. Bragg. Game time is 3 p. m. at Fetzer Field.

Since it is a practice affair for both teams, emphasis is expected to be placed on the offense and a high scoring game is predicted.

The Ft. Bragg team defeated the Carolina squad in two practice tilts last year and will be favored again today. Several former European stars give the Soldiers added strength at the forward positions.

Here is the probable lineup for the Tar Heels: Don Gladstone at goalie; Grover Brown and Jim Bunting, at the fullback slots; Harry Brown, Pat McCormick and Calvin Lane at the halfback posts; Jim Skidmore at right wing, Pete Cothran at left wing, and Chip Bryant at center-forward. Bill McGinn and Jerry Russell will start at the inside positions.

Freshman Coach Harry Pawlick again advises all freshmen who are interested in soccer to report to practice during the afternoon sessions from 3 to 6 p. m.

Campus Carousel

By Eleanor Saunders

Carolina professors may possibly have a real treat in store for them this week. Since this marks the official end of sorority rush, and fraternity rush has yet to get underway, it may be that reluctant students will, for a change, be prepared when those pop-quizzes and uncalled for questions roll their way. And even more surprising to the once optimistic teachers will be the fact that a few of their female students may manage to stay awake throughout an entire class!

The exhaustion of the coed members of Carolina's population, coupled with the nervous tension resulting from last Saturday's sudden switch to "Big Orange," points to a quiet, relaxing weekend ahead. A few brave souls, possibly several from the Kappa Sig house, will disregard distances and follow the home team to New Orleans, but the majority of Hillians will take time out to recuperate and to fortify themselves for oncoming seiges of bigger and better weekends.

New sorority pledges seem to be in the spotlight this week, and after two weeks' work to secure them, why shouldn't they be? ADPi's honored their pledge class last night with a picnic at Dean and Mrs. Guy Phillip's home. The Ranch House was the scene for a Pi Phi banquet last night, an aftermath of Wednesday night's formal pledging ceremonies. KD's held an informal party Tuesday night to welcome their new pledges, and Tri Delt's converted their house to a 1920 spak-asy, to carry out the theme of their flapper party.

Kappa Sig's and Chi O's will join forces Friday night to honor the sorority's new pledges. A tacky party, to be held at the schoolhouse, will be in order. And on schedule for Tri Delt's next week is a Tusday night party with the Phi Gam's.

Brother Bill Pittman will be host Saturday night at a Phi Delt party in Sanford. And at the Chi Phi house, plans are underway for an old-fashioned hay-ride, a novelty in this age of machines and motors.

Leaving town Saturday night will be the Pi Lam's. Brothers and dates will make the Plantation Club in Greensboro their party headquarters. And Lambda Chi's will journey in the opposite direction, to the Saddle Club for a Saturday night party.

Deke's are out of seclusion for a change, and they plan to spread their weekend parties over a wide area. A large part of the chapter will leave Saturday for Clarksville, Va., and a weekend of waterskiing and the like. Those remaining in this part of the country will party Saturday night at the Saddle Club.

Congraulations are in order for the new initiates of the 13 Club, popular social organization on campus. The twenty new members went through rigorous initiation ceremonies at Saturday's football game, well-fortified by the pre-game party. New members ar Noel Sullivan, ATO; Bob Shelley, Jack Moore, and George Rains, Deke; King McGee and Charlie Bowles, KA; Bozy Tart and Knox Jenkins, Kappa Sig; Freddy Byrum, Francis Wicks, and Joe Towe, Phi Gam; Herb Gorham, PiKA; Jim Patton, Alex Galloway ,and Charlie Causey, SAE; Claude Plumlee and Toy Gregory, Sigma Chi; Donnie Van Loan, Runyan Tyler, and Brant Snavely, Zete. New officers of the society are Joe Mavretic, Jake Rountree, and Bill Moss.

IDC Vital---Weaver

"The position of the Interdormitory Council in student affairs is second to none," said Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver to the 250 nominees running for the various dormitory offices who were assembled in Gerrard Hall, as he urged every candidate to support the goals of the IDC.

"Without the support of the Interdormitory Council, there is little that can be done to improve student affairs," Weaver continued, "and the IDC needs your support in order to continue to go forward in its efforts to provide the dormitories with an effective social program and to promote a wholesome fraternal relationship."

The meeting was called to order by Manning Muntzing, IDC president. Muntzing stated that he was pleased with the energetic support and the seriousness htat dormitory residents have given to the elections for officers. He further stated that many plans have been made to provide each dormitory with the kind of entertainment and recreation program it needs and wants, and the success or failure of these plans depends upon the interest and efforts of every dormitory resident.

Weaver cited the past achievements of the IDC since it's formation in 1935. He stated that because of the Interdormitory Council dormitories now have social rooms, tiled floors, new plumbing facilities, book shelves in each room, dormitory managers and advisors and a host of other achievements that were effected through the hard work of IDC leaders. Weaver also stated that many outstanding campus leaders have won distinction by working on the IDC, and he urged each man there to grasp the opportunities open to him, whether they win or lose in the elections, to help bring about further dormitory improvements.

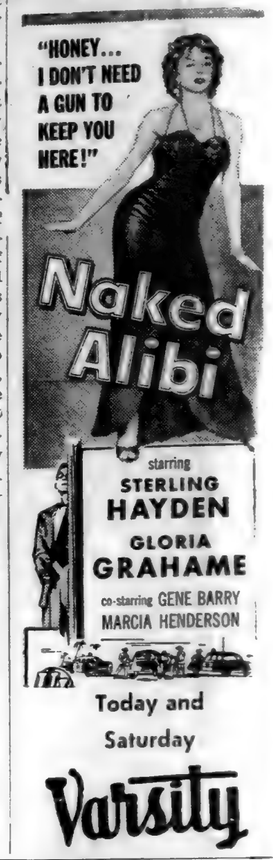
Voting for the six dormitory officers, President, Vice President, Secretary-Treasurer, IDC Representative, Intramural Manager, and University Club Representative, will take place Tuesday, October 5.

Need A Maid Of Cotton

The search is on once again to find King Cotton's official representative—the Maid of Cotton—to spread the Southland's good will throughout some 40 cities in the United States, Canada, and Europe.

The two-day contest, to be held January 3 and 4 in Memphis, Tenn., will determine which Cotton Belt beauty will serve the cotton industry as its 1955 fashion and good will ambassador on a six-month international tour. The contest will consist of personal interviews, photographs, luncheons, a dinner-dance, and a public appearance at Ellis Auditorium in Memphis.

Shortly after the contest, the winner will fly to New York to spend a month in preparation for the tour. She will be outfitted in a beautiful, all-cotton wardrobe by 40 of the nation's leading designers.



The tour begins officially in early February, and it will carry the Maid of Cotton to the Pacific Northwest states, Vancouver, B. C., as well as European and American cities.

The 1955 Maid of Cotton will be the seventeenth Cotton Belt girl to represent the industry on the annual tour sponsored by the National Cotton Council, the Memphis Cotton Carnival, and the Cotton Exchanges of Memphis, New York, and New Orleans.

Entry blanks, which may be obtained from the National Cotton Council, P. O. Box 18, Memphis, Tenn., must be completed and returned by December 1. They must be accompanied by two photographs, one a head and shoulders portrait, and the other a full length photograph.

Plays Tulane Today:

Carolina Visits Sugar Bowl For First Time In Five Years

TULANE SUGAR BOWL STADIUM, NEW ORLEANS, La., Oct. 2 — Carolina's Tar Heels will revisit the Sugar Bowl for the first time since 1949 here today with the intent of erasing unpleasant memories that have festered since 1922.

The Tar Heels played and won their first game in New Orleans then, defeating Tulane, 19-12. Carolina hasn't won in New Orleans since.

The intersectional battle with the Southeastern Conference's Green Wave is of a different type then the last two times Carolina played in this stadium, the 1947 and 1949 Sugar Bowl games.

Coach George Barclay and Andy Pilney of Carolina and Tulane are both advocates of the split-T formation, and neither team has an ideal quarterback situation.

Barclay will go with junior Marshall Newman who, according to Barclay, played the best game of his career last Saturday against N. C. State. Pilney, with a young and inexperienced team, has picked an 150-pound junior, Earl Hubley, to start at quarter.

On the face of previous records this season Carolina is slightly favored to win the game. The Tar Heels defeated a scrappy State team, 20-6 last week, while Tulane lost to Georgia Tech, 28-0, in its opener, and then was tied by Memphis State, 13-13 last Saturday.

Tar Heels Descend On New Orleans

By TOM PEACOCK

Enroute to New Orleans,
8,000 Feet over the Southland,

This is the first flight for a number of the team members, and pretty grim business. As the engines revved for the takeoff a couple of the neophytes couldn't stifle an excited, child-like giggle at the prospect of flying.

It wasn't so funny when the plane got up. For it was a rough ride at the beginning of the trip. And many of the men were airsick.

The pilot came back to tell Coach Barclay that he could take the ship up to 13,000 feet and get over the rough spots, "but the cabin's not pressurized and we'd be cutting oxygen around 40 per cent."

Coach Barclay wanted to know if that would affect his boys, and the pilot said it would make them sluggish and take quite a bit out of them. Barclay iterated a quick "stay down."

A little later the coach got up and looked the team over, many of them with compresses on their foreheads and smelling salts at their noses.

"Maybe we better not play after all," he laughed. Roy Armstrong, Director of Admissions, was also on the plane, and will give a speech to the New Orleans Alumni Association tonight. He promptly learned that one of the hostesses was a Carolina girl, class of '48, who had taken her first two years at Tennessee.

"Did you get a letter from Roy Armstrong?" he asked. "Not that I remember," she replied. "Well, you did," answered Roy.

Her name was Jean Stoutenburg, and she lives in Virginia Beach now, having started with Capital Airlines a wek after she got her sociology degree. Roy, obviously proud, looked back and asked her what she thought of these boys. She liked them.

The series game came in pretty well on the speakers, and had a great following. Once when it went off the air Will Frye asked how it was going and Barclay told him, "Dusty Rhodes hit a homer with the bases loaded." That caused a lot of excitement, and though it wasn't true, it might as well have been.

Only 34 team members made the trip, and line coach Marvin Bass thought that with the heat being the way it was, a few more players could well be used.

The resemblance of Tulane and Carolina is remarkable, thought Bass, as to offense, and problems. Barclay and Green Wave Coach Andy Pilney were in the Navy together and that accounts for some of it.

The Cat Girl isn't in town, it is understood, and this is sad news for Rameses, who is obviously proud that he has been to "New Orleans" and thinks he is an old friend of the feline stripper.

WUNC Sets Special Show For Chapel Hill

Recordings of actual performances by various Chapel Hill music groups will conclude Radio Station WUNC's Festival of Music this Satturday night. The program, entitled Chapel Hill Night, will feature a few of the most outstanding concerts given by local organizations since 1948. The recordings are being made available through the Communication Center.

Faure's "Requiem", performed by the Shapel Hill Choral Club and the University Symphony Orchestra, will begin Chapel Hill Night. In addition to this work WUNC will broadcast performances by the University Glee Clubs, the University Symphony Orchestra and the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra. Stravinsky's "Firebird Suite," which was included in the spring concert of the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra and broadcast by WUNC at that time, will conclude Chapel Hill Night and the Festival of Music.

If You Play With Fire . . .

Anyone who knows George, the campus collie, would think that he knows all about the birds and bees. But he tackled an irate member of the latter in Y-Court yesterday morning and came out on the thin end of the encounter.

Since the bees have taken up residence in Y-Court, George has developed the habit of crunching them between his teeth. He seems to take a sadistic delight in said bee-eating . . . at least, he seemed to up until yesterday.

The junior buzz-bomb stung George on his ultra-sensitive nose and buzzed merrily on its way while the dejected and stung collie salad sandwich to cure his ills.

200 Years Of Existence:

Columbia Is Feted

During its 200 years of existence, Columbia University has made magnificent contributions to the humanities, to the social sciences and to education.

Progress reports on Columbia's achievements in these fields were presnted here last night by three graduates who spoke at a dinner session in recognition of Columbia's bicentennial celebration being held throughout the world this year.

A number of faculty members from State College, the Woman's College and the University attended the meeting, held at Carolina Inn.

The speakers, representing the three units of the Consolidated University, were Prof. J.D. Clark, State College English Department; Dean W. W. Pierson of the University Graduate School, who spoke in place of Dr. Howard W. Odum, unable to attend on account of illness, and Miss Anna M. Kreimeier of the Woman's College Education Department.

Dean Pierson also brought a message from Dr. Odum, in which the latter paid tribute to some of the distinguished professors under whom he had studied at Columbia.

Following the dinner session the group adjourned to the Morehead Building to view an exhibit prepared in connection with

Dean W. Pierson Named Chief Of Southern Fellowship Group

Dean W. W. Pierson has been appointed chairman of the Southern Fellowships Fund Committee of the Council of Southern Universities, which will administer a program in scholarships and fellowships for faculty improvement.

The appointment of Dean Pierson, professor of history and political science and dean of the graduate school, was announced by Logan Wilson, University of Texas president.

Wilson also announced the appointment of Robert M. Lester of Chapel Hill as executive secretary.

Candidates for fellowships from the $2,500,000 fund will be considered from North Carolina, Virginia, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

The program is made possible through a $2,500,000 grant to the council from the General Education Board, parent organization of which is the Rockefeller Foundation.

The council is composed of the University of North Carolina, University of Virginia, Duke University, Vanderbilt University, Emory University, Tulane University, Rice Institute and the University of Texas.

The grant is to be made available year by year as needed over a period not to exceed 10 years and with payments not to exceed $300,000 in any one year.

Annual Space

Societies, sororities and fraternities must reserve their space in the 1955 Yack, Business Manager Tom Spain said yesterday.

There is still time to do so by sending a representative to the annual's office in Graham Memorial, he added.

The office will be open from 2 to 5 this week and all next week. No space will be available thereafter.

The Light Beneath The Moon

They were walking along toward the Rat, a half-dozen Tar Heel reporters, taking time out for supper. It was night before last, a cool, quiet evening.

And then they noticed it: A new moon, and hanging beneath it, as if suspended by a thread, a bright light.

An associate editor who had spent the day writing great phrases, assured the strolling assembly in grandiloquent language that the light was artificial, man-made. "The light on the Baptist Church steeple," he insisted.

Some of the others weren't so sure; somebody mentioned the planet Venus.

"Not a chance," this associate editor claimed. He led the way down the stairs, thirsty for a beer.

The debate was repeated all over town as students viewed the curious solar picture. A telephone call to Anthony Jenzano at the Morhad Planetarium yesterday nailed down the facts and showed up the associate editor's astronomical knowledge for what it is.

It was the planet Venus, all right; but the planet wasn't on hand last night because of the moon's motion in the heavens. It was 14 degrees away from Venus, and tonight, it will be even farther.

Venus, it seems, only hangs at that particular point in the night sky once in a blue moon.

Knowledge Is Display Theme At Planetarium

By RICHARD THIELE

"Surely, . . . Knowledge is the food of the soul"—Socrates.

Knowledge (it's Use, Value and Responsibilities") is the theme of an exhibit currently on display in the South Exhibit Hall of Morehead Planetarium.

The exhibit, displayed in commemoration of the bicentennial anniversary (1754-1954) of Columbia University, consists of a series of metal engravings under the general heading "Man's Right to knowledge and the Free Use Thereof."

The Columbia Exhibit follows the growth of knowledge in man's civilization, beginning with man's right to the benefits of know ledge, a description of the values of knowledge and the responsibilities of knowledge.

Electron-miscroscopic photographs of living bacteria and organisms, superimposed on a large engraving of the multi-lingual Rosetta stone illustrate the march of science through history.

"Ignorance is the curse of God." said Shakespeare, and his saying is the theme of a series of pictures displaying ignorance in action. Next to a large scene of the burning at the stake of Joan of Arc are three pictures, the first of which shows the heresy trails against witchcraft conducted at Salem in colonial Massachusetts.

This is followed by a scene from the Reign of Terror above the caption "Paris, France-1795"; and the last is a photograph of

Poll Shows Campus Wants Leniency, Not Dorm Maid

Take It Easy On Penalty Says Majority

By means of a telephone survey of all of the dormitories on the Carolina campus, it was found that most of the students interviewed are in favor of instituting probation as the "usual punishment" for first offense Honor System violators.

The opinions ranged from being in full support of the action to advocating the probation for punishment in cases in which the offender may not have been aware that he was violating the Honor Code. Only one student interviewed was definitely not in favor of replacing suspension with a probation period.

Discussion on the matter of more lenient punishment for Honor Council violators came up this week when David Reid, Student Party vice chairman, introduced to the student Legislature a bill "liberalizing punishment in first offense cheating cases."

The bill was sent to committee, and wil come up for a vote next Thursday.

One of the students interviewed said, "I will give probation full support." Another expressed his opinion by saying, "If they start being lenient on the first offense, it will keep on going. They ought to keep suspension.'"

Still another felt that "a person is entitled to one mistake. It would be good to give probation as a warning."

"It deserves a lot of good thought and a hearing by all parties concerned," was another of the statements.

"Probation is definitely fairer," stated one of the students interviewed. "Probation is fairly good, although possibly offenders shouldn't be given a second chance," said another.

One student said, "believe that probation should be given as a punishment for the first offense." Another said "Probation is a good idea. It is too stiff to kick a person out for a first offense."

Other students interviewed stated the following opinions: "Probation is a good idea . . . Leniency on the first offense is good . Probation is better than suspension for first offense. Probation is the only thing they can do to make it work . . . I think it ought to be passed. It is very fine . . . I am for probation, not suspension . . . Probation is a good idea because a warning is always good."

Placement Service Sets

The University Placement Service will sponsor a meeting Tuesday night in Gerrard Hall to discuss "After Graduation, What?"

Questions will be answered by Finley T. White, president and treasurer of the Whitehall Furniture Company of Durham.

In Memorial Hall:

Sauter-Finegan Aggregation Will Perform Here October 18

The Sauter-Finegan Orchestra will appear at Memorial Hall on Monday, Oct. 18. Two concerts will be given, from 4 to 6 p. m. and from 8:30 till 11 p. m. Admission will be $1 to UNC students.

The band was started by Ed Sauter and Bill Finegan, one-time arrangers for the music of such men as Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey and the late Glenn Miller.

Sauter was formerly with Benny Goodman and was responsible for many of the "Swing King's most famous arrangements. Finegan has written countless scores for Tommy Dorsey and other top band leaders during the past 10 years, including the Glenn Miller aggregation.

Willard Alexander, the man who launched the Benny Goodman and Count Basie swing bands, is manager of the orchestra.

Boys Didn't Forget Him

At least 10 Lewis Dormitory residents went to the aid of their janitor's brother Wednesday night.

When the Lewis janitor reported to "his boys" that his brother, Brantley Smith, was in serious condition at Memorial Hospital, 10 went to the hospital and volunteered to roll up their sleeves and donate a pint of blood each.

Hospital authorities had to refuse one student, Bob (Tugboat) Farrington, because he had given a pint of blood the day before, for somebody else. But they did gladly accept donations from Don Freeman, Bennett Thomas, David Byers, Bob Godney, Gaston Shell and Ben Peele. Student Body President Tom Creasy chauffeured the group over to Hospital Hill.

The hospital reported Brantley was still on the critical list and had a very poor night Thursday night, but was improving yesterday.

Geiger Leads Drive

Don Geiger, prominent senior and member of Kappa Alpha Fraternity, has been named chairman of the student drive for membership in the Chapel Hill Concert Series.

Gieger will head the committee composed of campus leaders, and representatives from dormitories, fraternities, sororities and town.

"I am looking forward to a good response from the Student body," said Geiger, "and I am pleased that such fine artists are coming to Chapel Hill."

The series will be opened on October 20 when the American Chamber Orchestra appears in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m.

The Salzburg Marionette Theatre is scheduled for February 15. This group is making its fourth tour of the United States and has been enthusiastically received everywhere.

On March 31, Walter Geiseking, famous concert pianist, will appear as the third artist of the series which will be concluded with the Jan Peerce Concert on April 15.

A maximum of 1,800 tickets are available, 1,200 of which are specifically reserved for the townspeople. There are 800 available to the students.

Students desiring tickets are requested to secure them in Graham Memorial if they are not contacted by a ticket representative.

Harris Named To YDC Post

Jack R. Harris, third year law student, has been elected to the Executive Committee of the University Young Democrats Club.

Harris is from Lincolnton, has been active not only in the local YDC but also with his home group. He is married and lives in victory village.

Larry McElroy, junior, and Sam Wells, sophomore, have been appointed co-chairman of the Freshman Rally Committee.

Martin Cromarti Jr., third year law has been appointed coordinator of the local club. Cromarti is a former state YDC vice president and secretary.

Joel Fleishman has been selected as chairman of a special committee to try to bring former President Harry Truman to the University.

Ken Youngblood, third year law student has been chosen as the local YDC representative to organize the Sixth District rally in conjunction with Alamance, Guilford, Orange and Durham counties. The appointment was made by Bob Windsor, local president and Sixth District chairman. Bob Kurtz, third year law, will serve as Youngblood's assistant.

Coed Residence Council To Talk About Calendars

Treasurers, social chairmen and presidents of all women's women's residences will meet Monday to outline social calendars for women's dormitories, the Women's Residence Council announced yesterday.

The meeting will be held at 5 p. m. in the Council Room of Graham Memorial.

Social calendars, the WRC said, will include coffee breaks, faculty teas, exchange open houses with men's groups and seasonal parties. The calendars will be subject to approval by each dormitory.

Most Answers Are Against Maid Service

Varied opinions were presented on the idea of having maid service in men's dormitories, according to a telephone poll of dorms yesterday, but the majority of opinion was against it.

The maid service bill was introduced in student Legislature Thursday night by Max Crohn, Unievrsity Party floor leader.

A few men were heartily in favor of the bill, expressing the opinion that it would be wonderful if the maids would make their beds. Others felt that maid service would spoil the boys, and that they should be old enough by now to make their own beds.

One of the students felt that maid service would be good, since a clean room is more conducive to good study than a messy one.

Still another was not in favor of the bill, expressing belief that the atmosphere in a mens' dorm is not fit for women. One opinion expressed was that perhaps inspections of rooms would do instead of instituting maid service.

Some of the opinions gathered from the different boys dorms were as follows: Aycock—"Maid service is a good idea."

Battle—"I don't like the idea of maid service. Dorm life is not fit for women."

Cobb—"A good-looking room is conducive to good studying, however, only a small number of residents keep their rooms presentable. If we had maid service the rooms would look good at least in the day, however, I don't think the dorm fees should be raised to make this service available.

Alexander—"I don't like maid service, but I don't have any particular reason."

Ruffin—"Maids are not a necessity."

Steele—"Should not have maids, it would spoil the boys. This is not that type of school."

Everett—"Maids are a great idea, especially if they make up the beds."

Mangum—"I think the boys are old enough to make their own beds."

Pettigrew—"I think maid service would be wonderful."

Stacy—"It would depend upon the work the maids would do."

Connor—"I am for maid service."

Carolina Handbook Now On Sale In YMCA Office

The 1954-55 Carolina Handbook has been placed on sale for 25 cents for the general student body in the YMCA office.

The handbook was sent to some 1,500 prospective freshmen in the spring. It covers every phase of Carolina life.

The handbook, with Jim Turner, editor in chief, contains sections on extra curriculars, athletics, officers, university officials, campus sports and many other features telling of the many phases of life in Chapel Hill.

Reserve Billets

The two Naval Reserve Surface Divisions which meet in Durham have announced that there are some pay billets available.

One division meets on Tuesday nights and the other on Thursdays. Both divisions are commanded by UNUC professors and UNC students are members, Rides to and from Durham can be arranged. A member of one of the divisions will be at a booth in the Y lobby during the next week from 11 a.m. to 12 noon each day to discuss the program.

Members receive one day's pay for each two hour drill attended and are entitled to a two weeks cruise with pay each yar.

Milford Makes The Map

Some of the people in Milford, Deleware, tried to do the right thing. They decided to implement the Supreme Court anti-segregation ruling. They admitted 11 Negro children to a formerly all-white school. Today, those 11 children are back in classes at their own school in the Negro district of town, for the white supremacists have won the first round of the battle in Milford.

Those persons who are determined to keep Milford's schools segregated, who have created unrest and threatened violence, who have desperately held on to a social system which is rapidly collapsing under them, will have to wake up some day. In a few years the Supreme Court decision will truly be the law of the land, and Milford, along with all the other towns in the South, will have to obey the law. Milford won't like it, but Milford will obey it.

The unfortunate thing, of course, is this: That the name of Milford has become, in two weeks, a symbol of racial strife. That the prejudice of a town against 11 children could put Milford, Delaware in the headlines of Durham and Milwaukee and Los Angeles. The unfortunate thing is that Milford, which might have made a quiet step forward, made the map instead.

A Crohn-ic Condition

Max Crohn seems to be becoming a Chron-ic bill introducer in the student Legislature. We suspected, since Max is floor-leader of the University Party, that the two bills he pulled out of his hat on Thursday evening were strictly political affairs to get the UP some votes in the winter elections. Two things, however, contradict that theory: (1) The elections are too far away for these bills to be effective vote-getters, and (2) The members of the University Party legislative corps, it seems, weren't happy about Max's introducing the measures in the first place.

The bills are rather interesting. One cails for an investigation of gasoline prices in Chapel Hill. Max could save a lot of investigating time by attending a course in economics and learning something about the law of supply and demand, and how the price of a commodity in a given market is determined.

The second bill is not so easily disposed of. This measure calls for maid service in all dormitories (men's dormitories, we presume this means). Now this is a peachy-keen idea, and we're sure the lower quad will heartily approve. But, since the University is now desperately looking for money with which to build a pharmacy building, new dormitories, etc., we are prompted to ask: Where is the money for this maid service coming from?

The answer would seem to be obvious. If Max is successful in his fight to lower Chapel Hill gasoline prices, the money saved by car-owners will be pooled to provide salaries to the maids. So get your schedules ready, boys, and be prepared to tell the ladies whether you want your orange juice in bed in time for an 8 or 9 o'clock class.

Gracious Living – X

The bee is a busy soul,
Never heard of birth control.
That is why in times like these
The Y Court's full of busy bees.

We bought our usual cup of morning coffee at the bar in the Y the other day, and walked outside to one of the benches beside Gerrard Hall to drink it in comfort. As we started to take our first sip, a bee gently settled on the rim of our cup. We shooed him away, and took a quick swallow. It was too quick. We got the beeswax burned out of our tongue. The bee buzzed back and settled on the rim of the cup. He played it smart: he just licked around the edges. We finally gave up and left the cup sitting on the bench. The bee called his little brother, his old man, and a host of cousins, and the last we saw of them they were having a delightful coffee klatsch at our expense.

We propose that the University take steps to do away with the bees in the Y Court and around the South Building steps. They might drench the area in DDT some afternoon, or perhaps build a new Y court just for the bees so the pesky little chaps would leave ours alone. Gracious Living in Chapel Hill is bee-ing bee-deviled by our unwanted little honey-dripping friends, and we hereby issue a call to arms!

A Request For Leniency And Sharp Pencils

Louis Kraar

LEGISLATOR David Reid got up the other night and called upon his contemporaries to set up a probation system for first offense Honor System violators.

And as he did, I thought of Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver and Institute of Government Director Albert Coates and the other chroniclers of student government here. The time has come to add another chapter to the tedious, but inspiring, history of student government. I suggest that Weaver Coates and the rest sharpen their pencils.

UNDER THE present setup, violators of the Honor System (which puts one on his honor not to cheat, lie, or steal) are usually booted from school if found guilty. They are usually "suspended." That is, they can come back after a given time has passed.

Reids wants to elevate the student courts "from their positions as mere juries to a position of a true judicial body." That is, he wants to give a first offender a second chance.

I've always looked on Carolina as a place that allows some mistakes. Reid's plan carries this over to the student courts. At the same time, he has provided for stiffer sentences for "flagrant and premeditated violators."

THIS CHANGE in the administration of the Honor System would, as Reid says, fill the need "for rehabilitation and corrections instead of mere punishment in first offense cases."

Faculty advisors to whom probationers would report are provided for in the Reid plan. It is a well though out one, leaving the individual student courts flexibility.

ALREADY CLOUDS of opposition are gathering. Reid wants to change what seems to be an unflexible system. What's more, Reid simply wants change. And there are still some who feel that changing a seasoned institution—like the Honor System—will upset it. Many of these ni opposition are those who are upset over any change of anything.

"Cynics among students and faculty alike freely prophesied the failure of the student government at its birth: At every turning point in its history they have lived to witness a student body rising to the challenge of a crisis," writes chronicler Coates.

And so it is with current critics.

CAROLINA'S HONOR system has, of late, become too much like a sacred cow, something that is respected because it is the tradition but not really understood.

Most students, if they were accused of violating the system, wouldn't know their rights. If the legislative committee into whose hands and heads the fate of Reid's plan rests will open up his hearings, it can do much to enlighten the campus.

Arguments on all sides of this plan should be considered, letting the student body in on what the alternatives are. Then the body should deliberate.

IF THE Legislative committee acts openly and fairly (and I'm sure it will), it will probably be time again for student government chroniclers to write another chapter. I hope so.

'How Are We Fixed For Jet-Propelled Ideas?'

UN Session Will Be Rocky

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — A network radio commentator recently chided Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Benson for buying an airplane that Secretary of the Interior McKay decided he didn't want. It looked as if Benson, according to this account, was using the plane for pleasure purposes.

Though Benson has made mistakes as Secretary of Agriculture, he can't justly be accused of wasting money on himself. Real fact is that he saved money for the Agriculture Department by buying this plane.

What happened was that the interior Department's Reclamation Bureau decided it no longer needed a Lockheed Lodestar, and put it up for sale through the General Services Administration which handles government surplus.

Benson's Agriculture Department promptly bought it, not for hauling VIP's around, but to carry Forest Service paratroopers who haveto jump from planes to put out forest fires. To have purchased the plane outright would have cost the government around $100,000. But thanks to Benson's transaction, 2it cost only $17,000 to convert the plane into a "smoke-jumper."

Strong U.N.

Look for a rocky session of the U.N. General Assembly. There are 66 items on the agenda, several of them potentially more explosive than the admission of Red China to membership.

Among the explosive are:

1.—An Indian motion to protest the use of the Pacific Islands as H-bomb testing ground. The Indians say that since these islands, including Eniwetok and Bikini, are trust territories of the United Nations ,they therefore cannot be used for the H-tests which threaten the lives of islanders.

2.—A Greek motion to protest the buildup of Cyprus, a British island adjacent to Greece, as a British naval base.

All week the British have been working backstage, trying to line up delegates tot quash the Greek motion. The United States will abstain from voting because it involves the rights of small nations against the strategic needs of major powers. On the other hand, many Latin-American friends as well as the semi-hostile Arab bloc and the Soviet bloc will side with the Greeks and the British may fail in a vote which all of Europe will be watching.

Senator Wiley Complains

Senator Alexander Wiley, loquacious senior senator from Wisconsin, is so burned up at the newspapers he's almost lost his loquaciousness. However, he managed to lecture one reporter for fifteen minutes on the subectj last week.

Alex claimed he was badly misrepresented in the papers when they said he said Congress should not be caled back to Washington because of the McCarthy issue.

What Alex said he siad was that it would be a very serious thing if a session of Congress were to be called now because the question of EDC was bound to come up and might have esrious international consequences. The Foreign Relations Committee came within one vote of stopping aid to France, Wiley pointed out, and a Senate Debate now might be disastrous.

"I told those men," Wiley bollowed, as he got up from his chair and started pacing the floor.

"They were sitting right there," he pointed, "And I told them that it had nothing to do with McCarthy. The leaders can't bring Congress back for a specific action, so there is bound to be some action on EDC.

"Why can't you guys get things straight? Why do you have to put words into our mouths just to get a story?

"I'll be watching you, now," he cautioned. "I want you to get this right."

McCarthy & Massachusetts

Able Senator Jack Kennedy of Massachusetts will probably go to the hospital during the debate ot censure McCarthy. Kennedy has a legitimate excuse—an old war wound. But he will choose the particular moment of the McCarthy debate to be hospitalized because of his huge McCarthy following in Massachusetts . . . Senator Saltonstall, also from Massachusetts and now up for re-election, would like to go to the hospital if the censure vote comes before November. Saltonstall has stood well with the Boston Irish ever since, as governor, he vetoed the birth control bill. So he's been worried sick about the prospect of voting on McCarthy . . . Young Kennedy might have a second political purpose for going to the hospital —skipping any campaigning for Foster Furcolo, the capable state treasurer who's opposing Saltonstall. John is said to figure a second Democratic senator would diminish his own political stature and perhaps pit popular Salth against him in 1958.

It can now be revealed that Senator Flanders' mystery visit to the Watkins Committee was to offer secret data on behalf of Secretary of the Army Stevens . . . Stevens has been red-faced over the drubbing Republican members at the Army-McCarthy hearings gave him and has had aides burning the midnight oil to puncture some of McCarthy's and Roy Cohn's testimony. They directed particular fire to the statement by McCarthy's private secretary that she had transcribed various memos which described with uncanny foresight McCarthy's trouble with Secretary Stevens and Army Counsel John Adams. McCarthy was able to pull these memos out of his files in an amazing manner at a crucial time, and the Senate Committee was never able to make a test of the typed pages to see whether they were actually transcribed when McCarthy said they were or thought . . . But though Secretary Stevens prepared volumes of evidence and submitted it to the Watkins Committee through Senator Flanders, Watkins ruled it out. So the Army research still remains a top secret in the Pentagon.

The Ram Sees

The Ram Sees where a letter-to-the-editor writer says the Ram does not "have the courage to put his name on his columns." Then this hot-collared young poison pen artist finishes his unimaginative, name-calling piece of running-off-at-the-fountain-pen by signing his letter, "Name withheld by request." The Ram feels no further comment is necessary.

And while we're answering one writer, we might as well tackle another—the young gentleman who comments on this country's "basic political philosophy—which generally holds that a legitimate government is the government of the majority.' Since he is talking about Red China, we defy him to offer any sort of evidence that the majority of the Chinese people have in any way expressed approval of their current government. Mao Tzetung won the last Chinese election unanimously, to be sure, but the people people didn't exactly express a free choice in their voting. Russia runs China these days, not the "majority" of the Chinese people. Some of our political dopesters are keeping their fingers crossed for a Titoist movement in the land across the bay from Mandalay, but it hasn't reared its beautiful head yet.

The Ram's heart, alas, is not on the campus today. It is with the Ram-horn-helmeted Tar Heels down in the bayous of Looziana, may they be victorious. To be brief (which the Ram has a hard time being) and to express our feelings in a nutshell, BEAT TULANE!

Ego, Morals, & Hypocrisy On Campus

Dick Creed

A friend of mine says he hates Carolina.

He was here two years, and most of the time when we talked it was about the hypocrisy and ego-centricity which we thought was the basis of just about every political, journalistic, or academic endeavor on campus.

My friend said he attended one political meeting at the beginning of his freshman year and was so sickened by the pantywaist-charm boys who kept talking about naivete and the single purpose of the party that he didn't go back anymore, even though he believed they were gettin more out of college than he was.

He used to complain a lot about the inepitude and pedantry of the graduate instructors in the English and French departments. (He was strictly a humanities man.)

From what I could learn from him about himself, he came from a family of moderate means in eastern Virginia. He was president of his student body during his senior year in high school, and he used to recall when he once made a speech to an assembly of student bodies of all the schools in his district.

He could have gotten along all right on the money his parents were willing to send him But during the last quarter of his freshman year he told them he had a job making as much money as he needed, although he was constantly distrubed because of his limited finances.

A good friend of his joined a fraternity, and my friend used to kid him a lot about being a big fraternity man and buying frat ties. We were all good friends and used to play ping-pong in the dormitory basement. We all agreed that there was a lot of artificiality in fraternity allegiances.

My friend finally got so fed up with "this damned place" he said he was going to go into the Army the summer after his freshman year. He didn't though, and he came back for his sophomore year.

About the only thing different about his attitude during the second year was that he became more sickened with the whole situation, and his sourness on the campus became more generalised.

He used to say, "Creed, these dogs in Chapel Hill are the most conceited bunch I know I've ever sene, especially that crowd that hangs around the library." As a general rule he liked dogs.

He finally swore he hated Carolina, and decided he would withdraw and go to a school nearer his home so he could commute. I said I didn't think he would, but he has.

He hitch-hiked to California this summer, working his way. When he left home he said his parents thought he had a job near Chapel Hill. But he took a bus to Asheville, and went from there to California by thumb.

I got one letter from him while he was out West. He said he'd seen a lot of country and that his trip beat my trip to Detroit the summer before by a mile.

After he got back home, he wrote me and said that he was all set to start school in Virginia. He said he still hated this place but that he would probably miss it. I haven't heard from him since.

When he first came here, my friend was going to major in political science. I don't know whether the political meeting changed his mind or not. Once he became determined that he was going to write. He started reading a lot, but he didn't have any system about it. We used to talk about books and authors which neither of us knew much about.

The last I heard, he has decided to major in languages.

We used to talk a lot about morals, God, philosophy, sex, Charlie Jones, and the characters we see every day on campus. I don't think we knew much about these things either.

I'm looking forward to seeing him or hearing from him again.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some tthings, minimizing others . . . Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.

THE HORSE was spraddle-legged in the lee of Murphey Hall, and muzzle-on-hoof perusing the poems of Catullus.

"I love pomes," The Horse breathed mistily. "Latin pomes in particular, I love."

Oh? Was The Horse, then, such a good Latin scholar?

"Fur from it," The Horse said frankly. "But Latin sorta equalizes things twixt me and other pome lovers I know. Taek, exempli gratia, as we Latin students say, T. S. Eliot. Some of his stuff I understand fine, but a whole lot of it I do not understand at all. Yet it is written in English."

Well, at any rate The Horse was frank in admitting it.

"That's the rub," The Horse growled, hoofing Catullus aside and sucking idly on a hoof. "How can you admit it when you sit in class with stoodents on any and all sides who claim to see great significance, as they call it, in everything of Eliot's? But in Latin, now, all students are on the same low level so to speak. They all gotta translate the Latin before they can claim to like what it says, and by that time they are all too exhausted to make any claims whatsoever."

Oh? So? Then who explained the poesy?

"Doc Suskin, of Classics, is doing it right now The Horse said, "and durned interesting it is, too You see, when you do not have to pretend that nature endowed or equipped you with some secret mechanism which enables you to know good poesy when you read it, you sit with your face shut and learn what good poesy is by having it pointed out to you. Then maybe you can go into an English poetry class and do more than make out you like a pome simply because it is fashionable to like pomes, or because it is stylish at the moment to like some particular pote. This is one of the great values in Latin and Greek: you start off admitting very frankly you do not know anything about it, and thus you are in a good position to learn."

Did The Horse really believe that there was time, in these days of the hurry-up in everything, to poke into things like Latin and Greek?

"It is all the more reason," The Horse stated pontifically, "you should study Classics. We stand around admiring ourselevs for being as smart as all-get-out in the Twentieth century, when as a matter of cold Latin and Greek fact we are as big a passel of boobs as ever got their names indited in the sorry pages of History."

I thought The Horse was wrong there. The problems in those days were not as acute as were ours of to-day. There were less mouths to be fed, and consequently there was less labor to be accomplished in turning out the fodder and other supplies necessary to life.

"What you mean," The Horse contradicted me, "is that our whole concern nowadays is turning out and consuming food and other effects which you regard as necessities of life. We squawk about juvenile delinquency and increase in adult crime and preach about how we are—meaning the other guy, not us — blacksliding from Religion. Heck, Roger, we are not blacksliding from Religion! We are daily and nightly practicing our true Religion of Body-Worship."

Aw, come off it! Why, this past year was a record one for church-attendance in the United States.

"Yup, it was," The Horse agreed cheerfully. "Part of one day in a seven-day week, we take an hour or so to go to church; but even there and then we continue our ritual of Body-Worship. How many of the church-goers, Roger, do you suppose are wondering 'How does my hat look?' or 'I'm real sharp in my n ew suit!' and how many of them do you suppose are wondering, 'How does my soul look in the eyes of God?' How many people in church do you suppose walked there, reflecting soberly on where they are headed; and how many do you suppose screamed up in their shiny new Zilch-Eight and took time out (even though they were late) to observe with snide satisfaction that Dan Pettifog's Silly-Six was looking pretty beat up?"

I thought this was an odd mood for The Horse.

"Well, maybe you get that way reading the Classics," The Horse shrugged. "Maybe yo usort of get the idea that what a man did and thought and said was a lot more important than what he ate wore or drove."

I thought The Horse had a nerve, claiming those pagans, those idolaters, were better than we were.

"We have simplified things," The Horse conceded. "Instead of getting all fouled up over which gods to worship in a polytheistic rhubarb, we get ourselves fouled up over one deity to worship

Exactly! Christianity, for example; or Judaism Or Confucianism, Shintoism, Bhuddism —

"Wrong again, Roger," The Horse grinned toothily. "We have simplified things by setting our dividual selves up to worship. Not everybody, to be sure. But more and more, we are getting that way. Why does a juvenile delinquent become a juvenile delinquent? Because he, or she, wants something — and that is The Law, so far as they are concerned. The adult criminal gets his and her way because he or she wants something, and that is their law. Now, if more people would worry more about what other people want, or need, we'd automatically be practising Christianity of a sort The way it is, we attend Christian churhes. most of us in this nation, but by and large, we worship our bodies. I — "

The way it is, we attend Christian churches. most I followed his crossed eight-balls of eyes and was not amazed to see a trio of pre-Dior coo-eds pantthering past. Ah hah! Was this not paganism? Were those three not Maenads?

"Well," The Horse chittered, "at least I cannot be accused of worshiping my own body."

"Wump!" Mr. Wump whumped. . perhaps with an eye on The Horse's more than ample girth.

Rhodes, Gomez Lead Giants To Third Win, 6 To 2

Dusty Equals Series Record

Vic Wertz Hits Homer As Tribe Falls Again

By GAYLE TALBOT

Cleveland, Oct. 1.—(AP)—The New York Giants, with amazing Dusty Rhodes again in the starring role and pitcher Ruben Gomez giving fine support, whipped the Cleveland Indians, 6-2, today for their third straight victory in the world series. Rhodes equalled a world series record by hitting safely for the third straight time as a pinch batsman.

Gomez, making his first world series appearance, had a shutout up to the seventh inning when Vic Wertz drove a home run over the low fence in right center field. But he weakened in the eighth, gave up a second run and Hoyt Wilhelm came in to finish the game.

Dusty Connects

A crowd of 71,555, contributing to a record net gate of $464,155.30, saw Rhodes equal the world series record of three successful pinch hits when he batted for Monte Irvin with the bases full in the third inning. He connected with Mike Garcia's first pitch to drive in Don Mueller and Willie Mays with the second and third Giant runs.

The record of three pinch hits in one world series was set by Bobby Brown of the New York Yankees in 1927.° It wasn't until th eseventh inning that Ray Narleski, third of four Cleveland pitchers, finally got Rhodes out for the first time in the series. He swung at three straight pitches then and fanned again in the ninth.

Rhodes had hit a game-winning homer in the pinch role in the opening game and singled as a pinch hitter, then followed it with a home run in the second contest.

The fourth game in the series will be played here tomorrow. A Giant victory would end the series.

Tribe's Bob Lemon Will Pitch Again Today; Don Liddle Foe

CLEVELAND, Oct. 1 (AP)—Don Liddle, the pint-sized southpaw of the New York Giant pitching staff, was chosen today by Manager Leo Durocher to pitch the fourth and possibly deciding game of the 1954 World Series.

"It's Liddle, and I'm not looking beyond tomorrow,"said Durocher, brushing aside all questions as to what he would do if the Giants lost to the Cleveland Indians. He also refused to predict a four-game sweep of the series.

"The game starts at 1 p.m. and we'll be here," saidDurocher.

Again he heaped praise on his entire team for the 6-2 crusher applied to the American League champions.

Ruben Gomez, the slender Puerto Rican who pitched masterful ball until he got in trouble in the eight, revealed that he asked to be taken out of the game.

"I told him (Durocher) to take me out," he said. "I was getting tired and this was too important a game."

Durocher explained that Gomez had a bad cold and was having difficulty in breathing—"and besides he was losing his stuff."

Hoyt Wilhelm, the terrific knuckleball pitcher, put out the fire.

The Giant dressing room was noisy after the big victory, but Durocher was on the subdued side, and no one yet was claiming the world championship.

"Was the perfect hit and run in the third the turning point of the game?" Durocher was asked.

He shook his head.

"There wasn't any turning point, They play as a team."

"Would you have started Liddle if you had lost today?"

That's a hpothetical question."

"Were you surprised at winning three in a row?"

"All I know is that we were up against a good ball club, said Durocher. "It's a darned good club. They said we would be up against great pitching, and I agree. But my fellows haven't exactly been throwing bean bags all season. In 62 games we allowed two runs or less. I wish I owned that 'big three' Bob Lemon, Early Wynn, and Mike Garcia.

The Giants again will take the field tomorrow with Monte Irvin in left field, and Dusty Rhodes, the explosive pinch hitter, on the bench. Rhodes, with six official times at bat, has seven runs batted in, which is only two under the series record set by Lou Gehrig of the New York Yankees in 1928—and Gehrig was playing full time.

Lemon, beaten 5-2 in the series opener in New York on pinchhitter Dusty Rhodes' tenth inning three-run homer is coming back after only two days of rest for the Tribe.

"But Bob is strong and says he's ready and anxious to go," said Al Lopez.

"He hasn't worked that close together all year, because we had a good bunch of other pitchers, but a year ago he and Wynn and Garcia pitched every third day for practically a month. Bob will be all right."

Al Rosen, Indians' third baseman, said he removed the compress bandage from his upper leg today and did some hobbling about after replacing it with a lighter wrapping.

"It felt pretty good, and I think I can go tomorrow," the runs—batted-in star and long-ball hitter said.

Lopez echoed the wish with "We've missed Rosen in there. He's always a big threat. We'll wait until tomorrow to decide, but if he's able to go, he'll be in the lineup."

Big Mike Garcia, belted for five hits and four runs in three innings today before 71,555 fans—a crowd far under pre-series expectations—was just a bit too wild to be effective, Lopez said.

Tony Cuccinello, No. 1 coach of the Tribe, explained it with:

'When Mike is right, and working easily, his fast ball takes off in either direction, and he's tuogh to hit. But when his control is off, and he tries to put an extra something on the ball, his fast one straightens out and loses its hop. That's what happened to him today.'

Rock Hill Plans Day For Dusty

ROCK HILL, S. C., Oct. 1 (AP)—Dusty Rhodes Day here is planned tentatively for Oct. 8.

The all-out local welcome home for the New York Giants' clutch-hitting star is to include a big parade, a barbecue and speeches.

Mayor J. Emmet Jerome, the Chamber of Commerce, the Rock Hill Chiefs of the Tri-State League and various other organizations and individuals are working on it.

The activity will center on Municipal stadium where Rhodes played for the Chiefs in 1950 and 1951.

The Rhodes family has a home here and Dusty has worked for a textile printing and finishing firm here during the past several winters.

wihtout star junior halfback Ken Keller in the starting lineup. Keller injured his ankle in a preseason scrimmage, made only token appearances in the State game, and will see only limited actinon today. Barclay will start Larry Parker at left half in his place, and go with sophomore Don Klochak at fullback.

The Tar Heels have been weakened at tackle through the loss of Chris Carpenter, who is no longer on the squad.

Barclay declared this week that Carolina is now a passing team and will pass more than any other time in its history. Barclay's decision is based on the good throwing of Newman and substitute quarterback Len Bullock and an outstanding performance by ends Will Frye and Dick Starner last week. Though quarterback Al Long didn't throw last week, he will probably attempt passes today.

Connie Gravitte will round out the Carolina backfield at right half, and is probably the number one Tar Heel running threat. He is a senior, and averaged 4.9 yds. per carry last week.

Outstanding running back for the Green Wave is fullback Bob Saia who has scored one touchseven yards per carry in Tulane's first two games.

Carolina has defeated Tulane only twice, losing five times, and tieing once. The Tar Heels second win was in Chapel Hill in 1937, 13-0, and they've been frustrated since. The last time the teams met was in 1942 when Tulane won, 29-14.

SAE And ATO Win Grid Tilts

In a Fraternity League Intramural match yesterday, SAE dumped Phi Gam-1 in a close struggle by the score of 7-0. The game se-sawed back and forth for most of the first half before Herb Browne scooped up a pass and scampered across for the only score of the game. Bobby Payne added the point via placement.

After a scoreless game, ATO kept the ball inside the SPE 50-yard line to win the playoff by a score of 2-0. Neither team could score in the regulation game, so the game was decided by a series of eight downs, with each team alternating downs. In such cases, the team which has the ball in its territory after eight downs, loses by a score of 2-0.

Ft. Bragg Booters Down Tar Heels, 7-1

A strong Ft. Bragg soccer squad handed Carolina's Tar Heels a 7-1 defeat yesterday in the opening match for both teams.

Two players did all the scoring for the Ft. Bragg team. Ark Lachiw scored four goals and Witold Lukeszewski scored the other three A four-goal scoring spree in the second quarter gave the Soldiers a 4-0 halftime lead.

Carolina missed several good scoring opportunities and the only score was botted by Chip Bryant in the third quarter. The fine defensive play of the Ft. Bragg goalie stopped many other Tar Heel scoring threats.

Carolina Coach Marvin Allen complimented the team on its efforts. "We played very well in spots," Allen commented, "and, of course, we found a lot of our weaknesses." Along with Bryant, the Carolina mentor was especially pleased with the play of Jerry Russell, Grover Brown and goalie Don Gladstone.

Ft. Bragg coach Major Stawinsky was very pleased with the play of his team. Every Ft. Bragg player is a native European, and the large squad represents practically every European country. "Of course we can't expect to improve on last year's record," exclaimed Stawinsky, "but I believe our team this year will do more scoring than last year." The Ft. Bragg coach complimented the UNC squad, saying that their all-round pay was very good.

The two teams meet again next Friday on Fetzer Field. The Tar Heels open the regular schedule the following week-end against Maryland.

Duke To Entertain Tennessee; Wake Forest Is Host To State

Blue Devils Ranked Seventh In Country

DURHAM, N.C., Oct. 2 (AP) — Duke, ranked No. 7 in the nation by virtue of its 52-0 pummeling of Penn in its opener last week, opens its home football season here today against an old and dangerous adversary, Tennessee.

Tennessee, overlooked in preseason speculation in the southeastern Conference, opened with an impressive 19-7 victory over Mississippi State last week. Senior tailback Jimmy Wade injured a knee in the victory and his status tomorrow is in doubt. If Wade is unable to play Bob Brengle, a senior scatback and John Majors, sophomore speedster, may share the load.

Duke again will rely on its seasoned starters, with eager sophomores and juniors anixous to crash into the lineup as they did last week with such telling effect.

The Atlantic Coast Conference Blue Devils will be seeking to turn a trick that hasn't been accomplished in nearly two decades—beat Tennessee three years in succession. That hasn't been done since Alabama whipped the Vols in 1933-35.

A crowd of about 25,000 is expected. The kickoff is set for 2:30 p.m. EST.

Deacs And Wolfpack Look For First Win

WAKE FOREST, N.C., Oct. 2 (AP)—North Carolina State and Wake Forest meet on the football field here today for the 48th time with the outcome rated a toss-up.

The last three meetings of the Atlantic Coast Conference rivals have seen Wake Forest win by a margin of three touchdowns to one, although State leads the series, 25-17, with 5 ties. Last year's 20-7 Wake Forest victory started State on a losing streak that has grown to nine games.

Fullback Don Langston, idled by an injury as State lost to North Carolina, 20-6, last week, is ready for Wake Forest. Coach Tom Rogers has made several Wake Forest lineup changes with Nick Consoles taking over as starting quarterback in an effort to sharpen the passing game which failed last week.

About 8,000 are expected for the 2 O,clock kickoff.

Cross Country

The Carolina Cross Country team opens its 1954 season tomorrow at Fetzer Field, against the Atlantic Coast Champion N. C. State Wolfpack. The varsity team toes the mark at 4:00 ten minutes after the freshman squad gets under way.

Music Series Starts Second Year Soon

The Hill Hall Music Series, now in its second year since its opening last fall, is this year presenting to the student of Carolina some of the best musical entertainment to be obtained. In a series of eight performances, entertainers from practically every field of music will be represented.

The first program will be presented by Graham Memorial, and is to be held at Hill Music Hall Tuesday, Oct. 5, at 8 p. m. John Ellis, pianist, is the center of this program.

Following the intermission, Mr. Ellis will perform Prokofieff's Third Sonata (1917), Chopin's Ballade in F major, and Nocturne in C Sharp Minor, Op. 27, No. 1.

John Ellis was born in Raleigh. From there he moved to Sherman, Tex. where he spent most of his earlier years. It was there that he received his first musical training He left Sherman and returned to North Carolina to enroll at the University. While here he studied under Dr. Newman of Hill Music Hall for four years. Upon graduating he was awarded the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts. After his graduation he was appointed to the teaching staff of the Julliard School. He is also a faculty member of the Westtown School in Pennsylvania. Mr. Ellis has appeared as soloist with the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra, as well as in recital at many universities and colleges in the East and South.

Appearing after Ellis will be Maurice Wilk, a violinist from New York. The program for November 2 is to be announced later. Nov. 16 will see the Chapel Hill Choral Club, with Joel Carter conducting and Mary G. Clark as cellolst. Following the Choral Club is the University Symphony Orchestra on Nov. 30, with Earl Slocum and William Newman as pianist. On Dec. 14 the University Glee Clubs will present their annual Christmas Concert. They will be assisted by the University Choral Club and the University Symphony Orchestra.

The development of modern education and its importance in our civilization are also illustrated by quotation from such men as Aristotle, Jefferson and Lincoln.

The importance of knowledge in government is found in a statement by James Madison, who is quoted: "A popular government without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but a Prologue to a Farce or a Tragedy; or perhaps both."

Facsimilies of British, French, German and American constitutions and declarations of right are displayed.

President Eisenhower is quoted from his Columbia University inaugural address on the subject of Free Speech and Education. The age-old practice of book-burning is also illustrated.

Also portrayed is the plight of dissentors-religious, political and otherwise, illustrated by scenes of the Buchenwald crimes of World War II.

Man's acceptance of the responsibilities of knowledge concludes the series with excerpts from Bacons's "Essays on Knowledge."

—Columbia—

Columbia's bicenntennial celebration.

Entitled "Man's Right to Knowledge and the Free Use Thereof," the exhibit is in such great demand that it has been loaned to the University for only seven days, ending tomorrow, Dean Pierson said.

Charles W. Phillips, Woman's College director of public relations and general chairman of the committee on arrangements, presided at the dinner.

President Gordon Gray extended greetings from the Consolidated University.

Dean Pierson said he considered the greatest period in the history of Columbia University to be the span from 1880 to 1920. He was not necessarily suggesting, he said, that Columbia had experienced a decline.

"Al of us know that Columbia's role as a pioneer has continued. and know of the continued presence at Columbia of many notable men of letters and scholarship . . . perhaps the greatest compliment I can give is that Columbia has reproduced its own kind. This, we may reflect, is a mission of graduate endeavor."

Referring to the 1880-1920 period, Dean Pierson said that "during this period Columbia was not only to be a pioneer, asserting man's right to knowledge, but was going to realize itself as university in name and fact in graduate activities and research of high excellence and power by making constructively free use of that knowledge . . . this was a productive era in which seemingly every member of Columbia's staff felt an obligation to engage in serious labors of research."

Dean Pierson said he considered William A. Dunning and William R. Shefford the greatest teachers under whom he stutlied at Columbia.

He quoted Dr. Odum as putting Fanklin H. Giddings at the top of Columbia's professor list, along with G. Stanley Hall of Clark University.

Professor Clark said that by long tradition and in view of present world-wide interdependence, Columbia "stresses basic training in the arts of living, not merely in making a living by a specialized vocation. The hope of this university is that her graduates will possess the satisfying fundamentals of life—understanding of values, motives, fears and hopes of human existence. To that end, Columbia has emphasized, along with the physical and social sciences, the importance of the humanities.

In a number of ways, the University of North Carolina as a unit, Professor Clark said, can profit from the examples being set by Columbia in development of the humanities.

For instance, he said that "courses that are integrated so as to give breadth in human understanding and in world-wide cultures fulfill a need in cosmopolitan living.

Miss Kreimeier cited the role of Columbia's Teachers College and its contributions to education. These contributions, she said, include:

"Crusading championship of democracy in education; leadership in the training of teachers—it was the first teachers college; pioneered in measuring pupils by psychological and very other kind of test, and as a result changed the character of teaching.

"Conducted scores of surveys, investigations and researches which have had a salubrious effect upon school systems throughout the world; experimented by trying out new theories to see how they worked in practice—progessive education, project method, core curriculum," Miss Kreimeier said.

Navy Sets Day For ROTC Tests

The ninth-annual competitive examination for high school seniors who desire to attend college and train for careers as Naval officers will be held throughout the nation on December 11, the Navy announced today. Applications for the NROTC are now available, but must be received by November 20, the announcement added.

Successful candidates will start their Naval careers in college and universities across the country in 1955, with substantial financial assistance from the government. After a normal college education, graduates will be commissioned in the Regular Navy or Marine Corps, for active duty with the fleet throughout the world.

Male citizens of the United States, between the ages of 17 and 21 are eligible to apply for the NROTC aptitude test. Persons who attain a qualifying score will be given the Navy's rigid midshipman physical examination next February. From the pool of qualified candidates remaining in competition approximately 1800 young men will be selected for appointment to the NROTC, and the college of their choice.

Students enrolled in the Regular NROTC program will spend their summers on training cruises with the Fleet, and will receive $600 annual retainer pay until commissioned. In addition to the normal college curriculum, the midshipmen will study a planned course in Naval science. All tuition, fees, and books will be furnished by the Navy.

This college training program is also open to enlisted men on active duty in the Navy and Marine Corps. Such candidates will be selected under a separate quota established for the services.

Registration For Fall Semester Hits 6,061

From Alabama to Colorado, from the Bahamas to Viet Nam the students kept coming in until UNC's total enrollment figure for the fall semester reached over 0,000.

Tar Heels led with a 78.3 percentage or 4,748 out of the total 6,061 students enrolled.

The enrollment is divided into 4,993 men and 1,068 women (approximately a 4 to 1 ratio in favor of the lasses).

Twenty-seven per cent of the males are veterans and total veterans of both sexes number 1,376, with 19 of those coeds.

Among the 1242 out-of-state students 174 come from Virginia, 150 from New York, 128 from South Carolina, 109 from Florida and 92 from Georgia. A total of 41 states and the District of Columbia are represented.

Foreign students at the University total 71 from 35 different countries. India leads by far with a delegation of 11; next highest are Canada and Puerto Rico, with five each, and Phillipine Islands with four. All others have three or fewer.

A breakdown of enrollment by academic divisions shows the largest group, 2615, in General College, followed by Arts and Sciences, 812; Business Administration School, 383, and Education School, 253.

The Graduate School registration is 765, while Law School reported 205. The Graduate number does not include 62 in Public Health, 27 in Library Science, and 42 in Social Work.

In the health divisions of the University there are 211 students enrolled in Dentistry, 241 in Medicine; 152 in Nursing; 214 in Pharmacy; and 78 in Public Health.

UNC's YMCA Is Mentioned In 'Post'

The University YMCA is mentioned in the current issue of The Saturday Evening Post, (October 2), in an article entitled: "How to Stay in College." The author, Robert U. Jamson, visited a number of colleges last summer, and reports on his survey.

Spieaking of influences that help the student to mature, Ms. Jamson says on page 136 "There are extracurricular activities which seem to help the student's overall maturing in judgment and balance: the 'cultural' clubs—music and dramatics—and, of increasing importance, religious activities. Nearly all campuses report an increasing awareness of the need for personal religion. This need, reflecting perhaps the uncertaintly of the times, is filled by prayer groups and religious-discussion groups. Many colleges, like Dartmouth and the University of North Carolina, report increased activity on the part of the Christian Union and the YMCA, which carry on extensive social-work

Want Too See Jean Harlowe In Negligee?

Where else can you still see platinum-haired Jean Harlowe in a flimsy negligee, Marlene Dietrich on horseback, or even Charlie Chaplin portraying Bizet's Carmen except through Graham Memorial Activity Board's Fall Film Series.

The series begines Thursday with a French film fresh from the New York circuits, "Dairy of a Country Priest." This film will be followed on Otc. 21 by a double feature, "Burlesque on Carmen" and "Renior to Picasso" a documentary on the works of many famous artists.

Greta Garbo will be featured November 4 in the most celebrated drama of her career, "Camille."

November 18 will bring Marlene Dietrich in the well-known western film, "Destry Rides Again".

"Time in the Sun", to be shown December 2, is a story of the fuedal era preceeding the Mexican revolution. On the same bill is an English thriller, "The Gentleman in Room Six."

Two weeks later, on December 16, a Russian version of the famed opera "Sadko" will be shown.

January 6 is the date that "Bombshell" with Jean Harlowe will be shown. The plot includes, in addition to Miss Harlowe's platinum hair, a four poster bed in a lacquer white bedroom and three fluffy English sheepdogs.

The series closes January 13 with the French film "The Storm Within," a realistic drama of life in a neurotic and disor-

Lawrence To Play In Germans

Elliot Lawrence and his orchestra, reportedly voted for the past three years as one of the most popular bands among colges in America, has been signed to play for the annual Fall Germans on Oct. 22.

German Club Vice - President Jake Rountree announced yesterday that Lawrence will present a concert in Memorial Hall on Friday afternoon, followed by the dance Friday night. The weekend will be climaxed on Saturday by the Wake Forest-Carolina football game.

Lawrence, who has appeared on television and in motion pictures, has been featured at over 300 college dances, including those at the University of Pennsylvania, Florida State University, Iowa State, the Citadel and Purdue. He recorded the popular Decca album, "College Prom Favorites."

The German Club, an organization composed of representative from 13 social fraternities on campus, sponsors three dance weekends a year. Last year it brought to Carolina such name bands as Johnny Long, Tommy Tucker, "Wild Bill" Davison, Ralph Materie and Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong. In the past years, the German Club has been responsible for music from Ray Anthony, the Dorsey brothers Vaughan Monroe and Louis Prima.

All For Old Phi Mu

So you think Greek Week's hard.

Just listen to what happened to Bob Shrope, 19, from Penn State University, over the weekend.

Bob turned up at Chapel Hill yesterday afternoon, searching for:

(1) Signature of the Dean of Students;

(2) Signature of one officer from each of the 25 fraternities on the UNC campus;

(3) One brassiere, size 38, with three coeds' signatures thereon.

Bob (1) got Assistant Dean of Students Roy Holsten's signature;

(2) he got almost all of the fraternity officers' names— at 5 p.m. yesterday he had eight to go;

(3) and he got the brassiere, size 38, suitably engraved.

The brassiere, he said, came from the Chi Omega Sorority.

The instrument bore the names of three Chi O girls, but one of the girls, telephoned yesterday, declined to let the names be printed—"That would be damaging." she said.

Bob said his hunt was part of initiation into Phi Mu Delta, Penn State social fraternity. He hitch-hiked down here, and must return for the start of classes tomorrow morning.

"I think it's a pretty good idea," Bob said yesterday.

Tar Heel Feels 'Orleans Is Not Gridiron Town

By JACK STILWELL

NEW ORLEANS, La. Oct.2—On New Year's Day, 1949, Carolina's Tar Heels flew over Lake Ponchartrain and descended at the New Orleans International Airport. The Justice Era was fading, but the Tar Heels had every intention of showing the shrimp boat captiol what top-notch football was. That day, the Sugar Bowl was groaning under the weight of 82,000 football addicts who were chafing at the bit to see the Owls of Rice tangle with the big blue of Carolina.

This afternoon the stadium and the sport are the same, and the Tar Heels are here once again, but aside from that, there's very little to remind one of the '49 Sugar Bowl. Even the Tar Heel uniforms have changed from the familiar pale blue to a deeper, purplish hue.

In a sweltering 88 degree heat, a gathering that the sportswriters probably will call "small but enthusiastic" accumulated haphazardly in the vast bowl. The approximate attendance was 15,000, which left some 65,000 vacant seats, enough room to carry on a successful fox-hunt.

No one, however, entertained any ideas about a capacity crowd. It's difficult for me to imagine New Orleans turning out for any type of organized sport. Football in this town is about as anachronistic as a sundial in the Morthead parking lot. One would more reasonably expect the crowd to gather here to see a privatee duel between the Santa Cruz Cutthroats and Sammie's Swashbuckling Sabres. This is the only town in the State of Louisiana where the people think more of Jean Lafitte than they did of Huey B. Long.

The most spirited and brilliant playing occured before the main event ever got started. The Jefferson Junior High Jays and the Northside Tigers, each with a line averaging 65 pounds soaking wet, scrimmaged with such fury that the Tulane Board of Trustees got together and voted money for athletic scholarships to be given in 1970. The Jays, demonstrating greater depth and superior backfield power, soundly trounced the Tigers, 14-0, in the 15-minute period.

The ballgame got underway with with little or no trouble, Carolina getting its only score in the first three minutes of the first quarter. The stadium announcer demonstrated the hospitality of the New Orleans population, making halfback C. Gravitte feel like a native by pronouncing his name "Graveet". Half-time activities were

Dean Of Women Has Been Here Since 1946

DEAN KATHERINE K. CARMICHAEL
". . .I have the perfect job. . .

'. . . As Women More Than Students'

Dean Likes Job

By JACKIE GOODMAN

"I feel that here at the University of North Carolina I have the perfect job."

That's what Katherine K. Carmichael, dean of women students, says about her work.

Here Since '46

Hailing from Alabama, Dean Carmichael came to the University to take up her job as Dean of Women in 1946. Before this she first attended Birmingham-Southern College, majoring in history and political science and minoring in English.

After taking her first degree there, Dean Carmichael taught in the public school system for six years. Continuing with her education, she next took her masters and doctors degrees at Vanderbilt University, majoring in English language and literature and minoring in history and philosophy. Her schooling was then continued at Johns Hopkins University, University of Colorado, Peabody College and the University of Michigan.

The two main professional interests of the Dean of Women have always been in the teaching of English and in personnel administration. She began work in her second interest at Texas State College for Women, where ste supervised the activities of girls in dormitories as well as holding a teaching position in the English department. Her work has continued along that line ever since.

Four Carolina Passes Caught By Greenies

By TOM PEACOCK

TULANE STADIUM, Oct. 2-Carolina's Tar Heels, starting the game with a vigor that gave them a score in the first three minutes, faltered in the second half here today, allowing Tulane University to score and gain a 7-7tie in the last five minutes of play.

Carolina appeared capable of a romp in the first half, and especially in the first few minutes of the game. Great line play with center Bill Kirkman and guard Bill Koman leading, plus fine running by Connie Gravitte, were largely responsible for the good play.

Fred Wilcox, a second string quarterback, and Willie Hof, a substitute halfback, caught fire in the last quarter for Tulane to account for the Green Wave tieing score. Wilcox passed to end Harry Duvigneaud from six yards out for the score.

Gravitte scored on an option play from 14 yards out for Carolina early in the first quarter.

A small crowd of 15,000 was almost lost in the massive Sugar Bowl, but was treated to "the best ball game here in two years."

A Man To Be Reckoned With

If there is any way to explain the remarkable influence and power of the late Senator Pat McCarran, as only one man among 531 in Congress, the explanation must lie in geography, seniority and personal ability.

Geography made the Senator from Nevada the peer of the Senator from New York, though the latter represented 90 citizens for every one in Senator McCarran's state.

Seniority, in which the Senator ranked fourth, made him ranking Democrat on the powerful Judiciary Committee and at times its chairman.

A keen knowledge of law coupled with arrogance and a long and vindictive memory made Senator McCarran a man to be reckoned with, by Senators and Presidents, Democrats and Republicans and even foreign governments.

In a political system of carefully-wrought checks and balances, Senator McCarran became a kind of one-man check and balance, running against the tide with a one-man foreign policy and a one-man domestic policy. These were hardly in keeping with the times, nor were they always clear. As George H. Hall, Post-Dispatch Washington correspondent, observed:

> If there was a thread of consistency that ran through Senator McCarran's life, it probably could be found winding its way among personalities and ideas of an authoritarian nature.

Perhaps this explains the McCarran policy. He admired Chiang Kai-shek, went to bat for Generalissimo Franco and counted Gen. MacArthur and Senator McCarthy on his side. A good example of his work occurred in a few short days in 1949 when he managed to block a bill to help homeless DPs, interfered with some U. N. business and tried to toss more dollars to the Chinese Nationalist—defying national policy in every case.

The same thread of consistency, if there was one, led Senator McCarran to set himself frequently against any Administration and any party—especially his own. And the thread wound this son of Irish immigrants into a champion of exclusion laws keeping immigrants out.

He will not be called a champion of the underdog. When his committee had before it a bill to admit Ellen Knauff, war bride kept on Ellis Island more than two years without explanation, Chairman McCarran tossed the case aside. "What's all the hullabaloo about?" he asked.

But another kind of consistency ran through some of the McCarran activities even when they seemed most inconsistent. Thus, though co-author of the restrictive Immigration Act, he broke its bars to let in Basque sheepherders. Though an isolationist opposed to the means of freer trade, he fought for silver as a world monetary metal. Though an advocate of sterner measures against subversion, he opposed the bill to legalize wire-tapping in such cases. There is a simple explanation in each case. The Nevada ranchers needed sheepherders. The Nevada mines wanted to produce more silver. The rich Nevada gambling interests definitely did not want legalized wire-tapping.

The consistency in each of these inconsistencies was Senator McCarran's devotion to the political powers of his native state. For that he was repeatedly sent from sagebrush to Senate, and maintained in his special autocracy.

Fitzgerald's Paradise Is Regained Now

Louis Kraar

MAYBE IT was all the talk about fraternity drinking. Or perhaps it was last fall's discussion about student autos. I'm not sure.

At any rate, much has been said lately about the so-called "free-wheeling Fitzgerald an existence" of Chapel Hill and its country club atmosphere. Julian Scheer even wrote a tongue-in-cheek piece in the Charlotte News which depicted the Carolina gentleman as a loafer, boozer, and general good-for-nothing.

Those who didn't know Julian were concerned about the wild living in Chapel Hill. Knowing Julian, I became curious about the alleged roar of the roaring twenties.

F. SCOTT Fitzgerald was the man who put the spirit of the twenties on paper. He caught up the giggle of the flapper, rhythm of the Charleston, and the furious tempo of living among the upper middle class, and he put them down vividly.

His first novel, This Side of Paradise, gave him enough money to get married and gave many mothers reason for concern about the wild lives they thought their young daughters must have been living. As it turned out, Fitzgerald's wife was his downfall. And the mothers found their daughters were like any other young girls. That is, any others growing up in a time of material prosperity.

Princeton's snobbery, petting parties, parlor snakes, and fraternity proms took life in Fitzgerald's book. And the nation went out to buy it because they wanted to read about themselves —or their children.

BUT JUST how loud was the roar of the twenties? Were colleges like Princeton mere gentleman country clubs? And was youth running rampant?

In This Side of Paradise, Fitzgerald seems to answer these things as his main character Amory Blaine lives the Princeton life of the twenties.

"Mostly there were parties — to Orange or the Shore, more rarely to New York and Philadelphia, though one night they marshalled fourteen waitresses out of Childs' and took them to ride down Fifth Avenue on top of an auto bus. They all cut more classes than were allowed, which meant an additional course the following year, but spring was too rare to let anything interfere with their colorful ramblings," writes Fitzgerald.

And, depending on who you are, Chapel Hill life could be like this, particularly in the sprifig.

AS FOR the girls, Fitzgerald says:

"Amory found it rather fascinating to feel that any popular girl he met before eight he might quite possibly kiss before twelve.

". . .Amory had come in constant contact with that great current American phenomenon, the 'petting party.'"

AND ONE particular girl is described:

"She had begun as he had, with good looks and an excitable temperament, and the rest was the result of accessible popular novels and dressing-room conversation culled from a slightly older set. Isabelle had walked with an artificial gait at nine and a half."

FROM THESE snapshots of the twenties — as recorded by Fitzgerald — it's evident that the twenties weren't too different from today. And, remembering the Fitzgerald wrote mainly about the more wealthy set, how one lived depended upon who he was.

day.

Chapel Hill probably does have some few who live a "free-wheeling Fitzgeraldan existence." I don't know any of them personally.

As for the rest of us, it seems our parties are one phase of what we do and not the object of Carolina existence. What with Saturday classes, draft boards hovering over us, and parents informed of our "free-wheeling" lives (via Fitzgerald), how could we be any different?

'It's Okay—I'm Doing The Same Thing'

Formosa Isn't Issue

LA PAZ, BOLIVIA — Every schoolboy knows that Christopher Columbus discovered America by mistake when he was really looking for the vast wealth of the orient, but many adults don't even know that we who followed Columbus on the North American continent have carried his mistake much farther and have continued to bet our economic and political chips on the Orient when a much wealthier and more friendly area lays right under our nose in South America.

Some five centuries have passed since Columbus and Hendrik Hudson and a dozen other explorers examined every nook and cranny of the rivers and bays of the Western Hemisphere with a view to finding a channel to the Orient. Five centuries is a long time, and should be enough time for us to learn.

Especially we have been slow to learn that the Orient, now rapidly going communist, is not our dish of tea. With Indochina certain to go communist, with the tin- and rubber-producing areas of the Maylays in danger, with Indonesia refusing to join us in an Asiatic defense pact, and with India increasingly anti-American it seems to me it's time for us to turn to the rich and more friendly areas of the South.

Sen. William Knowland of California, sometimes called the senator from Formosa, wants to keep on worrying about the controversial island. But I see no reasons why we should go to war over it, and I do see ample reason why we should concentrate on other parts of the world. That's one reason why I am making a quick trip down the west coast of South America.

Most of the politicians in Washington don't realize it, but the chief reason the Orient is going Communist is because the white man, taking a leaf from Columbus' noteobok, exploited the Orient at the expense of the New World. In brief, most of the products we buy from the Orient were stolen from Latin America. They were transplanted to the Orient because slave labor there was dirt cheap.

Labor was higher in South America. The social revolution came earlier there and now it's the social revolution which has caught up with the Orient. And in the Orient it is the rebellion against slave-labor wages that has brought communism.

To illustrate, it was a Britisher who, in 1876, smuggled the first rubber seeds out of Brazil and brought them to Ceylon, the Malays and Indonesia. Before that, rubber was king in Brazil. It built opera houses up the Amazon River. It started rubber factories for raincoats and gum boots in Mexico, but after the British began to exploit the cheap labor of Asia the rubber plantations of South America fell to rot and ruin.

That was why we spent three-quarters of a billion dollars building up synthetic rubber in the United States after Pearl Harbor, plus another quarter billion trying to encourage natural rubber development in South America. And that's why, with communism reaching down to these same Asiatic rubber plantations, we may be in for trouble again.

The same thing happened with cocoa. Chocolate and cocoa were found only in Latin America when the Spanish conquistadors arrived, but the British transplanted it to the African Gold Coast where today, thanks to cheap labor, it produces more than Latin America.

It was the Dutch who picked up the cinchona or quinine tree from Peru in 1854 and transplanted it to the Dutch East Indies. Since then and until World War II the Dutch had a near monopoly on quinine and as a result of the Japanese invasion the United States found itself without quinine.

We rushed madly into Latin America to plant cinchona trees after Pear Harbor, just as we tried to encourage hemp production and as we tried to persuade Bolivian tin miners to produce more tin.

Karl Bickel, former head of the United Press, was enlisted by the Nelson Rockefeller Cultural Relations Office to speed up sisal production in Central America to replace hemp, and we demanded that the Chilean government sell all its copper to us and that Cuba give us all its sugar.

Then, as the war ended, we dismissed our purchases, dropped our prices, and in many cases went back to buying from the precarious and distant Orient. Naturally this caused depression, unemployment, and the danger of communism in Latin America.

Simultaneously, our Marshall Plan funds in some cases were siphoned off to build up Latin-American competition in Asia and especially Africa. Money sent to Europe under the Marshall Plan released other capital which went to build up French, British and Dutch investments in Asian and African tropics.

The chief competition of Brazil today, for instance, is African coffee, which has had a tremendous inrease and is one reason for Brazil's economic difficulties.

These are some of the reasons why the average Latin American, though still reasonably friendly to the United States, nevertheless keeps his economic fingers crossed. He sees the possibility of a great noncompetitive two-way trade in tropical products which we can't produce.

But, to put across this trade plus the cultural and political ties that should go with it, the United States will have to do a lot more careful planning than goes with our other haphazard, hit-and-miss Good-Neighbor police today.

Romance In Fiction

Should you wish to escape from things as they are, the new novel by Hartzell Spence Bride of the Conqueror (Random House, 336 pp., $3.95) will carry you off most boldly to the adventurous times of the Spanish Conquistadores of Peru. And the rich and beautiful Dona Eloisa will prove an entirely beguiling narrator. Though a first person account of intrigue, brutal fighting and hard adventure, told by a fresh and fascinating young girl of wit and cool courage, may seem incongrous, the effect is surprisingly refreshing.

The historical facts of the tale seem authentic: and the manner of the telling is so simple and lightly entertaining as to blow clean away the stuffiness which smothers some historical novels. The plot sails straight along through the quelling by the Spanish King's temporal and spiritual deputy, Friar Gasca, of the insurgent Pizarros, drunk with New World wealth and power but starving for women other than Indian slaves. The heroine cooly if cynically joins Friar Gasca's design to offer her riches and her charms to the best fighter for the Crown forces. If they lose the fight, she has the dazzling alternative of becoming Empress of Peru, the prize of Pizarro. Mystery veils the link between her favorite contender and the most unholy and colorful of the wicked enemy warriers. Sixteenth century Peru offers a fascinating setting for this racing tale which includes a Lysistrata sequence, several picturesque battle scenes, lusty feasts and entertainments, and absolutely no philosophical impedimenta.

Lightly, almost parenthetically, sketched is the Spanish Catholic background of the spirited girl from Estremaduras; and as easily implied is the Aztec culture which built the only good road, the Royal Inca highway, along which speed Indian slaves as messengers and great caravans of conquered silver and riches. The chief characters in the book, whose georgeous villians Gonzalo Pizarro and Carbajal and the equally audacious heroes Valentin, Mexia and Aldana, may have been oversimplified. But it is great fun to follow the intriguing of Pedro de la Gasca, the resourceful priest. And our enchanting young heroine breathes life and poniard-sharp suspense into her narrative.

If you like a smooth blend of intrigue, romance and adventure, just let your eyes and your mind rest with pleasure on Bride of the Conqueror. — John Besharo.

Quarterly Roar

J. A. C. Dunn

This is our fourth attempt at an editorial. The other three are in the wastebasket. We have tried wrath, pedantics, soft soap. None ofthem sound quite right. Perhaps if we told you a story... The other day we met a student who asekd us if we had had any luck selling Carolina Quarterly subscriptions a couple of weeks ago.

We said we did poorly; that three hundred and seventy two students out of an estimated six thousand had the innate curiosity to gamble a paltry dollar and a quarter on their college literary magazine; that it was probably the word 'literary' that scared them away; that people seemed to view the concept of anything literary as something malignant that antibiotics won't touch.

Our friend replied that all this was no doubt true, but that he had a sneaking suspicion that the Quarterly had some blame coming to it too. How could we expect anyone to trouble with a subscription to a literary magaine that published material too obscure to be understood? Of course he had never read the Quarterly, but. . .

This sordid little tale seems to exemplify the general attitude toward the Quarterly. "We think it's rotten, over our heads, literary, highbrow, intellectual. We've never read it, but we still think so."

Very well, then, the Quarterly is obscure, over people's heads. Let us consider then what do people want to read?

Well, to begin with, we assume that anyone with the brains to be admitted to this University likes a story — a good story, in which things happen, and people say something, and the action gets somewhere. We think we have such a story, and it will be printed in the November issue. It's funny. It's about the difference between North Carolinians and South Carolinians.

But that's not all. Some like it hot, some like it on the serius side. We have an article now being written about student life at Oxford and Cambridge Universities which seems to indicate that the courses the British undergraduate takes are a good deal more interesting than the ones we take here in General College. The editor in charge of this article has discovered, in the course of his research, that the British college students has a method of partying which defies improvement, to say nothing of his extraordinary system of athletics.

The Quarterly is also instituting a feature called "Closeup", the first of which goes into the character and history of the Rev. Charles Jones. We are fortunate in having been able to set up our own private O. S. S. for procuring this information.

In addition to these attractions will be found perhaps a touch of humor here and there, poetry which may well be more intelligible this year than last, illustrations, and book reviews.

If this run-down of the forthcoming issue sounds too literary for you, if it makes cold chills warp your spine or that queasy feeling rise in your stomach, we suggest the Foreign Legion; it toughens the body, braces the spirit. But if that spark of curiosity is ignited in your brain, we urge you to get your subscription now in the Graham Memorial Information Office or in the Carolina Quarterly den in Graham Memorial, since stand sales will be limited. To steal a line from the Tar Heel, by all means beat the innards out of Maryland, but get a subscription to the Quarterly first.

Quote, Unquote

In a report of a meeting of the chief representatives of the United States, Britain, France and Germany in London the Associated Press said: "Dulles spelled out a thinly veiled warning against undue delays."

The veiling Mr. Dulles customarily uses in his diplomacy is thin. But, unfortunately for the United States, his threats are becoming as transparent as their veiling. — Raleigh News and Observer.

The Civil War

Ed Yoder

James Street, Chapel Hill's lively straight-talker, finds history most sparkling when it is relieved of buncombe and he proves it in his recent The Civil War, An Unvarnished Acocunt of the Late but Still Lively Hostilities. (Dial Press, $3)

What Mr. Street says in this 144-page panorama is that "Grandma's knee is a rightly place to pray, but it's a poor place to learn history." More than this, The Civil War (mind, warns Street, not "The War Between The States") is a racy, hard-hitting (to the morass of sentimentality and lame-thinking history sometimes gets its foot stuck in) and delightful argument. His argument is that while the War period had its nobility, it is not, as Sir Winston said, "The Last War Between Gentlemen." In fact, it fell not far short of general national insanity.

One thinks he detects a southern accent in Mr Street's voice. But it sounds with candor and with no-holds-barred. He says he won't honor evaluations as a renegade, biased hillbilly, poll-taxer, reactionary, facist, Communist or egghead.

His is a dim view of the war that "started off in the stars and ended in the gutter." Edmund Ruffin, a jingoist who got disgusted with Virginia's uncertain stand in the early months of the hostilities, came to Charleston and persuaded the Confederates to let him fire the first shot on Fort Sumter, started it all. He ended blowing his brains out in 1865.

Boston ("Glory to God") Corbitt, who riddled John Wilkes Boothe in a burning barn, went beserk and opened fire on the whole Kansas legislature when he later served as its sergeant-at-arms. Mr. Street reports he didn't hit anybody, luckily.

Mrs. Lincoln, who had been subject to steady dementia all along, cracked soon atfer her husband was killed.

To cap it all, a Republican Congress clapped the South in a poorhouse which Mr. Street says it just got out of since Warld War II.

The big successes of Mr. Street's Civil War are the portraits of people who are its heart. The book's sub-title declares this is "an unvarnished account." Not only that. Mr. Street must have got his sandpaper and done a job of abrasion, not just omitted varnish. Varnish or no varnish, the portraits are pleasing and sound.

Vachel Lindsay would be mortified at Abe Lincoln. He is either twiddling his thumbs and rocking on his front porch in Springfield while half the South secedes or watching from the White House through his telescope for the approach of Confederate gunboats up the Potomac. Abe could, for the sake of argument, stand a little more varnish than he gets.

Jeff Davis, Street style, is an aloof man with book-learning. But he always wanted to "take off his shoes" and wade with the boys down at the water hole.

"And," says Street, "in this weird, fantastic hour, we were led by two remarkable neurotics—Abraham Lincoln, who had a strange fear of death, and Jefferson Davis, who had a strange fear of life." But see here, he adds, Jeff did not try to get away in the disguise of one of his wife's dresses.

Street admires Stonewall Jackson, the religious zealot, "praying and killing," and "one of our country's real military geniuses."

"Useless Grant," alcoholic and insipid, "a long ways this side of brilliant," is a chronic money-borrower who "stood in awe of the rich." According to Street, it probably took the fear that Sherman was going to rob his glory to finally get Grant through the gates of Richmond. Grant, who "sometimes smoked cigars when his nerves were jankling from a hangover (c. f. Thurber's "If Grant Had Been Drinking At Appomattox") loved horses so much that he got a stolen one from Jeff Davis' own stable.

Then there was Nathaniel Bedford Forrest, uneducated and "a lord-awful speller" who was not, Mr. Street believes, guilty of his grammatically infamous "Git thar fust." He was a good soldier, but unliked because he didn't write enough memos.

Last in the march is Sherman (Sherman's Favorite Soldier) the "good-writing man" who marched to the Sea like "an elephant crossing a pea patch."

Finally, Street confesses a "Lee Complex." As a child, when he started to do something naughty, "like write dirty words on a fence or chunk at birds he shook his head . . . . God, my grandma, and Robert E. Lee were always watching me." He doesn't idolize Lee by any means: "Who wants a general for a guardian angel?

The finale is a glossary for those who still argue Civil War. The reader has to decide whether he belongs to the "The Beer Debaters" or to "The Martini and Gibson League." (You need more information ofr the latter.)

Cilo, the historical muse, (not The DTH correspondent) would more than likely smile at this offspring of his inspiration. He might even laugh out loud.

On The Town

THERE'S A HUM AND AND A ROAR AND A ZING in the air when football season comes to Chapel Hill. You sense the excitement that fills the village, and you feel like waving at the people sardined into cars which stand bumper-to-bumper along Raleigh Road and Franklin Street on a Saturday morning. Everywhere you look you see fall colors —not on the trees yet, but on the people going to the game. Bright red and yellow and orange coats and sweaters, here a Carolina blue pennant and there a flashy Coca-Cola portable ice box which a group of students is carrying down the hill toward the stadium. The work is hot and tiring, but their beer will stay cold once they get settled in their seats in the stands. The roar of the crowd and the blare of the band and the crackle of the public address system stand out over a background of thousands of human voices to make a cacophony which delights the ears and excites the adrenal glands.

The tension is gone after the final whistle blows and the electric scoreboard is erased to read zero to zero, but the excitement is still in the air. The Bell Tower clangs out such improbable tunes as "The Night that Paddy Murphy Died" as a group of young collegians mix a final drink on the terrace above the heads of all those people who think the phrase "Meet me at the Bell Tower" is an easy key-to-finding friends after the game. Dusk is rapidly approaching, the last few stragglers come up out of the woods from the stadium, and the round of Saturday night parties gets underway in the village.

Gravitte Scores Tar Heel Touchdown In Opening Minutes

GRIDIRON BRIEFS

NOTRE DAME-PURDUE

SOUTH BEND, IND., Oct. 2 (AP)—Sure-fire Len Dawson cut down the nation's No. 1 football team, Notre Dame, today with four touchdown passes good for a total of 156 yards to sharpshoot Purdue to to a stunning 27-14 upset triumph.

The lanky six-foot sophomore quarterback from Alliance, Ohio, also converted three times and keyed the Boilermakers' pass-defense that eventually smothered desperation shots by two Irish aerialists, Ralph Guglielmi and sophomore Paul Hornung.

The victory, before 58,256 screaming fans, snapped Notre Dame's undefeated string at 13 and repeated history of Purdue's 28-14 decision four years ago that ended the Irish's 39-game unbeaten streak.

The 19-year-old Dawson, who fired four touchdown tosses as Purdue blanked Missouri 31-0 last week, was with but peer today as his range-finding shots put Notre Dame in the hole 14-0 in the first 5½ minutes of the game.

He hit senior end John Kerr for an eight-yard payoff in the opening 3½ minutes and then followed with a 41-yard scoring pass play to lefthalf Rex Brock.

After Notre Dame trimmed the lead to 14-8 at halftime with a safety and Nick Raich's one-yard touchdown blast after Hornung's 61-yard run, Dawson struck again for touchdowns in the third and fourth periods.

Guglielimi's toss to end Dan Shannon was good for 42 yards at the outset of the third and set up Don Schaefer's Notre Dame touchdown from the two. Schaefer's try for point was wide, as was Hornung's in the second period.

With the score tied 14-14, the lean-lanky Dawson, built like a rodeo cowboy, rode to the rescue on a 73-yard pass payoff to Lamore Lundy.

Lundy, giant 6-7, 213-pound sophomore end from Richmond, Ind., hugged the ball on the Notre Dame 40 and lumbered into the end zone without a man in front of him.

For good measure, Dawson guided the Boilermakers on a 77-yard touchdown romp in the first four minutes of the finale. He uncorked a screen-pass to junior fullback Bill Murakowski who sped across on a play covering 34 yards.

In taking their sixth victory over Notre Dame in a 26-game series dating back to 1896, Purdue piled up 224 yards by passing and 94 by rushing. Notre Dame gained 79 and 91.

WILLIAM & MARY—PENN

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 2 (AP)—Veteran quarterback Charley Sumner, who makes a habit of long runs at Franklin Field, did the big damage as William and Mary wrecked Pennsylvania's fading victory hopes 27-7 today before a thin crowd of 17,112.

Sumner, from Salem, Va., put the touch to the Indians' victory fire with a 93-yard touchdown sprint that put the game out of Penn's reach. It was Sumner's second touchdown of the game and set off a 14-point second period.

Penn finally found a scoring punch in the third period as Walt Hynoski sprinted 30 yards around end for the first TD by the Red and Blue since Steve Sebo became coach this year.

The big difference between the teams was Sumner and a slashing W & M line that beat Penn to the punch on offense and defense. It was three years ago on this same field that Sumner first showed his heels to the Penns, lugging a kickoff return 89 yards for a score that helped the Southerners upset Penn 20-12.

Wolfpack Devours Tar Heels In Cross-Country Meet, 26-30

By BOB DILLARD

The N. C. State Wolfpack proved too much for the Carolina Cross-Country team yesterday, despite Carolina's first places in both meets, as they swept the varsity and freshman meets by scores of 26-30 and 25-32, respectively.

As the varsity loped into view for the second turn around Navy Field, State's Dave Miller held a commanding lead over Jim Beatty, Carolina's closest man. But as the runners swept down the hill and on to the Fetzer Field track, only a few feet of space separated the red and blue jerseys. Beatty passed Miller in the final 250 yards to rack up first place for the Tar Heels in the time of 20:30.

State's Miller finished second in 20:32, followed by Bob Barden of Carolina, and Jim Barbee and Steve Gooding of State, to round out the first five.

Richard Regbee romped home 200 yards ahead of his nearest State competitor to take first place for the Baby Tar Heels in the time of 11:37:5. State took an early lead in the race, and kept it through the first turn into the woods, but as the runners appeared over the hill for the final leg, Rigbee sped out of the woods all by himself to win. State's Shea finished second, followed by Maurice Barbour, another State man.

Carolina's Tar Heels showed well against the Conference champion State Wolfpack. Jim Beatty ran well, as did Bob Barden, but the Wolfpack proved too much in the long run, placing too many men in the first eleven, to come through with the victory.

Dean, Beard Lead VPI To Win Over Clemson

CLEMSON, S. C., Oct. 2—(UP)—Virginia Tech's speedy backs rushed over three touchdowns in the first two periods here today to defeat Clemson 18-7 in an inter-conference football game before 14,000.

It was the third straight victory for Southern Conference Virginia Tech over an Atlantic Coast Conference team. Previous victories were over Wake Forest and North Carolina State.

Quarterback Johnny Dean and right halfback Dickie Beard were Tech's big guns. Beard, from Cumberland, Md., tallied first on an 18-yard romp through the Clemson middle less than five minutes after the opening whistle.

JACK MAULTSBY

. . . hurt in Carolina-Tulane tiff

Last Quarter Touchdown

Carolina quickly scored with little trouble with only three minutes gone in the ball game. Kirkman recovered a Tulane fumble on the Green Wave 24 yard line to set the score up, and Connie Gravitte scored three plays later.

Fullback Don Klochak crashed for yardage, then left half Larry Parker made a first down on the 14. From there Newman ran the option to the left, pitching out to Gravitte, who scored untouched. Klochak converted to make it 7-0.

Carolina dominated the game in the first quarter.

The line opened gaping holes in the Green Wave's defenses, and it was little trouble for the Tar Heel backs to pick up great yardage. The option to the left was especially successful with Gravitte carrying.

The Tar Heels weren't able to stage a sustained drive after the first score despite the fact that they kept the ball most of the period.

Carolina gained 90 yards rushing in the first quarter. Tulane 30, but two interceptions of Newman passes nipped any possible scoring drives.

Carolina coach George Barclay didn't make any substitutions in the first quarter, but put a whole new team in at the beginning of the second period. Len (Teedee) Bullock quarterbacked the second team, with Ken Keller playing left halfback.

The Carolina second team wasn't quite as effective as the first, the main difference being in the blocking and the crispness of the plays. The first team came back into the game with about six minutes in the half, and began moving the ball again with Klochak's blocking leading the way.

The first team marched goalward from the moment it got the ball, and made it to the Tulane eight in less than two minutes. The drive started on the Carolina 45. Left half Larry Parker fumbled on the six, Tulane guard Tony Sardisco recovering to halt the Tar Heels.

The Green Wave could do little in the first half picking up only three first downs. Two fumbles proved costly, one setting up the Carolina score and another giving the Tar Heels the ball deep in Tulane territory.

Tulane's second fumble came immediately after the kickoff following Carolina's touchdown, with Kirkman once more recovering, this time on the Tulane 40. Kirkman played an outstanding game, both offensively and defensively.

Carolina couldn't get moving after the second fumble and had to punt, putting the ball on the Tulane 20. The Green Wave reached Carolina territory only once in first half. A five-yard penetration in the middle of the first period.

Carolina got its first break in the third quarter when halfback Tommy Warner fumbled on the Tulane 31 and Kirkman recovered for hte Tar Heels. Fine running by Parker and Gravitte gave the Tar Heels a first down on the 19. Newman's handling of the option play was otustanding.

Newman crashed tackle to the 12 but two incomplete passes and a no gain gave the ball to Tulane to quench the threat. The Green Wave came alive after taking the ball, and with a long breakaway run by right half Otis Gilmore leading the way, Tulane marched to the 50.

A fumbled pitchout threw Tulane back to the 40 and stopped the drive with Carolina receiving a punt on its 25.

The third quarter ended with a quick kick by Tulane's Ronnie Quillian who boomed the ball 65 yards to the Carolina 15. From there, Ken Keller made his first real gain by picking a small hole, putting on a burst of speed, and racing to the 45-yard line. After a 10-yard pass from Bullock to end Norman Lane the offense bogged down, and a 12-yard punt by Bullock gave Tulane the ball on its own 42.

The Green Wave threatened from there, substitute Fred Wilcox throwing two consecutive screen passes that carried down to the Carolina 20. Then Halfback Willie Hof took a handoff and raced to the seven before Bill Koman could bring him down. Fullback Bob Saia, a workhorse all day for the Wave, plunged to the four and then the one-yard line.

Saia pounded again, this time to the one-foot line, and Tackle Jack Maultsby of Carolina was helped off the field. On the last try Wilcox fumbled the ball, and the Tar Heel line recovered at scrimmage.

A beautiful 49 yard punt by halfback Larry Parker couldn't get Carolina out of the hole when Wilcox ran the ball back to the 16-yard line of Carolina, and Tulane was knocking again.

Wilcox rolled out to the left on second down and kept going until Koman, a defensive standout, brought him down on the five, a first down for the Green Wave.

On the first play sophomore tackle Johnny Jones of Carolina broke through and hit Wilcox on the 15, and with Kirkman's help, brought him down. Saia made the yardage up on a draw play through the middle to the six. On third down Wilcox faded and hit end Harry Duvigneaud in the end zone for the score. Tackle Emmett Zelenka coverted to tie the score at 7-7 with five minutes left in the ball game.

Carolina took to the air trying for the score but was stymied and punted to the Tulane 16. A 55-yard punt by Quillian put the Tar Heels back on their 28. Bullock began passing after Gravitte ran to the 50. On third down Bullock handed off to Gravitte who faded and threw the ball far downfield. Fullback Willie Harrison intercepted the ball for Tulane and ran back to the Wave 45.

On Tulane's first play Larry McMullen, outstanding at fullback for Carolina, intercepted a Wilcox pass on the Carolina 23, but time was running out.

Giants Beat Indians For Baseball Title

Cleveland Falls By 7-4 Margin

Antonelli Kills Rally In Big Relief Role

CLEVELAND, Oct. 2 (AP)—The New York Giants weathered a late comeback by the Cleveland Indians to win a wild fourth game today, 7-4, and become the first National League team in 40 years to score a four-game sweep in the World Series.

Johnny Antonelli, young Giant lefty who won the second game, came into the game in the eighth to put out the Cleveland fire with some superb relief pitching.

Underdogs at the start of the season-end classic, the Giants scored seven runs through the first five innings and seemed headed for an easy triumph until the Indians suddenly came to life — but too late — in the game's final stages.

The Clevelanders, with a crowd of 78,102 in the huge Municipal Stadium, scored three runs in the fifth inning on pinch-hitter Hank Majeski's home run over the temporary barrier in left field and added another in the seventh when they chased starter Don Liddle with three singles.

With two men on base and the tying run at bat, Hoyt Wilhelm, the Giant's relief ace, came to the mound with two out in the seventh and forced pinch-hitter Dave Pope to hit weakly to the mound.

No Question In My Mind; I Knew We Had It—Dark

CLEVELAND, Oct. 2 (AP)—"There never was any question in my mind that we'd win the world championship, it was something you can't put your finger on, but you just know."

Alvin Dark, star shortshop and captain of the Giants, was perhaps the calmest of the new world champions as he talked about the club that astounded the baseball world by vanquishing the record-setting Cleveland Indians in four straight World Series games.

"Don't be too hard on the Indians," Dark said. "They're a fine ball club. It's just that we had a club that simply wouldn't be beaten I doubt if there ever was a club that could have beaten us in this series. Even if we had lost the first two games in New York, we'd still have won."

"Thats the kind of club we had all year, great pitching, find defense and timely hitting. We make a few runs, save a few and then hold them off with good pitching."

Echoing Manager Leo Durocher's words, Dark hailed the Giants' effort as a team triumph going down the line crediting each player with having an important hand in the series as well as the pennant victory.

"Willie Mays and Dusty Rhodes were great," he said. "Willie fielded in his old sensational style and Rhodes came through with timely clutch hitting. Hank Thompson played the greatest all year. He and Don Mueller were in practically every rally.

completely insignificant with the exception of an excellent performance by the crack Naval Air Cadet drill team which made the trip from the Pensacola training Command expressly for this game. The Tulane band did a 5-minute show which consisted mainly of an attempt to show the visitors the finer points of the mambo.

The second half started slowly and got slower. The Greenies of Tulane began to show considerably more spirit and the Tar Heels soon found themselves in trouble. The small contingent of Carolina supporters began to feel slightly uneasy as Tulane drove for more yardage than Tar Heel territory could stand. The final score tells the remainder of the story.

It took less than five minutes for the crowd to leave the Stadium, and I'm still sitting here trying to get my ancient typewriter to operate efficiently enough to at least express the wondering sensation which is the combination fo spending a weekend in New Orleans and getting a chance to root for Carolina. This game is already forgotten by many of the people who saw it and the Sugar Bowl shows no signs of ever having seen Carolina. I can see New Orleans lovely skyline from here and I know that a short time from now I'll be among those buildings looking for Pat O'Brien's where I can slake my thirst and sing Carolina songs, and be generally obnoxious to everyone. . . .

Blue Devils Edge By Vols, 7-6

Wake Forest Clubs State, 26-0

Nelson's Placement Is Winning Margin

DURHAM, N. C., Oct. 2—(AP)—The accurate toe of junior guard Jim Nelson was the difference today as Duke's highly-favored Blue Devils slipped past Tennessee, 7-6. Duke, ranked seventh nationally after its opening game rout of Pennsylvania, scored in the final minute of the first period on a 10-yard end sweep by halfback Bob Pascal.

Pennsylvania marched the second half kickoff 91 yards in seven plays, fullback Tom Tracy covering the last 28 yards. Tracy's conversion attempt was low and wide, and that was the ball game.

Sharing hero honors for Duke was sophomore quarterback Sonny Jurgensen. He came off the bench to toss the pitchout whicch Pascal carried over for the score and twice in the final period Tennessee ventures into Duke territory were stopped by Jurgensen pass interceptions.

A crowd of 30,000 watched in 90-degree weather as Duke beat Tennessee for the third year in succession to even their series at ight victories apiece with two ties.

A fumble shortly after the kickoff gave Tennessee the ball on Duke's 42, and the Volunteers marched to the Duke 20 before they were stopped. Shortly afterward Duke started its 88-yard touchdown drive.

Pascar's 64 yards in 13 carries, and 53 yards in seven attempts by sophomore halfback Bunny Blaney, were tops for Duke.

Blocked Punts Lead Deacs To ACC Win

WAKE FOREST, N.C., Oct. 2 (AP) — Wake Forest College turned two blocked punts into touchdowns and shook loose halfback Bill Barnes on a 48-yard touchdown run as it defeated North Carolina State, 26-0, today in an Atlantic Coast Conference game.

Wake Forest, bouncing back from last week's 32-0 trouncing by Virginia Tech, showed tremendous power in the second half, rolling to three touchdowns after holding a 6-0 halftime lead.

A crowd of 8,000 saw Wake Forest score early in the second period. End Ed Stowers of Norfolk, Va., blocked a punt by John Zubaty on the Wolfpack 25 and fullback Charles Toping grabbed it on the 11 and ran it over.

The Demon Deacons scored again early in the second half, driving 46 yards with Burt Harrison going over from the two. A blocked punt set up another touchdown.

Stowers and Bob Bartholomew collaborated in blocking Zubaty's punt, Bartholomew recovering on the State 45 and running it back to the 25.

"Don't Shoot!"

From recent Student Council minutes:

CHAIRMAN: Next we come to the problem of the appalling dressing-habits of our freshman. We have noted such unorthodox attire as long-point collars, garishly colored shirts, some actually made of dotted swiss!

SCH. OF MUSIC REP.: Definitely not in harmony with our standards.

JOURNALISM REP.: To corn a phrase, they ain't on the ball team.

SCH. OF LOGIC REP.: Why not shoot 'em?

MED. SCHOOL REP.: Great idea! I'll work up a "Good Taste" serum, refined from some Van Heusen Oxfordian shirts. We'll inoculate 'em all!

PHILOSOPHY REP.: Who cares!

LAW SCHOOL REP.: (Happily) Yeah, inoculate 'em. Then maybe some of 'em will get sick, and I . . .

JOURNALISM REP.: Now let's don't go all around Red Robin Hood's barn . . . what we need is a campaign to tell 'em about the Oxfordian . . . the silky, smooth oxford shirts with the smart, modern collar styles.

BUS. ADM. REP.: And don't forget . . . fine long-staple cotton, woven tighter to last longer . . . at the amazing price (thanks to excellent production facilities) of only $4.50.

JOURNALISM REP.: I think we got the gem of an idea here somewhere . . . but first off the bag, we gotta . . .

MED. SCHOOL REP.: Inoculate 'em.

LOGIC REP.: Yeah, shoot 'em.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor of mass inoculation say Aye. (MOTION CARRIES.)

JOURNALISM REP.: Maybe some of 'em already wear Van Heusen Oxfordians. Don't shoot 'til you see the whites of their shirts . . .

ART SCHOOL REP.: . . . and the colors! Don't forget Oxfordians come in the smartest colors this side of a Bonnard or a Klee.

PHILOSOPHY REP.: (eating Tootsie-roll) Who cares!

— Katherine Carmichael —

Her arrival at Carolina was in September of 1946, following a summer teaching appointment at the University of Wisconsin.

Commenting upon her work as Dean of Women and the work of her office, Dean Carmichael said recently, "Through this office we minister to the whole student. We are interested in women students here as women more than students. We leave the student part to the professors."

To believe in one's work is choosing a profession is Dean the most important factor in Carmichael's belief. She feels that if one is earnest and sincere in working with young women either in personnel work or in the classroom, the ideas that one entertains will go down to later generations. Holding this belief, Dean Carmichael found the work here at Carolina an agreeable challenge in 1946, and she still finds it thus. She feels that in her duties here she has found theh perfect job.

The University's Coutribution

"As a southern woman I have always felt that the contribution of this university to the entire south is a rewarding and constructive contribution," said Dean Carmichael. As to the coeds of Carolina, she fee lsthat "this is a unique organization for women in that as a part of a state university we carefully select our women students and bring them here chiefly in their junior year. The women here have the problems of being graduated by a college; they do not have the problems of being matriculated by a college for the first time. The girls here are intelligent, purposeful, fine young women."

Dean Carmichael feels that although it is sometimes thought that a state university has very little counseling service for its women students, the services of full-time dirmitory hostesses, part-time graduate councilors and her office are always available. She said students here may call upon the services of Miss Irma Eichhorn, Miss Lila Ponder, Miss Isabelle MacLeod and herself at any time.

Beach Speaks On Internal College Life

Some 35 UNC students gathered at Camp New Hope Friday night at an interdenominational conference to hear Dr. Waldo Beach speak on the internal life of a university.

Beach, professor of Christian Ethics at Duke University Divinity School, listed three rifts which exist that between academic and practical life; the rift in the fragmentation of mental life; and the separation of worship and faith from work.

"In the academic realm of a university, we take nothing on faith, whereas in the religious realm, everything is based on faiht," the noted educator told the student group.

He listed several of the faiths which are common to college campuses today, such as scientism, humanism, capitalism, sensualism, and conformity.

"We sometimes confuse our real religion with our official religion", said Beach," Christianity s our offcial religion, but our real religion if often sensualsm or 'capitalism."

Cat Girl's Missing From Bourbon St.

By JACK STILWELL

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Oct. 3.—"Be sure to see the Cat Girl," said the boss when he gave me my expense check, "and find out if those bartenders remember any parties thrown by Carolina people last time they were down here."

The Cat Girl isn't in town and there isn't a bartender who realizes that Carolina was ever here. But it doesn't make any difference. This town doesn't need the Cat Girl or memories of Carolina people. I will admit the news that Lily Christine is currently adding her warmth to the hot sands of Las Vegas was a severe blow at first, but one rip through Bourbon Street blotted out any regrets I might have been thinking about holding.

She's Not There

. . . Also Cat Girl
MISS LILY CHRISTINE

After haggling with my cabbie in front of the famous door, I adjusted my imported super-speed Zeiss candid complete with automatic rangefinder and windshield-wipers, and shuffled through the door to a definitive rendition of the Muskat Ramble. Using my tourist permit to best advantage, I forced my way to the bar just in time to prevent Tom Peacock from being completely anesthesized by the concoctions of the bartender and the music of Ray Zincowski, a prominent native of New Orleans' exclusive Irish quarter.

I hocked my camera to provide funds for the remainder of the evening's entertainment. In Pat O'Brien's which, by the way, has probably never seen an Irishman, we ran into a caterwauling crowd of Carolina alumni cheering enthusiastically and being received with bored stares from the two other occupants of the place.

Bucky Barkley and Earl Johnson, fresh from the Navy's Supply Corps School in Athens, Ga., were among the more coherent members of the party. Earl was still quite bitter, however. He had come to Bourbon Street with the intention of getting a snoot-full, but soon found out that the size of his snoot made the cost of such an operation prohibitive, at least on an Ensign's pay.

By this time, I had forgotten that football or Carolina ever existed. All that interested me was Nu Awlins (if you're from Carolina), or New Orleans (if you're a native), or Neworleans (if you're a radio announcer).

It was 5 o'clock and the dawn came and destroyed the illusory veil of Bourbon Street. The show girls began to lose their considerably voluptuous beauty, becoming painted ladies once again, and the bartenders began to lose their geniality and to acquire a slightly cynical air. Bon vivant that I am, however, these things I expected and took in my faltering stride. I strolled back to my hotel the St. Charles which is an archeologist's dream. The hotel is 117 years old, and the management is obviously proud of the fact, since they make no effort to disguise it.

On the way back, I suddenly remembered that I had been in town for some 20 hours without once getting a glimpse of the well-known streetcar. Forgetting my earlier experiences, I hailed a hack and set out for Desire Street and Elysian Fields Avenue. This time the cabbie was cooperative and spoke English instead of tourist creolese.

I was due for another disappointment. The streetcar has been replaced by a bus named Desire. Now I'm glad I hocked my camera. Returning to my 18th century drawing room, I stood in front of my northwest exposure window and contemplated the fascinating skyline which merges the old and the new with disarming disregard for style.

Trainer Fitz Lutz Dies Here

By BERNIE WEISS

Fitzgerald "Fitz" Lutz, well-liked head trainer of the Carolina foobatll team, died yesterday afternoon of a heart attack. He was 44 years old.

Lutz was taken ill yesterday morning. He was moved immediately to the University Infirmary but grew progressively worse and succumbed at approximately 4:30 p. m.

The attending physician was E. McG. Hedgpeth.

The news of Lutz death was received with bowed heads and tears on the football practice field where Carolina was drilling for Saturday's encounter with Georgia. Line Coach Marvin Bass broke down and cried. The whole team was upset.

University Party

The University Party will hold its third meeting of the year tonight at 7:30 in the Roland Parker Lounges of Graham Memorial.

All students interested in working with the party or any phase of student government are invited to attend, according to Chairman Rueben Leonard. Members of the party will be introduced and action for the coming election will be discussed.

After the meeting there will be a "get to know each other" session during which refreshments will be served. The party officers for this semester are, in addition to Leonard, Claude Pope, vice chairman; Jackie Steed, secretary, and Jim Exum, treasurer.

Two UNC Negro Students Living In Segregated Steele Dorm Rooms

AN EMPTY ROOM IN STEELE DORMITORY
. . . and there are others, while men live three in a room

Search Can Find No Evidence Of Law Requiring Separation

By DICK CREED

While students in nine dormitories live three in a room, two students occupy private rooms in one section of Steele dorm, and the two other rooms in that section remain empty.

The two students are Negro graduate students.

President Gordon Gray, contacted yesterday after Chancellor Robert B. House refused to comment on the why' of the situation, said, "i just don't remember. I doubt that the Board of Trustees made the decision" to set aside space for Negro residents.

Continued Gray, "I'm sure that whatever happened came out of conferences with various University officials when the first Negro student entered the University two or three years ago." (The first Negro student was accepted into the Law School in June, 1951.)

House said yesterday that he could "not comment in advance of the State ruling" and that comments on the matter would have to come from the President's office or from the Board of Trustees.

"Don't involve me in the discussion," said House. He did not explain what he meant by "state's ruling."

Arch Allen, secretary of the Board of Trustees, said in Raleigh yesterday that he did not know of any state statue or ruling by the Board of Trustees requiring separate living quarters or toilet facilities for Negro and white students.

Similarly, Ed Rankin, secretary to Gov. William B. Umstead, said he knew of no such statutes.

Both said there were statutes requiring separate facilities in bus stations, airports, eating establishments and other public places. (Negro students here use the Lenoir Hall cafeteria.)

When the Board of Trustees acted on April 4, 1951, to allow Negro students to enter graduate and professional schools here, no action was taken on the question of where they may live on campus.

Housing Officer James E. Wadsworth said last week that the section in Steele was reserved for Negroes last fall even though there was a white waiting list and no applications for rooms had been received from Negro students.

Wadsworth would not say where his directions in reserving the rooms came from. About the Negro students he said, "They have gotten along very well with no problems. They seem to be happy, quiet members of the student body."

He said that during the past year "several students" had approached him for permission to move into the vacant rooms in the Negro section, but that he had directions to reserve the rooms for Negroes only.

Roy Holsten, of the office of the Dean of Student Affairs, said yesterday he thought Steele Dormitory was chosen to house Negroes because it was arranged in four-room blocks with a bathroom in each block, instead of open halls running the length of the building, as the dorms in the lower quad are arranged.

He said also that Steele's prox-

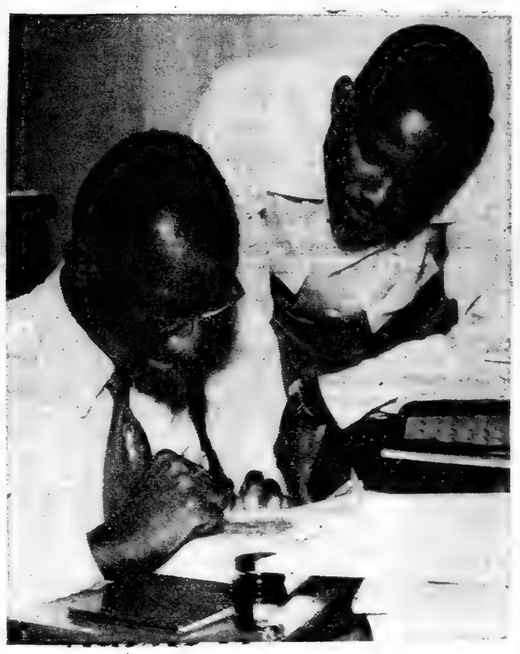
This Old House Houses Three Floors Of 'Unique Operations'

By BOBBIE ZWAHLEN

Have you ever wondered what it would be like to be the center of most of the extra curricular activities—to be visited by famous celebrities day in and day out? There is someone (or should I say something) on the campus that is.

For the time being let's refer to the brick, pillared Graham Memorial Building as a she (no disrespect to the masculine set.)



Miss GM houses all sorts of things. Within her walls, you'll find three floors of unique operations.

In her basement, you can find a wonderful place to dance, good music and the busy staff of the Yackety-Yack. Of course, if you like to shoot pool or need a coke, she can oblige that need, too. The ping pong tables are another popular place (now moved to the terrace during the heat wave).

If you have finally danced your date out, you might drag her up to the first floor and relax in one of those "sleep good" chairs in the main lounge; or, you can always strike up a bridge game by checking out a deck of cards from the information desk. Like a sandwich, a good hot cup of coffee and the world series, she can meet your needs there, too. I can see where this female is quite popular with the males.

Now this gal is usually very neat and well organized until you take your life in your hands and visit the third floor. Here is a mixture of everything from clicking of typewriters to strains of Chopin floating through the halls. The Daily Tar Heel occupies a good portion of these halls where its staff is always hard at work (naturally) and the GMAB which supervises the big job of keeping Miss GM trim.

I say again, is it any wonder that Miss GM gets my vote as the number one co-ed on the campus?

JAMES SLADE, LEFT, AND ROMALLUS MURPHY
. . . a future doctor and a future lawyer . . .

Segregation Didn't Worry Two Negroes

Romallus Murphy and James Slade, who live in the third floor south section of Steele Dormitory with two empty rooms as neighbors, had different opinions as to how Carolina would receive them before they came here.

Murphy thought it was "just a coincidence" when he found that Slade would live in the room across the hall from him. "I haven't had any explanation from the administration." he said.

"I started to ask once, but I never did," he added.

Slade said "I didn't give segregation a thought. I was thinking about all the big assignments we'd have in med school."

Murphy transferred from Howard University in Washington, D. C., to Carolina this fall. He is a second year law student.

Slade transferred from A. & T. College in Greensboro last fall. He is a second year medical student.

Said Slade, "It has been my experience that you seldom run into anything in the South where things are not this way." He said that the Medical School faculty is "tops." "I can't find any discrimination or prejudice at all," he said.

News Staff Meets

The news staff of The Daily Tar Heel will meet this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The meeting will be brief.

Staffers will meet in the newsroom.

World Of Science Will Gather Here

Science Fair Starts Here Next Week

The Regional Science Fair Work Conference will be held at UNC Friday and Saturday, Oct. 15-16. Representatives from the worlds of science, industry and education will lead some 100 teachers from three Southern States in the conference.

Science teachers from North and South Carolina and Virginia will participate in the workshop, which will be the first step toward holding fairs in their respective areas next spring.

Conference participants will learn how to advise their pupils on preparation of exhibits, as well as how to organize and promote a science fair.

Conference co-chairmen Dr. Arthur Roe, UNC Chemistry Department head, and Dewey E. Large, field representative, Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies, have announced the completed program of addresses, panel discussions and work sessions.

The conference was arranged by the University in cooperation with the North Carolina Academy of Science and the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies.

Among outstanding speakers slated to appear are Dr. Ralph T. Overman, chairman, Oak Ridge Special Training Division; Keith Johnson, science supervisor, District of Columbia Public Schools, and Henry A. Shannon, Raleigh, adviser in science and mathematics, N. C, State Department of Public Instruction.

All three will deliver addresses at the opening Friday morning sessions. Chancellor Robert B. House will welcome delegates to the University.

Among authorities who will lead the numerous panel discussions will be Charles G. Wilder, chairman, Oak Ridge Exhibits Division. Representing industry will be Dr. Edward Kane, director of research, Du Pont Laboratories, Kinston, who will deliver an after-dinner address on "Industry Looks at the Teaching of Science."

In announcing the program, the co-chairmen noted the disturbing decrease in numbers of young people entering scientific careers in a time when the need for scientists is ever rising. "Science fairs are a powerful stimulus to embark on such careers," they said, noting that more than 13,000 students competed in such events last year in the nation.

In North Carolina science fairs will be held in six districts, covering the entire state, in early April. District winners will compete at a State Science Fair at Duke University April 22-23 for trips to the National Fair in Cleveland, Ohio, in mid-May.

Similar schedules will be followed in South Carolina and Virginia. Conference participants will learn how to advise their pupils on preparation of exhibits, as well as how to organize and promote a science fair.

Daily Tar Heel Editor Names Babson To Top Sports Office

Daily Tar Heel Editor Charles Kuralt yesterday appointed Fred Babson sports editor of the campus paper.

Babson's appointment followed close on the heels of veteran Tom Peacock's resignation as head sports scribe. Peacock had served as sports editor since the spring quarter of 1953. He was an independent candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel in last spring's elections.

A native of North Carolina, Babson hails from Wilmington. He attended New Hanover High Schcool, from which he was graduated in 1948. Being sports editor of both his high school paper and The Wilmington Morning Star and also writing sports for the Wilmington Post has given Fred much experience in this field.

SP Accepts 'Wolf Report' In Long Evening Session

By JACKIE GOODMAN

Student Party, in a meeting last night, voted everwhelmingly to accept the "Wolf Report," a nine-point recommendation that "no action be taken by the SP" in the current Daily Tar Heel-InterFraternity Council secrecy dispute.

Some of the main points brought out in the report were that the matter was not important enough for the SP to take action, that the parties most concerned were not interested enough and that the issue is not freedom of the press. but, "who is to define freedom of the press?"

The report was presented by Charlie Wolf, chairman of the committee studying secrecy in the IFC.

Daily Tar Heel reporters were barred from a recent InterFraternity Council executive session.

Main points of the committee's findings were summed up by Chairman Wolf:

"The issue is not important.

"The parties most concerned" (The Daily Tar Heel and the Inter-Fraternity Council) "apparently are not sufficiently interested in the issue to pursue it further.

"The issue is not freedom of the press, but who is to define freedom of the press?

"There is nothing in the constitution of the student body depriving the IFC or any other organization of the right of calling executive sessions.

"The situation which has brought this matter to the attention of the SP has existed for a number of years and up until this fall, has never been considered a diminution of freedom of the press, and now only by The Daily Tar Heel.

"The editor of The Daily Tar Heel has stated that executive ses-

The Duke Invasion

They are everywhere. You can't escape them.

They infiltrate our village under cover of dark, creeping down Franklin Street from the east. They are indentifiable by the circular, white stickers on their automobile windshields, by their peculiar saunter and their detached air.

They step from their late model cars and head for the Rathskellar. (Their dates invariably remark, "What a quaint place," upon entering.) Once inside, they settle down for the night; it is useless to wait for them to leave so that you may sit down. If they do leave, it is to fill up some other establishment, such as the theaters or the Rendezvous Room.

They are hostile and formidable. If they were friendly, it would be different. Instead, they group together, making snide remarks about our town and its citizens. But they keep coming back.

Chapel Hill is not a place of tradlion antd beauty to them: it is a playground, an escape from the Gothic severity of West Durham. They are a barbarous and predatory tribe.

We're for a roadblock out on the Durham Road if that's what it takes to keep their wandering numbers from our door.

Babson In For Peacock

The Daily Tar Heel today loses Sports Editor Tom Peacock to the Law School. In three years on this newspaper, he has probably turned out more copy, and more readable copy, than any one of us. It is universally accepted among staff members, past and present, that he has been the best sports editor The Daily Tar Heel has ever had. That we will miss him and his work goes without saying; we have reason to believe his byline will be seen from time to time over feature stories that he will write between briefs.

In Tom Peacock's place, we welcome another competent sports man, Fred Babson, whose work you may peruse for the rest of the year on page three.

Persephone In Y Court

An early Spanish visitor to our state's fair coasts found the redmen smoking a "weede or plante' which he described as giving forth "a fowle stinkeing smoak. . . . The smoak cometh out again by their mouth and nostryls in such wyse that you mighte thinke them devils out of helle instead of mortyl men."

Although we have yet to see one, we are resigned to the idea that a pipe-smoking coed is destined in the course of time to appear with all of the attendant paraphernalia. According to a writer in the Greensboro Daily News, "the ladies' pipes are flimsy little artifacts, sometimes coated with white enamel and frequently set with rhinestones." What is more, "there are available to the female pipe enthusiast tiny, elaborately embroidered silken tobacco pouches."

That amusing description set us to pondering on the evolution of the art of smoking. Now, instead of the men the shocked Spaniard saw that looked more like devils than mortal men, we shall have a clique of daring campus Persephones — blowing the "foul stinkeing smoak" from their nostrils and looking more like nymphs from Hades than mortal coeds

As our contemporary editorial writer said, "to meditate upon the future is to sudder."

A Three-Ring Circus For Contour Minds

Louis Kraar

THE TELEVISION lounge of Graham Memorial vibrated with somewhat of a three-ring circus air in the late, sunny Saturday afternoon.

Across the wide video screen ran the teams of one of the big college football games. The world series cut through in audible (though not visual) tones from a radio. And the watchers and listeners talked about a third event, the Carolina game.

I settled into one of those modern chairs that has more curves than the average coed and wondered (in between looking at the game on TV, listening to the series and talking about the Carolina game) how much more we will be able to divide our attention.

AS MY LIMBS explored the contours of the modern chair, I thought how all of us in the vibrant room were caught up in the series, football and the approaching Congressional elections. And although these are all part of the excitement of the season, this army of competitive interests seemed almost overwhelming.

I quit wondering about it in a minute. There was little time to wonder with Carolina's score tied and five minutes to go.

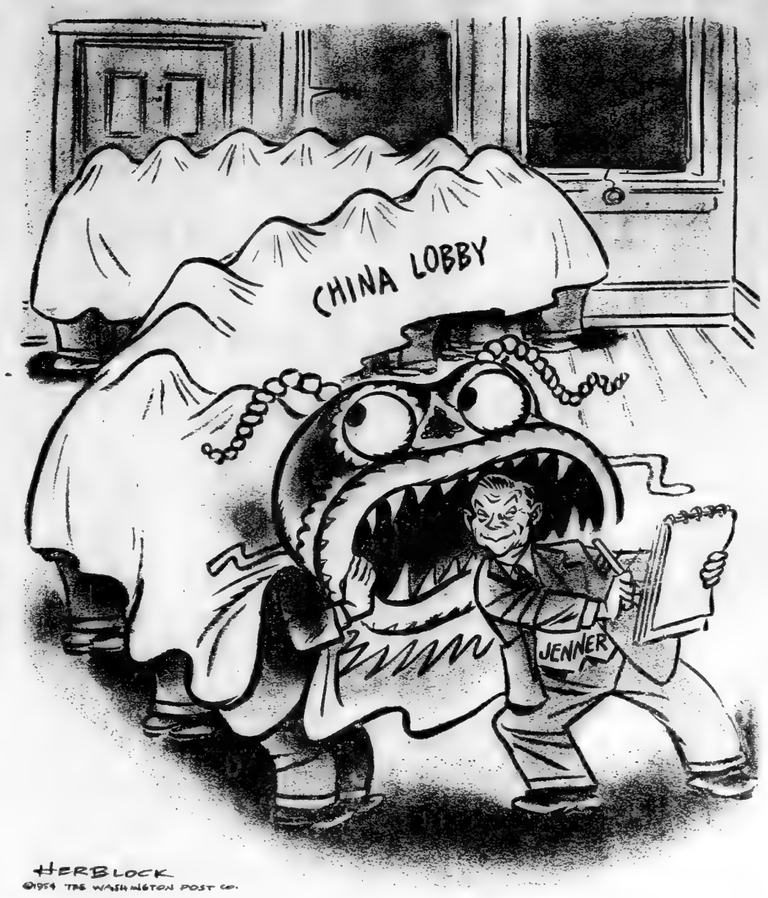
LATER I came across something written by a Carolina alumnus, an Asheville boy named Thomas Wolfe. And of this season of sports and politics, he once wrote:

"It was at just that season of the year when the two events which are dear to the speculations of the American had absorbed the public interest. These events were baseball and politics, and at that moment both were thrillingly imminent. . . .



"Both events gave the average American a thrill of pleasurable anticipation: his approach to both were essentially the same. It was the desire of a man to see a good show, to take sides vigorously in an exciting contest—to be amused, involved as an interested spectator is involved, but not to be too deeply troubled or concerned by the result."

PERHAPS WE'RE more concerned or deeply troubled by the result of the series, elections or Carolina game than Wolfe though. But if we are, I think it's because we don't want to leave time to be concerned about the H-bomb, lung cancer, the future of democracy, or last year's girl friend.

I'm not sure though because, after all, the Giants did win the series, and Carolina's game was tied. I really haven't had time to think about those other things. What with this being a good year for the Democrats in Congress and the Georgia game coming up this week, who's got time to worry about anything else?

Inside Dope

Bolivian Road Opened

Drew Pearson

CHOCHABAMBA, Bolivia. — This is the story of two loans—One was made 26 years ago and helped contribute to the worst in Latin-American history, the other was made ten years ago and is helping contribute to the battle against Communism and toward the peaceful integration of Latin America.

The first loan will never be paid back. The second is already being paid back.

Here is the story of loan no. 1. It was negotiated by Dillon, Read & Co. with the Bolivian government in 1928 for $23,000,000, a transaction from which the Bolivian Minister of Finance got a good, healthy commission.

It is doubtful if many people in Bolivia knew anything about the loan or what it was to be used for, but $5,000,000 was immediately paid to Vickers Ltd. of London for arms and ammunition. A part of this sum was also used to pay Hans Kundt of Germany to train the Bolivian Army and to pay Ernst Roehm, who later became famous as the organizer of Hitler's elite SS Corps.

As a result, the first SS Corps was organized in Bolivia and shortly thereafter Bolivia opened an attack on its neighbor, Paraguay, for possession of the jungle prairie land called the Chaco.

U. S. Tries To Stop War

Charles Evans Hughes and Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg, both men of prestige and distinction, threw all their weight into diplomatic efforts to stop that war. I was a young reporter covering the State Department at that time, and I watched them as they worked day and night. Later Henry L Stimson, another distinguished Secretary of State, did the same —all failed.

Bolivia had the army thanks to the Wall Street loan, and the Chaco War continued until 1935 when both sides were exhausted. The loan, as previously noted, has never been paid back. It never will be nor will the lives of countless soldiers whose graves dot the Chaco.

Loan no. 2 totals $28,000,000 and had its inception in 1942 when Sumner Welles, then Undersecretary of State, conceived the idea of building a highway from the lowlands of Bolivia in the Amazon Basin to the Upland Plateau, two miles above sea level.

Tribute To U. S. Aid

The Incas had dreamt of such a road, so had the Spanish Conquistadores. They saw the importance of making Bolivia a united nation rather than one geographically divided. But it remained for an American diplomat, Sumner Welles, to give it the first push and for an American construction firm, Macco-Panpacific, to build it.

Last week at Santa Cruz, a little town older than New York but with 30,000 people compared with New York's 9,000,000, President Paz Estenssoro inaugurated that 300-mile stretch of mountain highway.

I stood in the rain watching the ceremony. Beside me stood Richard Thompson, head of the construction company that completed the work. Near the President was Merwin Bohan, the commercial attache whom Welles sent to Bolivia to plan for the highway.

In the crowd also stood tall, gaunt, taciturn Benjamin Cottrell of Richmond, Va., engineer of the U. S. Public Roads Service who surveyed the route. Loathe to talk about his work, Cottrell had walked every mile of the 311-mile route, lived in tents for five years beside it.

Gerald Rinehart, former assistant chief engineer of the Maryland State Roads Commission, stood in the rain outside, bundled in two layers of raincoats. He had carried out CCottrell's surveys. Also U. S. Ambassador Edward S. Sparks, and several hundred Indians.

Lynn Stambaugh, whom Truman took out of the sometimes-isolationist prairies of North Dakota to put on the export-import bank, made a speech. It was brief, simple and appropriate. He told how the export-import bank was trying to use American dollars to build for peace in Latin-America. He did not mention that earlier American loan that built for war, but Foreign Minister Guevara Arze standing in the crowd had been a sergeant in the Chaco War and so had President Paz. They remembered it.

The President cut the two red-white-and-blue and yellow-green-and-red ribbons that crossed the highway. The link between the Amazon Basin and the Pacific via the Andes at long last was open.

Leniency & The Honor System

A Disastrous Blow

Editor:

I would like to register my objections to the proposed honor system leniency bill which will be debated in the Legislature next Thursday night. The following views are my own and not those of the Honor Council or any other member thereof.

People tend to forget that the Men's Council is a court of honor, not a court of law. Such a system as ours must remain inflexible to the point that each case can be handled individually and judged on its merits. The effort to catagorize all offenses into one sentence is not only impractical, but impossible.

The most amazing thing about the many cases which come before the Men's Council is that each one is different. Under our system, there is no established preedent. There cannot be. Each case must be tried, considered, and sentenced acording to its own circumstanes. If the Legislators who now think our system unfair, vote in favor of Mr. Reid's bill to put all convicted first offenders on probation, there will be no justice.

I believe that we have the best system available for the prevention and correction of lying, cheating, and stealing. It is up to the individual to live by and enforce the system to the satisfaction of his own code of honor. This is in keeping with the Carolina way of life. The prevailing trend to erect formal gardens, monuments to Mammon, and useless sundials seems to have invaded our court system. If we want this true system, why not choose faculty proctors to patrol quizzes?

The chief criticism of our system in the past has been that it is too lenient. Too many first offenders have been allowed to remain in school. I believe that attending the college of one's choice is a privilege. A person who accepts this privilege also accepts an obligation to abide by a code of honor. If a person does not fulfill this obligation, then he should also be denied the privilege to attend this University until he can show to the satisfaction of a council of his peers that he is able to accept our system of honor.

I sincerely hope that the members of the Legislature will give this bill and its ramifications serious consideration before they vote on it. If they do, I'm sure they will realize that its passage would be a disastrous blow to our honor system.

Gordon Forester

'Disillusioned' Freshman

Editor:

The respect people have for one another in any society is jeopardized when the members cannot trust one another. Our esteem for each other is built around the feeling of trust.

Before going any further, I would like to state the fact that I am just as insignificant at Carolina as any other inidvidual. This freshman year at Carolina has been very exciting for me. Everyone seems to be congenial on the social side. However, I have been disillusioned at different times. I came from a preparatory school where there was an honor system which was ironclad, and which served as the foundation for the school for over 100 years. After spending four years at such a school, I was delighted to hear about the honor system at Carolina just before entering. . .

Perhaps I should have waited longer before writing this, but I thought my first impression of Carolina would be interesting to some people. I certainly have no gripe against the University; I think it's wonderful and I am glad to be here. I hope I am serving it now by this thesis. I do not dislike anyone who cheats when the professor leaves the classroom during a quiz; but the act of cheating itself, to me, is the step downward in any man or woman's character.

If I have sounded rash, or if I have been wrong in the evaluation of the honor system, I apologize, , , I do not wish to state any facts, but I wish only to put questions in the minds of the students and the faculty as to the purpose of the honor system. As far as I can see, we should embrace our honor code as the rule by which we play the "game" at the University.

Don't Destroy The Honor System

Editor:

I read in the Sept. 30th issue of the DTH that a responsible member of one of the political parties on campus has proposed to liberalize (?) the honor system. My letter is not an attack on that person or that party, but my feelings are so strong on this subject that I cannot stand by and let a great institution (the honor system) be destroyed.

First of all, I went to undergraduate school at Washington and Lee, which, as you now, had to abolish football as a consequence of a cheating scandal. BUT by weakening athletics, I am proud to say that W. and L. and West Point preserved something that is worth more than any great football team.

By giving first offenders a second chance, the usual attitude of a person tempted to cheat would be: "Maybe I'll get by this time and if I get caught I'll get off. If I don't get caught I can do it again." (Ad infinitum). The result of such an attitude would make the honor system a mere sham. If any change is wanted by the student Legislature, the only choice is to abolish the honor system and have Carolina students placed under a strict proctor system.

Someone once said: "A man that will cheat will lie, a man that will lie will steal."

The Ram . . .

Editor:

I don't know about the rest of the student body but I for one am getting pretty disgusted with this Rameses. I don't know just what he is trying to prove. I have yet to find something he likes. He runs down everything from fraternities to religious groups. Actually he should be with a Hearse publication. When I pick up a DTH in the morning I don't want to read a poorly written expose about Dean Weaver's aspirations of which the writer knows nothing, or an article on a young religious sect written in a ridiculous imitation of Jonathan Swift's satirization of the Lilliputians. I suggest that the space and ink that this four-legged mystery man squanders be put to a better use, thus giving the readers a break.

& The Specs

I like to thank you wholeheartedly for the help with which you favored me to get the glasses back. They are worth $25.00. Your Southern Hospitality and the good-natured, friendly attitude of the people here have deeply moved me.

On the very day your esteemed paper printed the news, Mr. Peele, who picked up the glasses and handed them over to the UNC Athletic Association, came to see me about it. Mrs. L. L. Lucas of the said Association was kind enough to notify me to get them back from her. A lady secretary from UNC's Naval ROTC gave me information in this small matter. I express my unbounded gratitude to them also.

It was a small matter indeed. But things like this, convincingly lead many a foreign student to believe that people here are extremely nice. And I feel at "home" more and more as days go by due to such Southern atmosphere.

May I wish the DTH—the paper I like to read—every success.

Yoder Stirs Deep Waters: Huxley, Parapsych And ESP

Ed Yoder

If Aldous Huxley comes to Chapel Hill Wednesday night with a case of laryngitis (as when he was to lecture at Duke last Spring) I am afraid there will be suicides in the offing. (Don't be surprised; in fact, if this column passes quietly out of existence.)

Aldous Huxley, British novelist, critic, and essayist has many things to say. He has been knocking at many new "doors" to the esoteric beyond, to use a phrase of his. His lectures here will be entitled "The Non - Verbal Humanities —" for whatever that may be worth. I'm confident that it won't be as stuffy as it sounds. I take it, from an explanation by Professor H. K. ussell, that the springboard for what he will say will be work he han been doing on sensual experienve. It's Huxley's idea, according to Dr. Russell, that our sensual experiences are becoming verbal and that this is robbing us ouf their truest meaning.

Mr. Huxley's more literate hearers, while I'm sure they will be willing to hear what he says about the humanities, will be waiting for the question and answer period to sound him out on parapsychology and Mescalin. For these are the distant and misty doors on which he has been knocking—in fact pounding—of late.

"It is with the problem of psychological freedom," Huxley says in a statement in Twentieth Century Authors, "that I now find myself predominantly concerned." Huxley's concern with psychological freedom has led him directly to Dr. Rhine's Etxrasensory perception laboratory at Duke and to an extended essay on Mescalin. The Doors of Perception, published last winter.

What, in fact, about ESP? The concept that there exists what the parapsychologists call "psi"—a paranormal (i.e. "besides" or "beyond" the normal) faculty in the human mind that gives it strange powers has baffled and frightened the laymen. Not only that, a pitched battle has raged among psychologists. And ESP is the skeleton in every psychologist's closet. Sometimes he doesn't mind if his friends know about the skeleton. Sometimes, its discovery embarrasses him.

"Psi", Huxley explains in an article, "A Case for ESP, PK and Psi," in Life Magazine, can manifest itself as "telepathy, the direct awareness of events taking place in other peoples' minds; as clairvoyance, the direct awareness, with no help from sense impressions of events taking place in the outside world; and as precognition, or foreknowledge, the direct awareness, apart from rational forecasting and logical inference, of future events" All these phenomena fall under ESP.

Huxley's preoccupation with the question of ESP and what has become a conviction on his part that "psi" is an idea that will stand under future investigation has led him to contact with Dr. Rhine at Duke. Since 1930, Dr. Rhine has experimented with humans and beasts in his laboratory. Dogs, cats, homing pigeons, and human guinea pigs have joined the parade through the noted psychologist's experiment rooms—and all to bear testimony to the mysterious hypotheses on which parapsychoolgy is based.

Parapsychology fell into disrepute among many psychologists in its early days; Mesmer, according to Huxley's article, was the major contributor to this disrepute. That believer in ESP developed what was called "animal magnetism"—a concept that became the basis of much hellfire and brimstone revivalism. After this, many psychologists who considered themselves "reputable" turned up their noses in contempt at the whole "psi" works.

Huxley's concern with parapsychology, however, has reached over into the ethical and religious implications of ESP. It is Rhine's conviction—the conviction upon which 24 years of labor is based—that "there is something operative in man that transcends the laws of matter . . . the universe differs, therefore, from what the prevailing materialistic concept indicates. It is one about which it is possible to be religious." William James's idea of "Psi" on the part of each individual was participation in a World Mind that diffused mystical experience and knowledge. And, as Huxley states in his article, the idea of immortality of the soul after death depends on a mental consciousness (equivalent to "psi") that can survive physical decay.

II

Huxley's essay on The Doors of Perception introduced his sales talk for Mescalin—a drug used by certain American Indians for religious rituals and by mystics for profounder and more prolonged mystical experiences. He proposes that instead of enduring the nocuous effects of alcohol and tobacco, we put "buttons" of Peyote in the liquor cabinets and pellets of the drug in the cigarette cases.

"What is needed," Mr. Huxley writes, "is a new drug which will relieve and console our suffering species without doing more harm in the long run than it does good in the short. Such a drug must be potent in minute doses and synthesizable. If it doesn't possess these qualities its production, like that of wine, beer, spirits, and tobacco, will interfere with the raising of indispensable food and fibers." For him, Mescalin fills the bill.

Obviously, Huxley, scion of a household of scientist on his father's side and of a household of literary people on his mother's side, has felt the tug of both parts of his heritage. As literary craftsman and as scientist he has ventured beyond the usual and he will be worth listening to.

Midwestern Teams Dominate Poll Marked By Close Voting; Terps Out Of Top Ten

NEW YORK, Oct. 4—(AP)—Oklahoma profited by idleness over the weekend, missing a plague of upsets, and recaptured first place today in the Associated Press college football poll. Beaten Notre Dame tumbled from first to eighth.

Purdue, 27-14 conqueror of the Fighting Irish in one of the season's biggest surprises, rose from 15th to fifth place. Ohio State at tenth become the only other newcomer to the top ten on the strength of its 21-13 triumph over Caliornia.

Dropping out were Maryland, last year's national champion, which fell from sixth to 13th after bowing to UCLA 12-7, and Penn State, which dropped two notches from 10th for no apparent reason. Penn State beat Syracuse 13-0 for its second victory.

Oklahoma's Sooners captured 77 of the 173 first place votes cast by sports writers and broadcasters across the nation and amassed a total of 1,369 points. Points are awarded on the basis of 10 for a first place vote, 9 ofr second, etc.

Following Oklahoma in the first bracket were: UCLA, No. 2; Wisconsin, No. 3; Iowa, No. 4; Purdue, No. 5; Duke, No. 6; Mississippi, No. 7; Notre Dame, No. 8; Southern California, No. 9; Ohio State, No. 10.

Oklahoma won the No. 1 place in the opening Associated Press poll after beating California 27-13, but dropped back to second a week ago when Notre Dame showed such power in its opening 21-0 triumph over Texas. The Sooners had an open date last Saturday.

The voting was so colse the ifve top teams each received more than 1,000 points, a rarity in the poll. Purdue drew the second largest number of votes for first place, 22, but UCLA , Wisconsin and Iowa all drew stronger support in the lower positions.

UCLA has now won three games and marked itself a stout contender for national honors by whipping Maryland, No. 1 in the final poll last year.

Wisconsin edged Michigan State 6-0 on a disputed touchdown. Iowa, which had beaten Michigan State the week previously, smothered Montana 48-6. Wisconsin jumped from fifth to third in the standings while Iowa dropped a natch.

Duke and Mississippi each gained a rung in the standings. The Blue Devils edged Tennessee 7-6, while Mississippi rolled over Villanova 52-0. Southern Cal, which whipped Northwestern 12-7 for its third victory, was the only team to remain stationary — in ninth place.

This week's big game pits Purlue, No. 5, against Duke, No. 6, at Lafayette, Ind. Oklahoma has a late in Dallas with Texas, which hould prove one of Saturday's main attractions.

UCLA plays Washington, Wisconsin meets Rice, Iowa faces Michigan, Mississippi meets Vanderbilt, Notre Dame is at Pittsburgh. Southern Cal plays Texas Christian Friday night and Ohio State goes against Illinois.

Buddy Young Flabbergasting NFL Tacklers

By LARRY SAUNDERS

BALTIMORE, Oct. 4.— (AP) — Claude Buddy Young, the little gentleman of the gridiron, is down to his old weight and up to his old tricks of flabbergasting enemy tacklers in the National Football League.

"He's the most exciting thing in football," said Coach Jim Lee Howell, after his New York Giants were beaten last Saturday night by the Baltimore Colts.

Howell was talking about Young, the dashing Colt halfback who at 5-feet-4 and 170 pounds is the smallest player in the league.

Young had just capped a brilliant evening by scoring twice as the Colts came from behind for a 20-14 victory. Both of his touchdowns came on passes from quarterback Gary Kerkorian. On the first he caught the ball on his 37 and faked two Giants dizzy before speeding down the sideline untouched. The second time he covered 35 yards after wriggling free from two tacklers and dragging a third across the goal with him.

Coming after a 48-0 loss to the Los Angeles Rams in the season-opener, the victory over the Giants convinced Coach Web Ewbank the Colts in egneral and Young in particular are far from through for the year.

The Kerkorian-Young pass combination was good for 125 yards altogether on those two plays alone exceeding more than half the 201 yards Buddy picked up on 12 receptions all last season. On 40 runs that year he averaged 3.3 yards.

But the Young who played Saturday night was not the same player who had to struggle to get down to 180 pounds for the 1953 and later missed four games because of injuries.

Giant halfback Tom Landry called the 1954 Young "unbelievable."

"He looked like he did the day he came off the Illinois campus. He is the toughest broken-field runner I've ever seen."

Another Giant who walked off the field shaking his head was rookie quarterback Bobby Clatterbuck.

"He's the fastest man I've ever watched in a football suit," he said.

Probably the best indicator of Buddy's speed came in pre-season training sprints last summer, when he was clocked in 6.3 seconds fo 60 yards. Ten years ago at the University of Illinois he equalled the N.C.A.A. record three times in 6.1—just two-tenths of a second faster.

Popular Trainer Came Here In '50 From Baltimore Colts

Lutz had been head trainer at UNC since 1950. He was very popular with all his associates and "my ballplayers."

His innovations and special protection equipment had gained wide acclaim and he was continually being called upon to send sketches of his features to schools all over the country.

Lutz was also head trainer of the track team.

He was chairman of District 3 of the National Trainers Association.

His death was "untimely and unfortunate for a man of his age and ability," said Dr. Hedgpeth.

Lutz was born in Cairo, Ill., April 13, 1910. He attended high school there then attended Louisiana State University as a special student in education. While at L. S. U. he served as assistant trainer. In 1938 he went to the University of Georgia, where he held the position of head trainer until 1942. He then moved to Georgia Preflight and trained there until 1944.

Lutz entered the Navy in 1944. He was discharged in December, 1945, after serving at the Norfolk Naval Training Station.

He returned to Georgia in 1946 and was head trainer of the football team which defeated Carolina in the Sugar Bowl, 20-10.

In 1947, 1948 and 1949 he was head trainer of the Baltimore Colts of the National Football League.

He was married to the former Betty Smith, of Charleston, Mo., and resided at Glen Lennox Apartments, Chapel Hill.

Tackle Jack Maultsby Sidelined With Leg Injury; Out For Ten Days

Belichick Rates Harper Better Than 'The Brat'

Tackle Jack Maultsby will be out of the Carolina line-up for at least 10 days, Carolina Coach George Barclay told reporters yesterday. Maultsby was hurt in the last few minutes of the Tulane game Saturday and the injury to his leg is quite a blow to the forward wall plans of Barclay. Either John Jones or Hudson Shoulars is expected to replace the ailing Maultsby.

Barclay was everything but pleased with the showing of his Tar Heels in New Orleans. "We were just lousy. We didn't take advantage of the breaks and we couldn't do anything right," the Carolina coach stated. "In fact," Barclay continued, "We did everything wrong." The Tar Heels led Tulane throughout the ball game, only to be tied in the last few minutes of the contest, 7-7.

There was no individual singled out by Barclay as playing a good game either on offense or defense. "We looked worse against Tulane than we did against State," he said. "We'll have to work on offense, defense and everything this week if we hope to beat Georgia."

Assistant Coach Steve Belichick watched Georgia whip Clemson and lose to Texas A. & M. "Georgia looked great against Clemson," he said, "but I think anyone could have beat them Saturday when they played Texas A. & M." Georgia runs from the T-formation and they vary their attack, throwing more passes than the average team.

"The Bulldogs have a fine backfield with some speedy halfbacks and a couple of fine fullbacks," Belichick continued. "Their quarterback, Harper, is as good a passer as Bratkowski (Georgia's All-American quarterback last season) and I think he is a better runner They have a fine end in Joe O'Malley," the Tar Heel assistant mentor related.

Yesterday's practice took place behind the closed gates of Kenan Stadium. The Tar Heels worked on pass plays and offensive patterns to be used against the tricky Georgia defense. Halfback Ken Keller, who played very little against Tulane Saturday, because of an ankle injury, was in heavy equipment for the first time in two weeks, during a practi secsesoin . Dressed lightly yesterday, but expected to be ready by next Saturday was Larry McMullen, who hurt his hand; John Bilich, who has a bruised hip; Sonny Ridenhour, who has a neck infection, and George Wallin, who has been out all season with a dislocated shoulder.

It's Going To Stay Hot

It's not going to cool off for the rest of this week, according to the weather bureau.

There may be a cool wave over the weekend, but it's rather doubtful, say those who know.

This fall's high temperature is due to a "high" of the coast which is pumping tropical air in the Eastern states. A cool front has been spotted but it is too far off to be pin-pointed.

The last cool weather in Chapel Hill was on Sept. 25 and there has been no relief from the unseasonable heat since.

The weather bureau also said that we had broken no records for the month of October since there was a high reading of 97 in 1951.

The University geology department recorded a high of 96 at 2 p.m. yesterday with a humidity reading of 40 per cent on campus.

Y Slates Barbecue, Concert, Pep Rally

Real, old-fashioned barbecue, real Dixieland jazz and a real Fountain-inspired pep rally are planned for Friday evening.

The YWCA, sponsor of the event, announced yesterday that the supper will last from 5 to 7 p.m.

Occasion for the barbecue is international and national celebration of the YWCA's 100th anniversary. Tickets are now on sale in the Y lobby for $1.

The YWCA here is rtying to raise $1,000 next April, according to the Y, a national convention will be held in New York, and the organization hopes that every region in the U. S. will have made a substantial contribution to the national fund.

There is a need to raise funds, campus and community-wide, the organization said, to extend programs to other countries and and student and community life. Money raised from events such as the one here Friday will be used to provide more staffs in various regions, "to work for freedom and justice for all, to gove more young people opportunity to participate in attacking the problems of today's world and to further mutual understanding throughout the world."

Need Freedom Of The Mind, Says Daniels

Jonathan Daniels, Raleigh, editor of The News and Observer, last night told the Dialectic Senate and their guests that "free speaking of men's minds has been the greatest tradition of this much -loved university—and the one basis of the hope of the state which it serves."

Daniels spoke at the inauguration ceremonies of the historic debating society where Joel Fleishman of Fayetteville was installed as president.

Also installed were Lynn Chandler, Morrisville senior, president pro tempore; David E. Reid, Asheville junior, critic; Virginia Agnew, Hendersonville senior, clerk; Clyde Smith, Raleigh junior, treasurer; Larry McEroy, Marshall junior, sergeant at arms and Jim Turner, Winston-Salem junior, chaplain.

Huxley Will Talk On Humanities Tonight At 8 In Hill Auditorium

Aldous Huxley, well-known English novelist and essayist, will speak at Hill Hall tonight at 8 p.m.

Huxley, recognized as one of the most educated of modern day British authors, will speak on "The Non-Verbal Humanities."

Huxley's first novel, "Chrome Yellow," was published in 1916. Since then he has written such well known books as "Brave and New World," "Point Counterpoint," "Time Must Have A Stop," "After Many A Summer Dies the Swan," and "Ape and Essence."

Court Ruled That Oklahoma Negro Had Equal Rights

By DICK CREED

"We conclude that the conditions under which this appellant is required to receive his education deprives him of his personal and present right to equal protection of the laws . . .

"Appellant, having been admitted to a state-supported graduate school, must receive the same treatment at the hands of the state as students of other races."

"Appellant was a Negro student who was "made subject to certain conditions of segregation" after he was accepted for admission to the University of Oklahoma graduate school.

The quotations above are from the decision of the United States Supreme Court after it had heard his protests against the "conditions."

It was not known here yesterday whether the language of this decision would be applicable and enforceable in the case of the segregated setion of Steele Dormitory.

There is a difference in the "conditions of segregation" in the Oklahoma case and the case here.

In Oklahoma G. W. McLaurin was assigned to a particular row in classrooms, assigned to a particular table in the library and assigned to a particular table in the cafeteria.

At Carolina, Graduate Students Romallus Murphy and James Slade are assigned to a particular section of a particular dormitory, and the two rooms adjacent to theirs remain empty.

Negro students here can eat where they like in Lenoir Hall, sit where they like in the Library, and study where they like in classrooms.

State Attorney General Harry McMullan said yesterday that he could not give an advisory statement as to whether the language in the Supreme Court's decision in the case of McLaurin versus Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education would be applicable to the segregation situation here.

"Such a statement," he said, 'would have to come from the Supreme Court."

Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver yesterday refused to say for publication what he knew about how the third floor south section of Steele Dormitory came to be set aside for the exclusive use of Negro students.

Chancellor Robert B. House refused to comment Monday, and President Gordon Gray said that he was sure that "whatever happened came out of conferences with University officials" when colored students were first accept-

Meyner Slated For Speech Friday Night

Robert B. Meyner, newly elected Democratic Governor of New Jersey, will be the first speaker sponsored by the Carolina Forum this fall Friday.

Meyner

Governor Meyner will speak at 8:30 p. m in Hill Hall, according to Joel Fleishman, Fayetteville forum chairman.

Jonathan Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, will introduce the speaker.

Governor Meyner will be met by Forum representatives at the Raleigh-Durham airport in the afternoon and will be taken on a tour of the campus. A private dinner in his honor will precede his address and a reception in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial will be held afterwards.

UP To Scan Gas Prices

By CHARLES JOHNSON

The University Party decided to back Max Crohn's bill in the Student Legislature for a commission to investigate the high gas prices in Chapel Hill at its meeting held last night.

Bev Webb gave a legislature report, in which he discussed the bills brought before the legislature at its last meeting.

Max Crohn asked for suggestions for bills to be brought before the legislature in the future. He also discussed the bill brought up last week, which concerned the possibility of maid service in the dorms.

Reuben Leonard, party chairman, stressed the importance of party and individual participation in the campaign for the November elections. He also announced that nominations will begin on October 19.

Mike Weinman, publicity chairman, gave a publicity committee report, and discussed the forthcoming publicity of the party.

Charles Ackerman was elected to replace Don Miller, who resigned from the legislature from Town Men's III.

Bill Ragsdale stressed the importance of getting the party's policy across to the students. He also gave suggestions as to how this should be done.

New members were asked to introduce themselves, and a get acquainted session was held after the meeting. Refreshments were also served after the meeting.

There will be no meeting next Tuesday due to fraternity rushing, the party decided.

Jones Will Speak Tonight And Thursday

An error in yesterday's paper put the date of a lecture by Dr. Claiborne Jones at last night, rather than tonight and Thursday.

Dr. Jones will talk in the Library Assembly Room at 8 p.m. both tonight and tomorrow on "Things Visible and Things Unseen."

He will discuss the question, "Where and why do conflicts exist between religion and science?"

Dr. Jones, associate professor of the zoology department, is a native of Petersburg, Va., and received his A. B. at Hampton-Sydney College and his M. A. and Ph. D. from the University of Va.

In his lectures, Jones will cover the questions: To what extent is there independence and interdependence of science and religion? What are the common and peculiar characteristics of each? What is scientism?

The lectures are being sponsored by the Inter-Faith Council. A discussion period will follow each lecture during which refreshments will be served.

'. . . Get Rid Of A Hated Symbol Of Second-Class Citizenship'

Dr. Guy Johnson Has Studied Segregation For 30 Years

(Editor's Note: In the light of the Supreme Court's ruling against segregation in public schools, and yesterday's findings that two University of North Carolina students, both Negroes, are living in segregated dormitory rooms, The Daily Tar Heel has tried to probe the segregation question on the Carolina campus. Here staff writer Ruth Dalton has written the first in a series of two articles dealing with segregation and UNC. The second article, which will appear tomorrow, will tell what University folks think of the decision. The Daily Tar Heel realizes that no one's writings, especially on such a delicate subject as segregation, will be perfectly objective. If any readers happen to disagree with Miss Dalton's findings, and can offer substantial reason for their disagreement, The Daily Tar Hell will be glad to give the reader the proper amount of space.)

By RUTH DALTON

Since the Supreme Court's decision last spring which means the end of segregation in the public schools, much comment has arisen and there will definitely be more to come as the various states take individual action.

Dr. Guy B. Johnson, professor of sociology and anthropology here at the University, has spent some 30 years in research and study on the segregation problem.

One of the outcomes of this work is a study of the conditions and results in the Southern universities which have enrolled Negro students in the past eight years. The article, entitled "Racial Integration in Public Higher Education in the South," was printed in "The Journal of Negro Education" this past summer.

From the article, one learns:

In 1935 a court decision in the case of Donald Murray against the University of Maryland resulted in the admission of Murray to the University's School of Law at Baltimore.

The admission of a Negro to the Graduate School of the University of West Virginia in 1940 went almost unnoticed, and there was no significant change in the situation for nearly a decade.

The upshot . . . of legal skirmishes was that by the end of the academic year 1952-53 there were Negro students enrolled in at least 22 public higher institutions in the 17 "separate-school" states. These included all of the state universities in the South except five (Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina), plus a number of land-grant colleges, specialized schools and junior colleges. The enrollment of Negroes was small in proportion to the total number of students attending these institutions, but the fact that their admission to nearly all of these schools was achieved in the space of five years, 1948-49 to 1952-53, constituted something of a social and an educational revolution in the South.

There are two important limitations on the admission of Negro students. First, the Southern states which have admitted Negroes to hitherto white institutions have adopted an official policy which they follow rather rigidly; namely, that Negroes are eligible for admission only if the degree courses which they seek are not offered at one of the state's public institutions for Negroes. This means that most of the institutions accept Negroes only for graduate, professional or other specialized training.

Were there any unusual circumstances or incidents in connection with the arrival of the first Negro students on the various campuses? The answer is "No" in almost every instance. In view of the fact that quite a few white political leaders had predicted bloodshed, student riots and the wholesale withdrawal of white women from the schools if the courts ruled thta Negroes had to be admitted, there was a real risk of unpleasant incidents. Actually, however, there was relatively little excitement when the first Negroes arrived.

Administrative attitudes and policies were found to vary a good deal—all the way from a positive stand in favor of the complete integration of Negro students voiced by a president in one of the border states, to a somewhat grudging concession of the right of Negro students to be admitted, an attitude which was rather common in the more typically Southern states.

The transition from complete segregation to some degree of integration of Negroes into the publicly-supported institutions of higher learning in the South has already been accomplished in all except five of the Southern states, and most of the change has occurred in the brief period, 1948-53. Despite numerous predictions of violence, this transition has been accomplished without a single serious incident of interracial friction.

In campus relations between white and Negro students, new patterns of interaction have been quickly learned. Going to class together, eating in the same dining halls, living in the same dormitories, taking part in all sorts of campus affairs together—all these have been accepted and taken in stride as a part of the business of going to school. The bugaboo of "social equality" has apparently not disturbed very many students in a serious way.

To say that all is love and harmony on the co-racial campuses would be to go beyond the truth. There are anxieties and frictions as an inevitable accompaniment of the new adjustments which have to be made, and the Negro students have some special problems of discrimination, academic competition, and morale; but the fact remains that the process of integration is well on the way. The prognosis is good.

The Supreme Court decision . . . has wide implications for the whole structure of racial segregation. Presumably it opens the way for any citizen of a state to apply for admission to any public higher institution for which he is academically qualified.

While there will probably be no mass movement of Negro students to the mixed institutions, there might well be a relatively heavy increase in Negro enrollment this year or next year, particularly at the undergraduate level. In the meantime, it is good to know that the pioneering phase of desegregation in higher education in the South is already over and that the patterns of integration which have been formed augur well for the continuation of constructive integration.

More of Dr. Johnson's study and some of his personal opinions are shown in parts of his presidential address delivered at the annual meeting of the Southern Sociological Society in Atlanta on March 26, 1954, entitled "A Sociologist Looks at Racial Desegregation in the South."

Despite numerous predictions of violence, this transition to racial co-education in Southern universities has been accomplished without a single serious incident of friction. There were some rather wild rumors in a few schools at first, but they were soon dispelled. There was also an effort by the administration in several schools to define the privileges of the first Negro students in terms of the state laws and the old social norms; that is, the Negro students were segregated and restricted in various ways. However, this effort was soon abandoned; first, because white students themselves condemned it as unfair, second, because the Supreme Court made a ruling against such treatment. Today there is very little official discrimination against the Negro students. In fact, one can say that there had already emerged a norm in which administration takes pride, namely, that there is equality of campus citizenship.

The fluid initial stage in the transition will be of special importance, and I want to state . . . propositions with regard to it.

It will be a period of tension, of evasive actions and experiments.

What I am saying here is that the natural reaction of the majority of white people will be to try to define the new situation in terms of existing norms. At the same time there will be efforts by the liberal or equalitarian minority in the white group to accept the new situation and to modify the social norms to fit, but these will remain minority efforts.

The initial period is likely to see an increase in race rumors, an increase of aggression against Negroes, and occasional violence.

Every sensible person would like to believe that the transition can be made without violence. I believe that for the most part it will, but considering the reality of the extreme emotional involvement of certain white groups in the symbols of white dominance, and considering the thousand and one ways in which incidents and rumors, provocations and fears might be combined, it would be a miracle indeed if there were no violence of any sort.

The consequences of the abandonment of compulsory segregation may be less than many people feared they would be, but but they may also be short of what many people hoped they would be. I suggest that the greatest positive consequence may be that the South will be rid of a hated symbol of second-class citizenship.

Third Floor Steele

Both news stories were on the front page yesterday. One had headlines stretching across five columns. It told the story of two Negro students—the only two Negroes in the University—living in segregated Steele Dormitory rooms.

The other story was printed in two short paragraphs. The brother of a Lewis Dormitory janitor was critically ill, and the residents of Lewis had given six pints of blood in an attempt to save his life.

The first story was more widely read; but the two news items, we think, are of equal importance. They depict two moods, two states of mind on this campus: One of prejudice, and one of simple humanism. The humanism, you will notice, springs from the students, and the segregation of James Slade and Romallus Murphy was a decision made by someone above the students—the administration, presumably (though no one will say) or the Board of Trustees.

The great roadblock to de-segregation in Southern colleges has been on the upper levels—in college administration, or, more often, among politicians or trustees who insist that "public opinion" must be molded before the Negro is given what the Supreme Court has now unanimously declared are his rights.

And the great lesson in Texas and Oklahoma has been that if given a chance, students and teachers will quickly and with reasonable good humor, work out the practical issue themselves.

There is no longer any doubt that integration will soon be enforced by the courts. How much better it would be, how much more in the progressive tradition of this University, if the authorities could be persuaded to let down the barriers of racial prejudice now.

They could be persuaded, we think, if the students should let their convictions be known, if they should extend, in advance of the Supreme Court's dictum on the method of integration, a welcome to the Negro high school graduates of North Carolina to apply for admission as University undergraduates in the fall

There is no excuse for this University's undergraduate facilities being limited to white students, any more than there is an excuse for three rooms in Steele Dormitory being empty when students have asked permission to live there

The remark of a Negro student at Oklahoma is pertinent: "If the authorities could be persuaded to stay away from this, the kids would work it out okay"

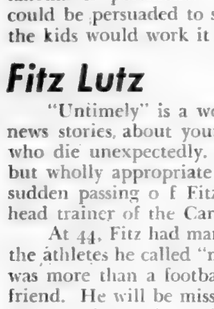
Fitz Lutz

"Untimely" is a word you see a lot in news stories about young, vigorous people who die unexpectedly. The word is trite, but wholly appropriate in referring to the sudden passing o f Fitz Lutz, the popular head trainer of the Carolina football team.

At 44, Fitz had many years left to help the athletes he called "my ballplayers." He was more than a football trainer, he was a friend. He will be missed by everyone who had occasion to know him during his fine years of service to the University.

The IFC Dispute

National Newspaper Week climaxed Saturday at midnight and an end came to the solemn oratory on the significance of press freedom that had echoed through banquet rooms all over the countryside.



Monday night—one night, in fact, after National Newspaper Week was over, the IFC met. The Daily Tar Heel's quest of two weeks' standing for entrance into the sanctum sanctorum of the Greeks again met the bleak silence treatment. Elsewhere on campus, the Student Party accepted the Wolf Report. This meant, in effect, that an ally in the fight had been lost; we shed no tears, however, over the SP action.

The objection we have made against any group in the student government that wishes to censor at the source and to select for the students only what it thinks the stu- should know is The Daily Tar Heel's red wagon.

With or without allies, be it known that we will continue to pull it...

A Crusade For Fried Chicken In The Hand

Louis Kraar

SINCE LAST weekend, I have embarked on a crusade. Since this is my first crusade since I've been here, it's rather difficult to start. But here goes.

This reporter sat down with a gang of high school journalists over at the Carolina Inn last Saturday night for the Press Institute banquet. The prep journalists descend upon the Hill every fall to talk about newspapers, and have a banquet. By Saturday night, they had already finished talking newspapers and were ready to tackle the banquet end of the affair.

THEN THE source of my crusade arrived — the meal. And that was the beginning of my first crusade.

I looked out of the three rows of tables to find out whether the eaters were going to pick the fried fowl up in their hands or stab at it with their knives and forks. And all I could see were high school journalists looking at other high school journalists to see how to eat the fried chicken. Finally one table started with their hands and another started with their knives and forks. In a few moments, the suspense was over the knife-and-fork eaters had the majority.

REMEMBERING THAT I had heard somewhere that the Emily Posted guest may eat chicken with his hands, I checked with my neighbor, Prof. Roy Carter of the Journalism School. Prof Carter admitted he had heard of the Emily Post sanction for eating with one's hands, but he added that he'd follow the majority.

After prodding the bird with a knife and fork (a most inadequate method), I picked up the chicken in my hand (just one hand, like Miss Post says) and proceeded to eat.

ALL OF THIS brings me to my crusade. I'm going on record as a crusader for eating fried chicken with one's hand (just one, though) both at home and at banquet tables.

However, I've decided that I'll try to be a tolerant crusader (if there is such a thing) and won't do anything more to those who refuse to eat fried chicken with the hands than to refuse to eat with them.

ALTHOUGH I'VE always heard that Emily Post sanctioned fried chicken eating by hand, when I called the Library to check they couldn't find any specific statement on the subject.

Louise Hall of the Reference Department plodded through several chapters of the gospel of manners and found no text on eating fried chicken. Finally, Miss Hall's valient voice came over the wire, and she was reading a section called "birds."

Briefly, Miss Post says no bird eating with your fingers. And she adds, "If you know how to manage very small bones, . .you put the piece of bone with meat on it in your moth, eat it clean with your teeth and tongue, and remove the bare bone between forefinger and thumb from between compressed lips."

THE CRUSADE is still on. And it's still a tolerant crusade (if there's still such a thing.)

And now, if you'll pardon me, I'm going down to the Rat for a fried chicken dinner, and the first guy I see eating fried chicken with a knife and fork is going to get a beer mug bounced off his head.

YOU Said It: Two Sundial Views

'With Interest & Disgust'

Editor:

It was both with interest and with no small portion of disgust that I read your editorial in today's DTH concerning the sundial to be erected by the Morehead Foundation in the Planetarium parking lot . I say with interest, because since my arrival at the University I have indeed been concerned with the views of campus leaders on various timely topics. However I must say with disgust—that anyone in your position would have the audacity or gall to make such a childish opinion public.

I dare say that there is no one benefactor who has done more for the University at Chapel Hill than Mr. John Motley Morehead. Certainly it is not necessary to enumerate for the general public, or for the student body, the objects of his magnanimous generosity. However, apparently you do need to be reminded that the Morehead -Patterson Bell Tower, The Planetarium and Art Gallery, and The Morehead Scholarship Foundation do not represent the casual outcome of a cursory meeting of the "Foundation Fathers." Except for Mr. Morehead's great love for and interest in the University, there never would have been a group of "Foundation Fathers;" except for Mr. Morehead, the University would not have many of the things which contribute to its esteemed position of the cultural center of the South.

Mr. Morehead and the Foundation are under no obligation to provide educational plants or housing facilities for the University. The University is state supported, and the obligation for housing and classroom buildings lies with the General Assembly. True, the millions invested in the Bell Tower, hte Planetarium, the Art Gallery, and the Scholarship Fund perhaps could have been used, in the opinion of some, more practically in building new and modern dormitories, a new Pharmacy Building, a new Student Union Building, or to alleviate the prospective rise in tuition, and the like. But Mr. Morehead is under no obligation to provide anything; his financial obligation to the University was settled in full whe he paid his tuition and fees during the time he was a student here. He merely occupies the peculiar position of being intensely interested in Carolina as a whole, and he has exemplified his interest through extreme generosity in providing for us things fro which the General Assembly perhaps could never make the necessary appropriations. He has provided us with luxuries which without his beneficence we could never afford.

The sundial is a part of the plan for the Morehead Building—as mucch so as the parking lot, any portion of the equipment in the Planetarium, any painting in the Art Gallery, or in fact as the very building itself. The sundial represents a portion of a whole, a whole for which the student body should be exceptionally grateful, and for which every student should concern himself with expressing gratitude. Certainly it is not up to us to squawk because we disagree (if we do—and I do not) with the manner in which funds are allotted; and surely it is unbecoming to display resentment because no one of us was consulted regarding the object for which the money is to be spent. The money belongs to Mr. Morehead and is dispensed at the discretion of the Foundation; it is their prerogative to buy, to erect, or to endow just what pleases them and the administration, without referring the matter either to you or to me. I should say that the concensus would be that they have been wise and generous in their decisions.

'Once Upon A Time'

Editor:

Once upon a time not so very many years ago, there came a student to a university—a state university. He was young and like so many other young students before him he was full of ideas of how the world should be. He was especially full of ideas about how a university should be and what it should be like.

On one of his first days at the university, he sat down alone in his room before a desk piled high with studies, and being rather sleepy at the time his mind began to wander. Relaxing for a minute he leaned back in his chair and gazed up at the far corner of his room. It was a typical dormitory room; the walls were all painted the same color of pale green, and there was nothing unusual about the particular corner of the room that he was looking at — or for that matter, any other corner of the room.

But as he sat looking into that corner, he began to see something he had never seen before — he saw an idea — an idea of a university. It appeared to him to be a place — a living place — that was there to guide the young people of the state through a difficult period of their lives. It was to him both a teacher and prophet built out of bricks and mortar with scattered patches of grass and trees here and there, and all those bricks and trees contained a living spirit — a kindly old paternal spirit that watched over all the young people and looked out for them and guided them to maturity.

He closed his eyes for a minute and thought that it was a nice idea. When he opened his eyes he aws no longer looking into the corner, but instead he now gazed out the window. And across a large expanse of grec he saw a parking lot with a great wooden sundial in the center. He quickly looked back to the corner, but there was nothing there for all his ideas of a university had just died.

The Ram Sees

It wasn't reported in the news columns (possibly because the reporter didn't have the heart to write about it) but just a bare handful of people were at Woollen Gymn on Friday to cheer the team off on its way down to Tulane. Admittedly, no publicity was given the send-off until Friday, but the loud-speakers which blared in Y Court all morning certainly got the word to a large portion of the student body. Even people leaving WG just before the team loaded on buses wouldn't hang around to lend any support. "Got to eat lunch, you know' 'was a typical comment made as they hurried away from the gym. This sort of thing can be discouraging to a team. We hope that the Carolina spirit which seems to be so badly lacking at present will put in its appearance before the football season is over. BEAT GEORGIA!

The proposed sun dial which will be placed in the center of the garden area of the Morehead Building parking lot (a wooden model is set up there now) has taken a lot of kidding. Frankly, we think it will be a handsome addition to the campus scene, and if Mr. Morehead wants to spend his money on an oversized sun dial, that is certainly his privilege. There are many things on the campus now which serve no utilitarian purpose; they simply add to the beauty of the University. The people who imply that nothing should be built except dormitories and classroom buildings in these Republican-inspired days of short money will probably be proposing next that we chop down all the excess trees around the campus and sell the lumber.

Reaction Piece

David Mundy

WHILE HOME for a brief vacation this fall, I went on a three-day hike with a couple of old friends who had been attending Oberlin and Middlebury.

Somehow or other, we wandered from Buncombe into Madison county.

We happened across one of those "forbidden beverage" contraptions. The two fellows who were sitting around were a bit hostile at first, but became somewhat friendlier when we pronounced it about the best brew that we had ever experienced.

While slaking our thirst, we brought up the subject of politics, Madison County politics being what they are. The conversation revealed that they did not know of the end of World War II, the A-bombs, and the election of President Eisenhower. One of my friends pressed: "Don't you ever see a newspaper?"

"Why hell," answered the more inteligent looking of the two, "even when we get a newspaper down here, them damn Republicans won't read it to us."

"ME TOO!" appears to be the Democrats' strategy in North Carolina's Ninth and Tenth Districts this year. It even appears that the Civil War and Reconstruction won't be their main issues. J. P. Sedberry (Just call him Seddy, short for sediment) is promising to cast his votes in no manner different from Jonas'. And Larkins, Democratic State Chairman, has said in reference to the Ninth, something to the effect: "We have Democrats who can represent the district just as well as a Republican, no matter how well qualified he may be." So party alignment, not qualifications or voting records, are today's Democrat standards for good congressmen.

CORRUPT PRACTICE of the campaign is Larkins' letter to state officials, "suggesting" that their underlings contribute to the party's slush fund for the coming campaign. Gov. Umstead, who has trouble seeing anyway, sees nothing wrong with the letter. He, of course, also sees nothing wrong with using state cars and expense funds, and prison - farm hogs, for political barbecues (customarily disguised as highway dedications.

It is easy to imagine the furor that would be raised should Leonard Hall ask the Cabinet officers to suggest to their underlings that they contribute to the Republican National Committee's campaign fund. Steve Mitchell, who already will call anyone a liar at the drop of a hat, would have a field day. There is a pleasant possibility, though the exertion might cause him and a few other faint-hearts of the left to pop-off.

It appears that North Carolina's Democrats are accustomed to some amount of corruption in their leaders. Alvin Wingfield has been the only Democrat within remembrance who ran without an unpleasant aroma around him. The state "organization", especially the Young Democrats, rid the state of him.

DREW P. just can't be satisfied. During the past week he has:

1. Urged that we place less emphasis on the Far East and devote more interest to the Western Hemisphere. That is part of Herbert Hoover's much-maligned "reactionary" proposal for a "Fortress America."

2. Complained that Vice-President Nixon was being overly prudish in not accepting a gift from a pressure group—the hatmakers. Drewey ends up making uncomplimentary remarks about Nixon's expense fund. He conveniently confuses legitimate campaign funds and the receipt of personal gifts from a group seeking favors from the government.

CONTRADICTION of the week: Watkins' Committee report criticizes McCarthy sharply for his caustic remarks about fellow Senators, and doesn't criticize assorted leftist and feebleminded Senators who use even more uncomplimentary terms in reference to McCarthy. Senator's one the committee violently against one-man committee sessions: Senator Watkins holds one-man session to take part of the derogatory testimony.

RECOMMENDATION of the week: Censure Flanders, Lehman, Humphreys, et al.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . "—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.

THE HORSE was looking dour, indeed, when I found him in the Library stacks, sitting in his carrel.

"Sitting in my stall," The Horse corrected me. "Who ever heard of a horse in a carrel? I have just been reading, Roger, me lad, the snide-est chapter of as snide a farce as snide military brains, ever conceived and played on our national stage. I refer to the sentencing for life of one ex-Corporal Claude Batchelor, quandam Korean Commie POW and at that time an avowed Commie zealot."

Oh, yes! One of the laddies who didn't want come home!

"Well, Batchelor is home now," The Horse said. "For keeps. And the keeps are at taxpayers' expense."

"The Commies had tens of thousands of subjects in our camps who refused to return their to the yoke of Red rule, and they had face to save," The Horse stated. "What did we have of animus - ridden prisoners of war in their camp Twenty- three."

Should we have just left them there, ignored them?

"You betcha we should have," The Horse said flatly. "To heck with them, if they liked the good there better than here. But some Pentagon Pooh Bah had to play sucker for the Commie bait and make us out arrant jack asses braying for our strayed little donkeys to come home again.

Could we not liken it to the Biblical story of the Prodical Son, perhaps?

"I do not recall," The Horse chittered. "though there is any similiarity in this Batchelor Deal and Luke's version of that famous parable. In the Biblical tale, Poppa cooked the fatted calf and fed it to Sinning Sonny. In our modern POW version we hit Sinning Sonny in the puss with the live and kicking bull as he came in through the open door."

Did The Horse, then, hold that Batchelor should have been forgiven his sins against his fellow prisoners?

"I maintain that our asinine actions in begging Turncoat Bathelor to ome home 'to the better life' committed us to that all but unthinkable course of non-action," The Horse maintained. "I'll go along with you now that we gave him life; but how much 'better' it is than what he had there in North Korea, I do not care to debate at all. Oh, sure — it's the old Army game of Making-A-Terrible-Example. Nineteen guys will goof on on some Regulation, and then some satchel-aft Brass will howl. 'The next one that does this thing, we'll make a terrible example of.' So, down comes the boom with a boom, and one goat is flattened while the nineteen others probably get promoted."

Hadn't the Brass ass also worked over one ex-Cpl. Dickinson, or some such name, on the same charges? Wasn't he sentenced, also?

"Why, but of course!" The Horse horse-laughed. "We talked two men back out of twenty-tthree dissenters; and just like the Commies warned them all, we gave them both the business. If this is not capping asininity with super-asininity, then I just don't know. Where, now, is all this wonderful propaganda the Pentagon Pooh - Bahs visioned when they bargained with the gutsless cretans to come home? It is a fresh propaganda scalp in the Commie wigwam.

Maybe this would be a deterren, though? Maybe, next time, such men as Batchelor and Dickinson would merely give their names, ranks, and serial numbers?

"You mean, next time they won't come back, period," The Horse guffawed. "You see, Roger, what these boys did, heinous as it is, was to copy their alleged betters here at home. It has come to pass that maintaining life, some life, any life, is better than dying for a principle. You see this daily Business, Politics, even in Religion. The trick is to stay in business, see? And you needn't look so shocked, it was an idea even so far back as about 490 B. C., if you have been studying your Greek Drama, which I very much doubt. Wasn't it the nurse in Hippolytus who argued with Phaedra, her incestously-minded mistress, that to live with Hippolytus would be better than to die without him? The difference is, the Greeks thought this wrong. We think it right, it would seem, to maintain life at any and all cost to honor and morality."

Could The Horse cite a few examples?

"Yeah, with pleasure," The Horse accepted. "Twenty years ago, we did it when we made a treaty with Russia so we could do business with them and help us up out of the Depression. We did it again with delight, yes, when the Russkies broke with their Nazi buddies and we bargained for their help to win otu over the Nazis. We did it when the, uh, GOP kicked Bob Taft aside to nominate Our Peerless Leader. We did it again when the GOP dreamed up The Third Louisiana Purchase to nail down Louisiana, Texas and California electoral college votes. We did it again. General Motors put up the money to win the election—and the payoff is still in progress. We did it again when a liberal Chapel Hill minister was kicked out of his church because the Christ-noises he emitted from his pulpit offended many of his congregation and most, if not all, of his superiors. We did it again when three young ministerial student-chaplains were routed out because they offended by clinging to their Christian doctrines."

Well, we didn't feed them to the lions, anyway.

"Worse, we feed them to the headlines," The Horse said sourly. "Like Un-Holy Joe McCarthy we feed their reputations to the ignorant and the bigoted and the unprincipled—for gain: to stay in power; to avoid criticism of ourselves: to get publicity ourselves. There is only one good feature in this Batchelor-Dickenson Deal."

And that was?

"Texas and Virginia are always bragging how they got everything, and for once we agree. Texas can claim Batchelor, and Virginia can't deny Dickinson. But the rest of us are pure."

"Wump!" Mr. Wump spoke, from his low-level vision of things.

Over The Hill

Any resemblance between the following and a sports column may be attributed to the generous and gracious imagination of the reader.

In assuming the DTH sports editorship, we wish to acknowledge the proficiency with which this department has been managed by our renown predecessor, Tom Peacock, whose retirement was prompted by the exigency to devote more attention to his law studies. In fact, it is with a certain feeling of ineptness that we deliver our meager offerings, following on the heels of a scribe who has been referred to as "the best yet." However, with full cognizance of our shortcomings and not wishing to commit journalistic suicide with an exudation of self-confidence to any degree, it is with mere devotion to duty that we commit ourselves with a promise to strive for continuation of the excellent coverage of sports that you have heretofore had access to on this page.

Diving Off The Deep End

As we are herewith baptized into the ranks of sports prognosticators and Monday morning quarterbacks, we shall dive headlong into the subject at hand. This season seems to be one of bigger and better upsets. The reigning grid powers of a year ago, with a couple of exceptions, have had their aplomb shaken early and rudely. Maryland, Notre Dame, and Michigan State, who wound up last season in one, two, three order have already had any hopes they might have harbored for an undefeated season dashed to pieces. Such aggregations as Purdue, impudent spoilers of the Irish 13-game winning skein; Iowa, Spartan-conquerors; Wisconsin, and Duke have not only established themselves as powers to be dealt with, but have served notice that they might do a little dealing themselves. Oklahoma and UCLA, fourth and fifth, respectively, in the final AP poll last year are the exceptions. The Sooners moved to the head of the pack when Terence Brennan's Irish were tumbled, and the UCLAns thumped mighty Maryland, enabling them to keep a hot breath down Oklahoma's neck from the second spot. Acid tests are in store for several of the grid Goliaths come next Saturday. Oklahoma must wrestle its traditional rival, Texas; either Duke or Purdue will undoubtably fall from the magic ten when the outcome of their head-on clash in Durham is settled.

In Memoriam:

The usual jocular air that pervades the dining room of the Monogram Club was replaced by a somber silence when the Tar Heel athletes assembled for dinner Monday evening. The quips that generally fly freely were transmuted into brief, sober remarks, and only of necessity were these uttered. Joviality yielded to respectful tranquillity.

The athletes were reacting to the death of their beloved trainer, Fitz Lutz, by paying him the most natural, and perhaps greatest, tribute possible—respectful silence to his memory.

When one of the players pulled a muscle or sprained his back, it was Fitz's deft touch that relieved the pain and made recovery swift. He went out of his way to insure the safety, well-being, and comfort of "my boys," as he called them. He understood young men, and in his quiet way he performed many, varied tasks to help them along. Sometimes it was a brisk rubdown; sometimes it was a soft word of reassurance to a lad in dejection.

Fitz was head trainer at Georgia for a number of years. He wanted, more than anyone, to see Carolina take the field against Georgia Saturday and walk off victorious. If the Tar Heels win this one Saturday, it will be for Fitz. If they lose, he will know they tried.

Dark Horses Grab Lead In Carolinas Tourney

GREENSBORO, N. C., Oct. 5 (AP)—Clarence Owen, 50-year-old pro at the Catawba Country Club in Hickory, and Ralph Lang of Roaring Gap, who has been a Tar Heel pro for more than a decade, shot three-under-par 68s here today to become surprise leaders after the first round of the 72-hole Carolinas PGA golf tournament.

Both Owen and Lang, neither given a chance to win the PGA event before they teed off today, knocked three strokes off par at the Green Valley Course on the front line and matched regular coming in for identical 34-34—68 cards.

Al Smith of Danville, Va., the defending champion, came in with a one-under-par 70, as did Avery Beck of Kinston who is playing in his first PGA tournament. Johnny Palmer of Charlotte, the tournament favorite after his 66 in Monday pro-am competition, could do no better than match regulation 71 today, something also done by Ducky Miller of Camp Lejeune and Thurman Edwards of Winston-Salem.

Owen and Lang did nto completely hog the low scoring spotlight, however.

Wes Ferrell of Greensboro, former major league pitching great who is one of those participating in an accompanying 72-hole amateur tournament, came in with a sizzling 68 also, going four under par for a 33 going out—the best nine of the day, pro or amateur—and then returning in one-over-regulation 35.

In addition, amateur Richard King of Greensboro shot a two-under—69, and amateurs Jimmy Ferree of Ft. Jackson, S. C. and Horace Blair of Greensboro carded one-under-par 70s.

Tomorrow the pros—and amateurs—will play the second 18 holes, with a 36-hole windup round scheduled on Thursday. In tody's action, just four pros and four amateurs broke par on the sun-dried course on which 300-yard drives were not unusual with the long rolls. Three other pros match regulation.

Halfback Gravitte Named Carolina Athlete Of Week

CONNIE GRAVITTE
. . . "Athlete of the Week"

Connie Gravitte, Carolina's highest scoring back at the moment, has been selected by vote of The Daily Tar Heel sports staff as "Athlete of the Week."

Gravitte scored UNC's only touchdown last week against Tulane when the Green Wave deadlocked the Tar Heels in New Orleans, 7-7. Gravitte's score gave him two touchdowns for the season, more than any other Carolina back.

Connie won the award by slight margins over tackle Roland Perdue and guard Bill Koman.

Gravitte, who was the No.2 ground-gainer for the Tar Heels last season, was personally responsible for 110 yards Saturday against Tulane. He ran the ball 13 times for an average of about eight and one-half yards per carry.

The fleet halfback also returned two punts for a total of 26 yards.

Gravitte is also a star outfielder on the baseball team and has been planning on a professional baseball career.

A native Carolinian (Roxboro), Gravitte stands six feet even, weights 195 pounds and is a 20-year-old senior .

"How he go to jail?" asked the fun- -loving Gavilan at his training camp. "First he is going to be in hospital long time. You know, he fight the champion."

Barclay Stresses Aerial Game As Tar Heels Prep For Georgia Tilt

Bullock Runs First Team In Practice As Carolina Hopes To Outpass Bulldogs

By LARRY SAUNDERS

When the Georgia Bulldogs invade Chapel Hill Saturday for their encounter with Carolina the pigskin will really be flying.

Georgia has a fine passing attack led by a talented quarterback named Harper and judging from the Tar Heel workouts this week, Coach George Barclay plans to try to defeat the Bulldogs at their own game.

Barclay sent the Tar Heels through a lengthy passing drill yesterday with Len Bullock, Marshall Newman, and Albert Long heaving the leather. Bullock has been working with the first team for two days now, and although Barclay has announced no definite changes in his line-up, there is a good possibility that Bullock will lead the Tar Heels Saturday.

"Teedee" started the season running with the third team, but after the State tilt, the talented passer moved into the number-two quarterback post. If Bullock moves into the starting line-up against Georgia it will mean an advancement per week for the Tar Heel signal caller.

Barclay also put much emphasis on defense yesterday. The freshmen team ran through the Georgia plays and the Tar Heels showed great defensive promise in the hard scrimmage. The frosh could hardly move the ball against the Carolina defense.

John Jones, a sophomore from Richmond, Va., moved into the left tackle post on the first team, left vacant by Jack Maultsby's leg injury. Maultsby watched practice from the sidelines on crutches.

Line Coach Marvin Bass worked with the linemen on the tricky Georgia defense. The Bulldogs often employ a four-man line with the tackles spread wide and a couple of linebackers bunched together to guard the center area.

Davis Cup Group Worried By Vic Seixas' Loss Of Form

NEW YORK, Oct. 5 (AP)—The United States Davis Cup committee meets Thursday to pick a team for the annual Australian tennis pilgrimage, and there's no hiding its concern over Vic Seixas's sudden loss of form.

"No doubt about it, I wouldn't trust a singles job to Vic in Australia on the way he played in Mexico," one member of the committee said today.

Seixas, a disappointment in Davis Cup competion in Australia last December, was beaten in straight sets by Gustavo Palafox of Mexico in the American Zone finals Saturday and was given a hard battle yesterday by 21-year-old Mario Llamas.

The Americans managed to win the series, 4-1, but there were some anxious moments because of the U. S. champion's erratic play. Tony Trabert won both his singles matches and teamed with Seixas to take the doubles, but not easily. .

"Maybe Vic was ill or something —that's what we'll have to find out," the U. S. Lawn Tennis Assn. spokesman said.

Seixas, who hit peak form in the national tournament at oFrest Hills is a cinch for a spot on the Davis Cup team. Trabert, who won the U. S. title in 1953, and much-improved Hamilton Richardson of Baton Rouge, La., also are team certainties.

The fourth place is up in the air. It's a good bet the berth will go to either Bernard Bartzen, the lefty from San Angelo, Tex.

WHAT NEXT?

MOSCOW, Oct. 5 (AP)—Sir Stanley Rous, secretary of the English Footballl Assn., said today he has reached "agreement in principle" with Soviet sports officials for regularly scheduled matches between Soviet and British football teams.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
2 NT	Pass	3 Clubs	Pass
6 NT	Double	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: Deuce of hearts.

This hand came up in a recent rubber bridge game with some of the campus' leading politicians. I won't say who was sitting where, but yours truly was in the South position.

Before kicking off to the point of main interest, let us make a couple comments concerning the bidding. In order to open the bidding with 2 no trump you must have between 22 to 24 high card points, a stopper in every suit, and a hand that does not have a singleton or two doubletons. Once South opens the bidding he has completely described his hand, hence, any aggressive action past the game level must originate by South's partner. The only good response North can make to that opening bid is 6 no trump. Why? Because North has 11 high card points and knows that South has at least 22, a total of 33 high card points. The law of averages states that with 33 high card points in the combined hands a small slam should make.

Are you wondering why South bid 6 no trump? It's like I told the Countessa de Nom de la Nom at the time she questioned the logic of my trumping her ace when it was imperative I get to my hand: "It's the only way I had of getting there." And what would you do when your partner bids 3 clubs and your holding four of his honors and a monsterous hand that includes three aces?

With the opening lead of the small heart, it was a cinch for declarer to take all 13 tricks since West is placed with both missing kings because of the double. See if you can figure out how before reading further. The thing to do is cash four diamonds after winning the opening lead with the heart ten, play the heart ace and then run five clubs. Dummy is left with the queen of hearts and a spade and declarer has the ace-queen of spades. What two cards can West hold? In order to protect spades he has to keep the king and another spade but if he does that he has to throw away the king of hearts which will set up dummy's queen. West elected to discard the small spade at which point declarer played the ace to catch the king and the queen was good for the thirteenth trick.

West's only comment, "my word!"

"We need to remember the 160 years since the formation of this society," Daniels declared. "Nothing is more significant in the history of this university than that the first student organization devoted to the right of men to debate and so to differ and therefore to dissent."

He emphasized that there is no meaning in debate if there is not room wihtin it for differences and htere is "no meaning in democracy which does not nurture and cherish dissent."

"Certainly in this hall you have no greater business than to deman that it be such a center and the free mind, of the unafraid dissent, of the forthright freedom," said Daniels. "This is not a thing which can be built with appropriations or made secure by the philanthropies of wealthy business men. It is this thing htis society was founded to serve. It is the thing—and the only thing—which will preserve the meaning of this University as a part of the heritage of freedom which we can only guard by exercising it."

Epps, Graham Speak At Y Prof Banquet

Dr. Preston Epps, UNC professor of Greek, and Dr. Willard Graham, head of the executive training program in the School of Business Administration, were the speakers for the YMCA-sponsored Faculty Visitations Banquet held Monday night in Lenoir Hall.

The actual visitation program began yesterday with student committees' making personal calls on each faculty member and asking for contributions and support of the local YMCA program.

The first speaker was Dr. Graham, who emphasized importance of students' contact with faculty. He said many members are used to contributing the same amount year in and year out without stopping to realize that the cost of operating the Y has risen, along with other costs.

Bob Hyatt, president of the YMCA, served as toastmaster. Bob Young and Pete Ash made talks on the budgeting and importanc eof the drive and its mechanics.

Following are excerpts from the decision of the Supreme Court Reporter, Volume 70:

". . . For some time the section of the classroom in which appellant sat was surrounded by a rail on which there was a sign stating 'Reserved for colored,' but these have been removed.

". . . It is said that the separations imposed by the state in this case are in form merely nominal. McLaurin uses the same classroom, library and caefteria as students of other races; there is no indication that the seats to which he is assigned in these rooms have any disadvantage of location. He may wait in line in the cafeteria and there stand and talk with his felow students, but while he eats he must remain apart.

"Such restrictions impair and inhibit his ability to study, to enlibrary and cafeteria as students views with other students, and in general, to learn his profession.

"Our society grows increasingly complex, and our need for trained leaders increases correspondingly. Appellant's case represents, perhaps, the epitome of that need, for he is attempting to obtain and advanced degree in education, to become, by definition, a leader nad trainer of others. Those who will come under his guidance must be directly affected by the education he receives. Their own education and development will necessarily suffer to the extent that his training is unequal to that of his classmates.

"State imposed restrictions which produce such inequalities cannot be sustained."

"It may be argued that appellant will be in no better position when these restrictions are removed, for he may still be set apart by his fellow students. This we think is irrelevant. There is a vast difference—a constitutional difference—between restrictions imposed by the state which prohibit the intellectual commingling of students, and the refusal of individuals to commingle where the state presents no such bar.

". . . The removal of the state restrictions will not necessarily abate individual and group predilections, prejudices and choices. But at the very least, the state will not be depriving appellant of the opportunity to secure acceptance by his fellow students on his own merits."

Got A Flipple Flute Handy?

Interested in combining your recorder-playing ability with two lovely ladies and a professor? If so, notify Miss Zegrafi or Miss Elmore at Chapel Hill 7-606 without hesitation. So what's a recorder? Well, Webster defines it as "a fipple flute with eight holes." Anyway, it's a musical instrument.

The whole episode started when Harry Kear, auditor of the student activities fund, rented a couple of rooms to a female lab assistant and a graduate student.

When the first roomer arrived Kear noted with interest that she possessed one of the comparatively rare recorders. Then the amazing coincidence.

Two weeks later, in came the second roomer, also with a recorder. Now the two are harmonizing in melodious duet and have announced tentative plans to transform themselves into a trio with Prof. U. T. Holmes of the Romance Languages Department as the third member. But there remains a missing descant sound, and if you possess it, unite with the C. H. Recorders Society immediately.

After all, they're the latest rage and, according to Kemp of Kemp's Music Store, you're practically naked without one under your arm.

Integration Will Work

(Editor's Note: This is the second, and final, article in a study on the University of North Carolina campus of segregation and the Supreme Court's decision abolishing it. The Daily Tar Heel will welcome any communications from readers who feel the cross-section opinion of University folks quoted here does not represent a true slice of UNC thought, than the ones expressed here. Here at Carolina, no Negro students applied for admission to the undergraduate school this year, according to Roy Armstrong, director of admissions.

However, Negro students have been admitted to the University School of Law since the summer session of 1951, when five were enrolled.

Since that time, 10 different Negro individuals have attended the school. Four received their law degrees here.

This session one Negro law student is enrolled. He is Romallus Murphy, a second year student from Haveland. Murphy did his undergraduate work at Howard University and one year of his law study.

When asked for his views on the Supreme Court's move against segregation, Murphy said "At first, there will be loud cries from the protagonists and the antagonists who will advance their positions, but after the novelty wears off, everything will work hrmoniously."

In speaking of integration on the undergraduate level, Murphy said that it would definitely work. "The younger the student, the better it would work. They are more flexible, and molded by the hand of circumstance to accept brotherhood with their fellowman.

"When the seal of justice and equality is firmly fixed in the minds of youth, it is difficult to divest them of it," Murphy said.

Medical Student

The University School of Medicine has also admitted Negro students since 1951, with one of those at the present time a senior.

He is Edward O. Diggs, from Winston-Salem: he said "I certainly think it should work. My experience as a graduate student has been a pleasant one. What problems I've had, have been worked out to the mutual satisfaction of all concerned. It should work in the undergraduate school very nicely. There is no need of concern when it should come about. I suspect that things will work more smoothly than people realize, after all, when a person is mature enough to attend a university or college, he's mature enough to adjust to "new situations."

Also at the Med School now is a Sophomore.

He is James Slade from Edenton. He said "I don't see any reason why it shouldn't work. I certainly think it will from the students' standpoint."

Opinions

A small proportion of the student leaders on campus were interviewed and their opinions are as follows:

Marilyn Zager, president of the Independent Women's Council from Greensboro—"If it's not made a great issue and is taken as a matter of course, everything will work out. No trouble will arise at Carolina or other universities because the students will prove or not."

Henry Isaacson, president of the Inter-Fraternity Council from Greensboro—"It should be on a gradual basis and worked up to in time, not overnight. If the undergraduate students will accept as they did the entrance of students of other races, Indians, Orientals it will work as well on the undergraduate level, with a minimum of problems. After the academic situation is settled then the social should be dealt with. This will take time to be settled."

Jack Stevens, president of Chi Phi from Asheville—"Not for 10 years. Most of the students are from conservative towns. It should probably be given time to work at lower levels first. I do favor it in the graduate school. We must plan for it as itis inevitable and should work out some sort of reasonable integration easily."

Bob Jones, president of Phi Kappa Sigma from Durham—"I can't see integration in the grammar schools, but feel that it will work on the college level."

Joan Leonard, president of the Panhellenic Council from Asheville—"It certainly looks as iif the Northern element which has so long criticized the South is accepting the segregation issue flagrantly. North Carolina won't resort to violence. It will be accepted peacefully due to the prevailing liberal feeling. The South will show the North that it's not the seat of prejudice as the Northerners have claimed."

Babbie DiIorio, president of Kappa Delta from Utica, N. Y.—"I don't think it will come to Carolina for a long, long time. Neither do I think that our representatives in Washington should try to dictate in any way to a specific area like the South. The people who live here are better acquainted with the situation than persons so far removed as men from Oregon who can't appreciate the circumstances here. The decision, as it is, had to come. The Supreme Court made the right decision in view of the principles by which our government is set up. We can't preach democracy and ideals of equality if within our legal system they are features that prevent the Negro from equal opportunities under the law. I think that now the decision is made, methods should be devised by the people of the South, of the North, and people associated with the problem as it exists in their own community. Only they are capable."

Jim Crouch, president of Phi Gamma Delta from Jacksonville—"I think that they must face facts, that it must come slower than when they thought as evi denced by the outbreaks. I was surprised that the outbreaks were in the North as they have criticized the South so much. The Supreme Court must realize that it must come slower than they expected."

Daphne Adams, president of Alpha Gamma Delta from Fuquay Springs—"I think the students will accept it with open minds and will make a real efofrt to set a working example in the South for other universities."

Barbara Beasley, president of Chi Omega from Springfield, O. —"It will bring about a lot of problems, but it will work. Any truly intelligent person who goes to college should reconcile his prejudices and go to school with the Negroes. Social problems will arise however."

Carol du Pler, president of Delta Delta Delta, from Davidson — "It worked in the North. Theoretically it's the right thing to do. We must go about it with the right attitude. People have prejudices and it will be difficult."

Manning Muntzing, president of the Inter-Dormitory Council from Morefield, W. Va.—"I think it will work—it's a question of it'll have to work and frankly I think it will."

General opinion of the fraternity leaders on the social question seemed to be that the Negroes should have full rights to set up their own fraternities.

Rev. Charlie Jones

Although not officially a part of the Unievrsity, the Rev. Charlie Jones of the Community Church is greatly concerned with its problems and is an integral part of its worings.

He has this to say: "There are two places where it is practiced to begin; one is in the early grades where they are just starting. Children accept each other as children. The other is in the field of higher education. Stu-

Muntzing Cites IDC Aims

President Manning Muntzing of the Interdormitory Council last night outlined an eight-point program for the year.

Muntzing's speech marked the first meeting of the IDC this year.

"The eight points that I have are just a start. At the finish of this year I hope that our program will have included 50 points or 100," said Muntzing.

Muntzing's first point was concerned with dorm improvements.

In connection with such improvements he said, "Hand in hand with seeking improvements we must also accept the responsibility of preserving and keeping at their best the present facilities."

About the second point of the program, vending machines, Muntzing had this to say: "Dorms have many more vending machines this year than ever before—and more of them are in the right places. Dorm men pay a lot into these ma-

UNC's 161st Birthday Party Will Be Celebrated Tuesday

Carolina is going to have a birthday next week. On Tuesday, the nation's oldest state university will be 161 years of age.

The anniversary of the founding of the University, called University Day, will be celebrated with traditional exercises on the campus Tuesday morning, beginning at 10:50 in the south court of South Building.

Classes and laboratories will be suspended at 10:50 o'clock for the remainder of the day. Classes for the 8, 9 and 10 o'clock hours will be held as usual. Administrative offices of the University will be closed from 10:50 until after lunch.

In announcing the University Day schedule, Chancellor Robert B. House pointed out that it has been customary for the University community to celebrate each year the anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the Old East Building on October 12, 1793.

"The continuity of this celebration," he said, "extends back for many years and is an occasion cherished in memory and thoughts by former students with pride and affection."

Roles in the pageantry, re-enacting in pantomime the Old East cornerstone laying, will be played by members of the Carolina Playmakers.

Music for the occasion will be furnished by the University Band and combined Men's and Women's Glee Clubs.

'Elsie' Toured Chapel Hill Tuesday A.M.

'ELSIE' AND ONE OF HER PURSUERS

Cow Leads Town On Chase

By RON LEVIN

About 1 o'clock Tuesday morning the humid calm that had settled over Chapel Hill was broken by a wierd and rather plaintive mooing and shouts of "There she is." "Who's got the rope?" and "Shine the light over here."

It seems that one of Ted Danzgers rare steaks from the Ranch House had escaped (under its own power) and had invaded the sleepy privacy of downtown Chapel Hill. The poor bewildered bovine had broken loose its moorings and set a course straight for points unknown.

The chase had started back down the airport road and had almost reached an end, when the discontented cow, followed by several chubby policemen puffing in the early morning, regained her second wind and with a fresh and renewed vigor took off like a scared F-86.

As one tired and rather disgusted member of the chase put it, "She ran in and around every alley, house and driveway between the Town Hall and Carolina Inn." Bill Mudd, genial Rathskeller barman, who had been recruited for the chase by Ted, lost one o fhis oversize dirty bucks and was about to retire from the race when two "nice old ladies" offered to carry his shoe for him, and our undaunted hero plunged back into the confusion, laboring under the hinderance of gout and tender feet.

The rather elusive "Elsie" had by this time meandered down by the Chi Psi Lodge, and the gang of pursuers was thinning out. By this time the misplaced menagerie was acquiring a rather varied and motley following consisting of kids on bicycles, barking dogs and two slightly tipsy Duke students who wanted to know who was doing what to whom. They secretly hoped it might be an attempt by some compatriots of theirs to abduct the reluctant Rameses . . . the one with horns and four feet.

Finally, the Bell Tower rang out 3 a. m. ,and upon hearing the bell, as though it was some prearranged sginal, "Elsie" took off for Carrboro, and was last seen near the railroad tracks, heading in a southerly direction.

As this paper goes to press, the cow has not yet been found. So, if you see a stray milk-giver pounding the pavement one night please let Ted know.

Fraternity Rush Meeting

Ed McCurry, IFC rush chairman, said yesterday afternoon that all freshmen and transfer students who are interested in possibly joining one of the 24 social fraternities represented on campus must attend a prerush meeting at 5 o'clock this afternoon in Memorial Hall.

At this meeting all rush procedure and regulations will be outlined and explained.

McCurry explained that this meeting is "an almost essential part of fraternity rushing."

Muntzing Censure Dropped

By LOUIS KRAAR

What could have turned out as a formal censure of Legislator Manning Muntzing by the Student Party caucus ended in a mild, implied disapproval of his cutting certain party meetings, it was learned yesterday.

SP Chairman Joel Fleishman pointed out to the Mnoday night caucus that Muntzing had criticized certain party bills on the Legislature floor — after cutting the committee meetings and caucus sessions at which the bills were discussed.

While agreeing that party members had the right to disagree with bills, Fleishman objected to Muntzing's cutting the meetings.

The caucus — closed to outsiders — ended in a note of party harmony, and Fleishman met in a friendly session with Muntzing later in the evening. At the same time it was agreed that party members should not cut committee meetings and other party functions at which blils were to be considered. Most party members interpreted the latter as "implied disapproval" of Muntzing's absences from meetings.

For some time now, political observers have said that Muntzing and Fleishman represent two elements in the student party. And while neither has admitted nor refuted the statement, they have disagreed on a number of policy matters.

Saturday Is Last Day For Reservations

Saturday will be the last day students can make reservations for the Carolina-Maryland game train, the Graham Memorial Travel Agency said yesterday.

The train, a special one, will leave Raleigh at 4 p. m., Oct. 15, and will arrive in Washington, D. C. ,at 9:30. Arrival will be immediately followed by a Carolina pep rally, which is slated to end up on the Capitol steps.

Saturday morning UNC students will hold a parade in down town Washington, led by the University Band. Saturday afternoon the Tar Heels will play Maryland at College Park, and Saturday night will feature an informal dance at the Shoreham Hotel, sponsored by the Alumni Association.

Round-trip cost for the bus ride from Graham Memorial Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock and the train ride to Washington and back will be $11.75. Tickets for the game can be bought at Woollen Gym for $3.75.

GM's Travel Agency, only place on campus where train tickets may be purchased, said seating charts for organizations or groups of students are available.

Students will come back to The Hill at 12:45 a. m., Sunday, arriving here later in the morning. For those wishing to attend the Redskin game Sunday afternoon, with Charlie Justice Day, another train will pull out of Washington at 6 p. m.

Dean of Women Students Katherine Carmichael has granted late permission to coeds planning to make the trip.

Man Can't Realize Depths He Can Reach---Huxley

Liberate The Human Being, Says Huxley

By ED YODER

The human aim in this era is "to liberate the potentialities in human beings," the distinguished British novelist and essayist Aldous Huxley told Daily Tar Heel reporters in an interview yesterday afternoon.

Relaxed in a big leather chair at the Carolina Inn, where he was waiting to attend a luncheon given in his honor, Huxley said that from a personal standpoint liberating personalities "is the only thing one can do with any hope of success." To act upon the universe is "to act upon oneself" and fight slavery "to our own autonomic nervous systems."

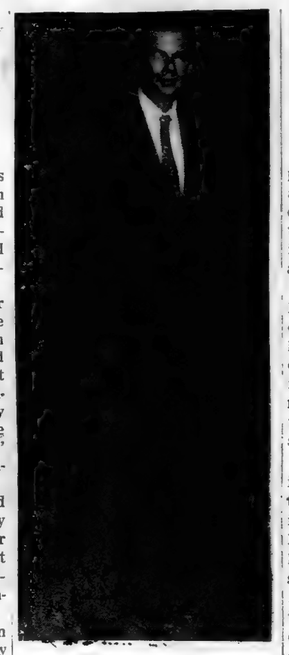
Liberation of the unrealized possibilities of the mind, Huxley said, is "the cogent way to answer totalitarianism." The fallacy that has led men like Stalin and Hitler to power is one of over-simplification, he explained.

The pressure of population on resources, he said, thoughtfully following this line of reasoning, leads to centralization of power in the hands of a dictator. This stands in the same relation to political thought as "over-simplification to intellectual thought."

The problem that confronts education, and one which he planned to touch upon in his lecture last night, is that "it has become primarily verbal." As a result, Huxley explained "we don't train the psycho - physical instrument" which he considers the most important instrument in our relationship to life.

Although Huxley first traveled through the South about 20 years ago, the immediate reason for it's coming to this vicinity is to visit Dr. Rhine's parapsychology laboratory at Duke. He first made the Duke psychologist's acquaintance in 1937, but had been interested previously through his concern, generally, with "psychological freedom," in what Dr. Rhine has been working on. He had met Dr. Rhine because he wanted to know "one of the first systematic workers in the field."

What about the future of parapsychology? Huxley says he is optimistic. At a meeting of philiosophers in Europe this summer, he was amazed by the upswing in interest in the problems of this branch of psychology.



It used to be, he said, that a person who revealed interest in parapsychology was looked upon in the same light as one who had "read an immoral book." That has changed, now, and people are less frightened of it."

Huxley said he is working, at present, on a book of miscellaneous essays—dealing with such topics as education, philosophy and travel — which he hopes to have out by the end of this year.

He is not at work on a novel now, but has two projected ideas. "I'm not sure which to do first," he laughed. One idea is a fantasy. The other, which he went into more detail on, is for a more realistic novel which will treat several generations over a period of about 100 years.

He has toured this campus before "as a tourist," he said, and considers it "quite charming." Right now, however, it's "extremely hot."

In his travels through the Southern regions, he is impressed by the "enormous change for the better. I am struck by the building activity," he said.

WUNC Broadcasts

WUNC campus FM radio station, has scheduled the performance of a new recording of Verdi's "Requiem" on the station's Evening Masterwork program tonight at 10 o'clock. It is believed to be the first broadcast of the new recording in this area.

The performance is conducted by Arturo Toscanini with the NBC Symphony Orchestra. The assisting artists are Herva Nelli, soprano; Fedora Barbieri, mezo-soprano; Giuseppe di Stefano, tenor; and Cesare Siepi ,bass.

The broadcast is scheduled on the University station as a special feature of the regular Evening Masterwork program which begins following the news at 10 o'clock each evening.

Famed Writer Speaks To Full Hill Hall

"This universe of ours is a place where nobody ever gets anything for nothing," said Aldous Huxley last night, speaking to a completely filled auditorium in Hill Hall where even the aisles were packed to capacity.

Speaking on "The Non-Verbal Humanities," the California resident and world figure, advanced his theories that man is not properly educated in the non-verbal fields and that therefore he does not very fully eralize the depths which are possible for his personality.

Huxley began his fully organized and often witty lecture with the statement "every human being is an amphibian." "Without language we should merely be hairless chimpanzees. Indeed, we should be something much worse . . . we should be too clever to be guided by instinct, too self-centered to live in state of animal grace, and therefore condemned to remain forever, frustrated and malignant, between contented ape hood and aspiring humanity."

Huxley told of how every human being is a combination of not-selves, each affecting and be-affected by its associated not-selves. To develop man's personality to its fullest extent, he favors the proper training of the psycho-physical instrument.

"Accordingly, the curriculum of our hypothetical course in the non-verbal humanities will include the following item: Training of the kinesthetic sense. Training of the special senses. Training of memory. Training in control of the autonomic nervous system. Training for spiritual insight."

He gave a careful explanation of these phases and explained of the research being done in each field.

InterFraternity Council Hears Prof. Barrett On Delayed Rush

Yesterday faternoon the Interfraternity Council rushing committee, headed by Ed McCurry, discussed possibilities of instituting delayed rushing for fraternities.

Gerald Barrett, associate professor of business law, spoke to the committee, advocating a delayed rushing system. He pointed out that the majority of boys who come to the University are from rural areas which have small high schools.

Coming from these schools, Barrett said, the boys need a period of time to adjust to university life both academically and socially, since in many cases the new students have not been adequately prepared academically nor have study habits been developed.

The sudden lack of supervised study leaves these boys with a great amount of free time which is a new and novel experience to them, explained Barrett. Before being caught up in fraternity rushing, Barrett felt, they should be given time to learn to divide their time correctly between studies and pleasure.

The matter of extra-curricular activities was another problem which Barrett thought new students face when they enter the university. Most of them do not know about many of the activities, thus they have no basis in selecting ones in which they wish to participate. Barrett pointed out that under the present rushing system freshmen do not have time to find out about campus activities and choose among them. He feels that early rushing tends to influence the boys to participate in those activities which are traditionally participated in by the fraternity which they pledge.

Barrett also said delayed rush gives the new students time to look over the fraternities on campus and decide which men they wish to be with.

Delayed rushing would also aid the fraternities in finding out which freshmen they wish to pledge, Barrett added. Under his system the fraternities would be able to see the grades of the new students as well as get to know the students themselves. Since strict silence would be almost impossible if delayed rushing were instituted, Barrett advocats pleasant social relationships between the fraternity men and the freshmen with no official mention of pledging being made.

After Barrett's talk, members of the committee discussed the advantages and disadvantages of delayed rushing. Some of the points brought out were the financial problem which delayed rushing would present to the fraternities, the fact that freshmen would feel obligated to spend much of their time with fraternity men thus taking much of their time from studying and that delayed rushing would give the new students time to adjust to college life before pledging a fraternity.

YWCA Barbecue

"Beat Georgia" will be the cry at the pep rally Friday night in conjunction with the YWCA Barbecue to be held on McIver's side lawn.

At 7:00 p. m. everybody's urged to support the team by joining in the foot parade. The parade, led by the band, will run down Franklin St. and back to the campus where the actual pep rally will be held in Memorial Hall.

Besides the pep raly, there will be a short talent show featuring Bill Fetzer, ventriloquist; Bill Stone, singer, and Ron Levin with his imitations.

Today's Last Day

Today is the last day juniors may have their pictures made for the 1955 Yackety Yack, editors said.

Pictures will be taken in Graham Memorial basement from 1 to 8 p. m., but no student will be photographed who is not in line before 6:30 if there are many waiting.

Girls wear dark sweaters and pearls, boys wear coats and ties. Senior pictures will be made for five days starting tomorrow and running htrough next Thursday.

Speech-Making At Sutton's Newsstand

"There's nothing to do around here!"

It's one of the most frequent complaints voiced in this town, and the most naive. We heard a student lounging at the magazine rack in Sutton's speak these very words only yesterday.

We wanted to thrust a Daily Tar Heel into his hands and show him what a pregnant week this is, how filled to the brim his schedule would be if he took advantage of "what there is to do around here." We wanted to make a speech, but we abstained; if there had been a speech made, it would have gone like this:

"Why, friend, you must have been out to lunch. Let me review the week for you as it stretches before us.

"Tuesday night: A piano recital at Hill Hall. Wednesday night: A speech by a man named Huxley, one of the greatest writers living. Thursday night: A splendid motion picture at Carroll Hall, "Diary of a Country Priest," or, if your tastes run deeper, a literature lecture by the literate Dr. Claiborne Jones on conflicts between science and religion. Friday afternoon: A barbecue-pep rally flavored with Dixieland, and Friday night: A speech by the up and coming-est politician in the United States, Gov. Robert Meyner of New Jersey. And Saturday, friend, you may sit on the benches at Kenan and see the Tar Heels whip the daylights out of the Bulldogs, with all the attendant Saturday night hooraw.

"Scattered throughout the week you have an opportunity to join the Chapel Hill Astronomers Club or enjoy yourself at two or three delightful sorority coffee breaks or see the films of the Carolina-Tulane game or play your recorder (if you happen to be able) in a recorder quartet or shoot pool at Graham Memorial or watch TV in your dormitory. Or read. Friend, if a book's worth reading it's in the Library or at the Intimate. Or take a walk in Battle Woods or have a game of handball at the gym.

"And the thing you do not comprehend," we would have told this man, "is that this is no unusual week. They're all like this. Don't just stand there, friend. Go you forth. Have a ball."

Very Funny!

They're still there and they'll set your teeth on edge. At any comic book stand, sagging with wares to attract the kiddy's eye, you may see socalled "comic" magazines whose covers and contents reveal, on perusal, the acme in sadism and harsh bloodkilling.

This sort of "funny" book has been tolerated on he newssattnds for at least 10 or 12 years. (We can remember back to our own comic book reading stage). But public taste seems of late to be awakening to the wretchedness of some comic book literature. People of good taste agree that these magazines should be dispatched somehow from availability to children. Thus, the end has been agreed on; the means for reaching the end very definitely have not.

One faction would attempt outright censorship without compromise. The other faction is against outright censorship for the very reason that it, in itself, would mark a back sliding from their own unalterable opposition to censorship.

Does some via media present itself? Can we at the same time refuse compromise with the evil of sadistic funnybooks and compromise with the evil of censorship?

The answer, we believe, lies in an organization of the forces of good taste to pressurize the publishers of comic books. A monstrous boycott by responsible citizens and parents would soon persuade the publishers that it is unprofitable to put out comic books that offend the sense of decency.

Mere impractical idealism, you say? Maybe so, but it is a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Student Party Censure Meet Is Unity Prod

Louis Kraar

THE STUDENT party made peace with itself this week.

After an obvious split between Manning Muntzing and Joel Fleishman within the party, the SP has quietly — and perhaps permanently — reunified. The SP caucus met briefly behind closed doors Monday night. Joel Fleishman started the discussion.

Muntzing, said Fleishman, has been cutting committee meetings to play bridge and has skipped caucus. Then, continued the party chief, Muntzing challenged SP bills on the Legislature floor.

FLEISHMAN WENT on to say that it was okay for a legislator to object to bills, but cutting the preliminary meetings at which the bills were considered was not okay

Before the discussion was over, there was a general feeling that the whole session had rapped Muntzing on the knuckles lightly. But unity came later as far as Fleishman and Muntzing were concerned.

THE TWO Student Party members met later in the evening and had a brief, private talk. And, perhaps, this short talk did as much for unity as the knuckle-rapping session.

And still later in the evening, Muntzing, Fleishman and a few others dropped by this paper's print shop. Eevryone was all smiles.

THIS REPORTER wonders just what effect the Monday night closed caucus will have on Muntzing's political future.

It would seem that if the party is truly unified and the Fleishman-Muntzing camps are one, Muntzing's future in the party is as good ever. Fleishman, an agile politician in his own right, has little political future outside the party organization—because he is a senior.

Meantime, Muntzing has another year.

STUDENT PARTY leaders have for years dreamed of winning both the Legislature and the executive posts in the same election. The SP unity move is probably an effort to fulfill this hope.

Currently, the SP controls the Legislature but not the top executive posts. The last SP student body president was Henry Bowers in 1950-51. The University Party had a majority in the Legislature during Bowers' term—just as the SP does this year during Creasy's administration.

DESPITE THE lack of any Legislature power, the University Party seems to be moving along with plans for a legislative program.

It would seem that the UP will have to draw power from Creasy's potential veto of SP bills and cooperation from the rival SP. Thus far, Creasy has played a rather passive role in his party. Exeept for a speech against any anti-secrecy measure, the student body president has been in the background politically.

Vice President Martin Jordan, a UP men, hasn't used his presidency of the Legislature to any political advantage. And while the legislative chairman should be fair (as Jordan certainly is), the UP could very effectively use this post to further its legislative program.

BOTH PARTIES could do much to make the student Legislature a forum for problems about which students are concerned. For instance, last spring when coed drinking was the burning campus issue, not one word of debate on the subject was heard in the student Legislature.

Such is the campus political scene now—a peaceful Student Party and a planning University Party. With Muntzing and Fleishman back together on the SP team and the UP team getting its legislative signals worked out, things should be interesting from now on.

'Pleased To Meet You, I Think'

New U. S. Policy

Drew Pearson

LA PAZ, Bolivia. — Henry Holland, Eisenhower's Assistant Secretary of State, stood on the balcony of the Presidential Palace facing a great crowd of people in the square below.

Behind him in the President's reception room the ceiling was pock-marked with the scars of machine-gun fire. Even a marble - topped table was cracked by a bullet—reminder of the precarious life led by the presidents of Bolivia.

But beside Holland stood President Victor Paz Estenssorro, who has been in office longer than any other recent president and who had traveled with Holland past cheering Indians over 300 miles of New Bolivian highway. As a result of that ovation, there could be no question in Holland's mind or that of any other observer that the President was the hero of Boliva's Indians. And the Indians comprise 90 per cent of Bolivia's population.

Looking down at the crowd below the President's balcony, Assistant Secretary Holland was called upon to make a speech. The applause which greeted his introduction was formal and polite. There were no huzzas from the assembled Indians.

Holland, who speaks perfect Spanish, was also formal and polite — at first. He paid the usual tribute to the beautiful city of La Paz. Then he continued:

"I am most happy to be here with your President and with you — you whom, if you will permit me, I should like to call 'companeros'."

The Two Henrys

The crowd went wild. From that point on the Assistant Secretary of State was the Indians' friend, the President's friend and the friend of the "Movement National Revolutionary." For the word "companeros" while not quite the same as "comrades" is close enough to it to mean that Holland identified himself with the new Bolivian land reform, the seizure of the tin mines and the other drastic measures enforced by the MNR.

Later Holland put himself even closer. In his speech he not only praised the "National Revolutionary" program of President Paz but in a conversation with leftist Labor Minister Lechin he was quoted as saying: "I now consider myself a member of the Party."

This reference to the MNR Party obviously was meant as a joke on Holland's part, but it was not so considered by Bolivians. Bolivian exiles and opponents of President Paz stormed with rage. Many Americans lifted their eyebrows. But Bolivian supporters of the President — and they make up the great majority — were delighted.

Probably stanch GOP conservatives back in the U. S. A. also would have raised their eyebrows when they read El Diario's comment next day that "Henry Holland's visit was the most successful since that of Henry Wallace."

Nevertheless that was the general consensus. For the former Vice-President had endeared himself to Bolivians not only by playing three sets of tennis on the same day he arrived in the two-mile altitude of La Paz, but by demanding that the tin mines increase wages to miners if the United States was to buy more tin.

Careful Eisenhower Policy

Henry Holland's endorsement of the National Revolutionary government of President Paz was no accident. His speech was very carefully considered and represents the most important policy the Nnited States has taken in South America for some time — namely, to back popular political parties whose reforms, even though radical, may prevent Communism.

The fact that Holland was not talking for himself alone was indicated by Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper, an Iowa conservative, who, speaking at Comarapa, along the new American -built Andean highway, said:

"I confess that I came down here with some misgivings. But after seeing fou, Mr. President, and the support given you by the people, I have come to realize that you are fighting for principles.

"I have traveled in 56 countries," continued Senator Hickenlooper, "and never have I seen more effort on behalf of a country than yours on behalf of Bolivia. If there is any service I can render in my small capacity, please call on me."

Ike's Brother Decided

Actually, the Eisenhower decision to support the Movement National Revolutionary was made one year ago by President Eisenhower's brother, Milton. Visiting La Paz in the summer of 1953, Milton decided that President Paz was the best bet Bolivia had against Communism, that the MNR land reforms were overdue, that the United States should not interfere with the Nationalization of the tin mines.

Tin, Milton Eisenhower also decided, is vital to the American housewife and to American industry. And Bolivian tin would become our lone major supplier —if Southeast Asia goes Communist.

The Eisenhower decision and the Holland approach to carrying it out are not unlike that made by another conservative Republican in another Latin-American country.

The Ram Sees

The so-called leniency bill up before the student Legislature tonight is nothing more than an invitation to cheat. Lt promises coddling of first-offense Honor System violators, and undermines the entire Honor System by letting potential cheaters know beforehand that if caught they will get a second chance. Honor cannot be compromised. There is no middle ground in dealing with a clear-cut violation of the Honor System. A person who has reached college age knows the difference between right and wrong. He should know that when he cheats, lies or steals he will be dealt with severely. If he doesn't know this, he will be apt to slip into his high school ways and take a chance on the first offense. This becomes much more likely if he has been told that his punishment will be a slap on the wrist. The student Legislature has an opportunity tonight to show clear, mature judgment in upholding the Honor System to the fullest. The Ram hopes his representatives in the Legislature will rise to the occasion.

The air seems to be right fogged up over this business of segregating our two Negro students into a private four-room section of Steele Dormitory. The Chancellor did not see fit to unfog it, which he could have done by admitting that he set the policy of segregation. If he had made a clear statement on the matter, the discussion might have ended there. As it stands now, our "segregation issue" may be meat for discussion for some time to come.

The only thing wrong with the Pine Room is that infernal juke box which blares off and on all evening. The Ram likes to do a little relaxed studying over a cup of hot java, but he has discovered that the Pine Room is not the right place to try it. Bushy says we should be more tolerant; after all, some people like the music, and most people who go to the Pine Room in the evening are trying to get away from the books for a while. This seems all right. Things could be worse. The juke box could have hillbilly selections.

Where Are The Waters Of Truth?

Ron Levin

Everyone is concerned about the identity of the "Ram." Actually this has always been the case throughout history. People don't mind the truth being printed as long as they know who it is writing it. Then they can retaliate, and call names, and in general act like insecure twelve year old children. When no one knows the source of a column that digs out the dirt where it can be seen, it worries them . . . and I'm glad. Maybe instead of calling names, they'll change names.

Hello, Mr. and Mrs. Chapel Hill, Ed and Coed. Here are a few things you might ponder over and wonder why isn't something done. (It never is.)

I don't know whether or not the boys up at South have spoken to the zoology gang over at Wilson Hall lately, but if they did they'd find out that those bees in "Y Court" are packing away food for their expected younguns; and next year unless something is done there will be more bees than now.

Why don't they fix that water fountain on Franklin across from Milton's? It says on it, "The waters of truth flow freely . . . drink when and where you may." The darn thing has been empty ever since I was a freshman. (And believe me that was a long time ago!)

Some folks, the majority of whom were not students, have become peeved at the popular music played in GM over the loudspeakers in the main lounge. Result? No more popular music after seven o'clock at night. Who was that place built for anyway? I'm beginning to wonder.

* * *

Chapel Hill is a play. The play is four years long. The actors are portraying intellectuals, scholars, aesthetes, and human beings. The majority of them fail miserably in their roles. As every other play, it should be criticized, and I have. However, the excellent performance turned in by a few of the leading roles is worth sitting through the sham and travesty of the rest.

YOU Said It

On The Ram

Editor:

I should like to take this opportunity to thank you for what is generally a very interesting editorial page and also to make a few comments on what we might call "the Ram fracas." So-and-so criticizes the Ram, his (or her) letter is published in The Daily Tar Heel, the Ram replies, and Louis Kraar comes in and sews up the ends with a few remarks on unsigned letters and the like. That The Daily Tar Heel should publish an unsigned letter is, in itself, rather unusual. Few papers will, unless someone is busy grinding an ax.

So-and-so is unhappy about the Ram's secret identity and the Ram does a pretty good job of silencing the mysterious letter-writer. If said letter-wrier is really unhappy about the whole affair, he can always take it out on the editor, who, in publishing an unsigned column, is taking the responsibility for what is said therein upon himself.

I personally have nothing against the Ram. As a new undergraduate transfer student I am still rather isolated from the campus. And so far the Ram has attacked no institution or personality particularly close to my heart—so far. And if Louis Kraar thinks that the Ram, in leaving his column unsigned, will thereby conceal his authorship to Army Intelligence, I believe on the basis of past experience that he is sadly mistaken.

It is my belief that the Ram has a perfect right to remain unknown. Were his name to be known, the amount of dirt that he could dig up would be much, much smaller. But you might take care, Dear Editor, it sometimes happens that people who publish unsigned letters find themselves in hot water—not to mention what can happen to people who publish unsigned columns!

'The Egyptian': Well, It's Big

Carl Williams

For his first personal production since "The Razor's Edge," Darrell F. Zanuck, the Omnipotent Voice at 20th Century-Fox, labored nearly three years to bring "The Egyptian," Mike Waltari's mammouth study of sin and transgression in lusty old Egypt, to the screen.

Obviously, it was a dedicated and inspired desire to produce a masterpiece (as the Publicity Dept. working under Mr. Zanuck tells us it is), but in spite of the millions of dollars spent, millions of costumes made, millions of authentic props assembled, millions of extras employed, all of which were intended to fill the giant CinemaScope screen with "greatness," the best that can be said for the total results of this noble ambition is that it all seems a pity and a waste. For "The Egyptian" not only falls short of being a film masterpiece, it isn't even a good movie by less lofty standards.

The major fault lies not in the physical production of the movie, for pictorially it is lavish and beautiful, but in the fact that all this superabundance of spectacle constantly gets in the way of the twenty-odd plots treading their way through it. With so much scenery and stuff, it appears that the writers felt obligated to tell equally as much story. And as if the novelist didn't give them enough to depict, they are determined to do him double; so, where the book gets wordy, the movie gets wordier; where the book becomes involved the movie becomes cluttered; and where the book stalls, the movie drops dead.

It's reasonable to assume that in an earnest attempt to follow faithfully the original, the makers of this opus discarded the fact that literature and the visual screen are two entirely different mediums of art and by adapting one to the expression of the other certain necessary changes are inevitable. This fact has always made me resent the argument made by many that Hollywood is always ruining fine works of literature because they don't film most novels or plays just like they were originally written. The screen as an independent agency of course has a technique and a method of its own, peculiar to itself, for the creation of its particular form of art. And it is when the advantages and the differences that separate the screen from its other allied arts are employed to the fullest potential that truly great films are made.

But in the case of "The Egyptian," the movies' primary asset, the quality of action and motion, is totally ignored, and the film ponders on, absorbed in its own grandeur and never gets anywhere. The feeling I got from seeing "The Egyptian" was that I was watching a book come alive literally word for word. And as if this weren't tiring enough, every actor in it, save two, Gene Tierney who is splendid as the evil Princess Baketamon, and Judith Evelyn who is even better as the Queen Mother, seem so burdened with all the plot they have to unravel that they look as though they will fall with fatigue any moment. As for Edmund Purdom, who plays the title role, he does it so indifferently that it is impossible to say whether he is good or bad. He doesn't do anything. He is just there. Which, under the circumstances, is job enough. Bella Darvi, Victor Mature, and Michael Wilding all seem hell-bent to prove which of the three can possibly be the worst one in it. The verdict is a toss-up.

Briefly, the total effect of the innumerable subplots is as to wit: Some benign physician who lived 13 centuries before the birth of Christ and gets involved in so many problems that it takes nearly a full lifetime to solve any of them. The first of which concerns the seeking of a career worthy of his elevated nature. This pursuit leads him to accept the position of family doctor to the Pharaoh—the first of his many great mistakes. For at the Palace Royal he is surrounded by as odd a collection of undesirables as you are likely to find anywhere.

First, there is the Pharaoh himself, a mentally deficient fanatic who is playing havoc with all the old gods by founding a new faith, the worshiping of Aton, or the One God. (This gives the scenarists a perfect opportunity to rattle on for hours about the ethics of Christianity. All this, remember, is the ladies at the Palace are hot to seduce our pure

Next comes that old demon sex, and while all the ladies at the Palace are not to seduce our pure hero he is busy dividing his time between an understanding tavern maid and a not so understanding gold-digger. Then comes a variety of other tribulations that consume reel after reel until we eventually arirve at the race issue which rears its ugly head during the last few minutes.

Borrowing freely from "Samson and Delilah," the problem of strength brought to ruin by an evil woman and a perfectly absurd lion hunt through the hot sands of Egypt; "The Robe," the massacre of thousands of religious innocents and the redemption of a corrupted man by a dedicated woman; and "Quo Vadis," which used every cliche still employed in "The Egyptian"; Darrell F. Zanuck and director Michael Curtiz fashioned a movie in which every scene, except for the change in locale, reminds you of something you've seen many times before. For me, "The Egyptian" is without taste, talent, or originality and is completely boring.

By the way, it is showing today, Friday, and Saturday at the Carolina Theatre and you had better go early for good seats, for the theatre will probably be packed.

Quote, Unquote

Historians may dispute it, but the last shot of the Civil War was fired in 1954—not in 1865. It happened in the living room of the Ishmael Lynch home in Port Gibson, Mass. a Civil War shell, found long ago on a near by battlefield, fell from a mantel and exploded, blasting holes in the floor, walls and ceiling. No Union or Confederate casualties.

Historians also will be interested to know that George Washington and Benjamin Franklin met again in 1954—not in Independence Hall, but in Richmond, Va. Their trucks collided on a downtown street.

Frosh Gridders Open Season Against Baby Gamecocks

Over The Hill

By FRED BABSON

The coaching staff's pre-season worries concerning Carolina's defense seem to have been without cause, so far. With the season two games old, the Tar Heels lead the Atlantic Coast Conference in total defense and pass defense. They are third in rushing defense. The Blue and White is currently running a respectable third in the conference's total offense race.

The chief reasons for the locals' 'show' position in total offense are Marshall Newman and Connie Gravitte. Quarterback Newman is in the runner-up spot behind Clemson's Don King in individual total offensive performance, while Halfback Gravitte is fifth. Slippery Connie leads the loop in rushing, boasting a healthy 7.2-yard average.

The present defensive picture appears bright for the Tar Heels, although reservations must be made for the mediocre opposition encountered thus far. Georgia should not pose an outstanding problem for the Carolina defense this Saturday, having tallied a modest 34 points in three games, defeating Florida State 14-6, Clemson 14-7, and losing to Texas A&M, 6-0. This explains Coach Barclay's emphasis on offense, with an accent on the aerial phase, in practice this week.

In an effort to facilitate the manufacture of more TD's, the grid mentor has been experimenting with a variety of lineups down on Navy Field. Most significant in the juggling has been Len Bullock's piloting of the first team. Bullock, used sparingly thus far, has not compiled the impressive offensive record that Newman has; but the passes of Bullock have found their mark a greater percentage of times than have Newman's. In conjunction with the shake-up designed to provide a more formidable passing threat, Norman Lane has been running one of the first team end positions. Lane has snagged four passes this year, which is tops in that department. End Doug Malone has also been seeing first team action in practice. Still providing keen competition for starter Bill Kirkman's pivot post is George Stavnitsky, who has been running with the first eleven for the past two days.

Georgia departs from their home base today via train. They will work out here tomorrow. The Tar Heels have lost two in a row to the Bulldogs, following a 0-0 tie in 1950. No game was played in 1952. The last time Carolina turned the trick was in '49 by 21-14. Since the series began UNC has won 11, lost nine, and tied twice. Parlay sheets favor the locals Saturday by six points.

Two forfeits marred the 4:00 Intramural schedule yesterday afternoon, as Old East and Everett—1 scored 1-0 victories at the expense of Lewis—2 and TMA.

In the remaining games. SAE—1 unveiled a powerful scoring attack to humble Chi Psi—2 to the tune of 24-6. Ned Hardison, with two touchdowns and Milo Abercrombie, with a touchdown, a safety, and and extra point led the SAE attack. The game was fairly even through the first half, with the score reading SAE 9, Psi—2 6, but the SAE game proved too much for Chi Psi, as they scored 15 points in the ifnal period.

GEORGE "BUDDY" SASSER, quarterback, who is expected to spark the University of North Carolina Freshman offense as they open their season in Laurinburg tonight against the University of South Carolina Frosh. The 155 pound, 5-11, Sasser was picked on the high school All-American squad as a senior at Conway, S. C. High School last year.

Barclay Makes Definite Changes In Tar Heel Lineup For Saturday

(AP)—UNC Coach George Barclay who used a scrimmage with the frosh yesterday to experiment with a revised lineup said today that all of the changes will stick.

"Len Bullock will be our starting quarterback Saturday with Doug Malone at right end and George Stavnitski at center," he said.

Don Klochak, Carolina's 213-lb. first string fullback, suffered a brain concussion in yesterday's practice session. It could not be learned whether or not Klochak will be ready to start Saturday against Georgia. The hard-running sophomore was admitted t othe infirmary.

Barclay, whose Tar Heels clash with Georgia here in Kenan Stadium Saturday, had his squad banging heads today in what will probably be the team's last heavy workout before the weekend encounter.

The first and second strings led by Quarterbacks Bullock and Marshall Newman respectively, took turns going against the third stringers. Most impressive runner of the day was Left Half Larry Parker.

Earlier the Tar Heels, who are currently ranked sixth in the nation in pass defense, took a lengthy look at Georgia pass patterns.

Korshun Breaks Leg

Al Korshun, second string fullback for Coach Marvin Allen's soccer team, was lost for the season when he broke his leg during a scrimmage Monday afternoon.

Korshun, a sophomore from Goldsboro, saw quite a bit of action against Fort Bragg last Friday in the Booters first game.

His injury was also quite a blow to Coach Sam Barnes' wrestling plans. Korshun won a freshman numeral last year participating in the 167 lb. and heavyweight classes. He was expected to wrestle in the 167 lb. division this year, but the injury may keep him out for at least part of the season.

Clash With SC In Laurinburg

Injury Plagued Squad Seeks 1st Win Tonight

The University of North Carolina freshman football team, a bit short on man power due to practice injuries to key personnel, will get its season under way tonight in Laurinburg, N. C., against the South Carolina Frosh. Game time is 8 p. m.

Tar Baby Coach Ralph Floyd will be forced to do without the services of five potential starters. On the injury list are End John Schroeder, Tackle Paul Blazer, Center Jim Jones, Halfback Wallace ale and FullbackV John Gaca.

Vale, a spunky 185-pounder from Farmville, Va., sustained a kidney injury in a scrimmage with the varsity several weeks ago and has been declared out for the season. Schroeder has an ankle injury, Blazer a broken nose, Jones a shoulder injury, and Gacaz an infected knee. All five are definitely out for the South Carolina encounter.

Roland Goff, a former halfback from Dunn, N. C., will take over Gaca's fullback chores, with Valdese's Joe Temple and Steve Kupchick of Scranton, Pa., handling the halfback duties. Buddy Sasser, a 155-pound high school All-American from Conway, S. C., will be the quarterback.

Payne, an All-Stater last year at Norfolk, Va., tips the scales at 195 and stands 6-2. Olin, the oldest man on the squad at 22, outweighs his running mate by 29 pounds.

The tackle slots are the heaviest single position on the team, with Russavage weighing in at 222 and Smith at 214. Both hail from Pennsylvania. At 6-4, Russaavge is also the tallest man on the club.

Bailey, from Haines City, Fla., and Lineberger, from Belmont, N. C., give the Tar Babies a couple of All-Americans at the guard slots. Both are just above the 200 pound level.

Llewellyn will be the light man in the startinf forward wall. The Kingston, Pa., gridder weighs only 185.

MY COUSIN HASKELL

I have a cousin named Haskell Krovney, a sweet, unspoiled country boy, who has just started college. A letter arrived from him this morning which I will reprint here because I know that Haskell's problems are so much like your own. Haskell writes:

Dear Haskell (he thinks my name is Haskell too),

I see that you are writing a column for Philip Morris cigarettes. I think they are keen cigarettes which taste real good and which make a pleasant noise when you open the pack, and I want to tell you why I don't smoke them.

It all started the very first day I arrived at college. I had just gotten off the train and was walking across the campus, swinging my cardboard valise whistling snatches of Valencia, Barney Google, and other latest tunes, admiring statues, petting dogs and girls, when all of a sudden I ran into this fellow with a blue jacket, gray pants, and white teeth. He asked me was I a freshman. I said yes. He asked me did I want to go places on campus, make a big name for myself, and get pointed at in fashionable ballrooms and spas. I said yes. He said the only way to make all these keen things happen was to join a fraternity. Fortunately he happened to have a pledge card on him, so he pricked my thumb and I signed. He didn't tell me the name of the fraternity or where it is located, but I suppose I'll find out when I go active.

Meanwhile this fellow comes around every week and collects his dues which are $100. Lately he has been collecting $10 extra each week. He says this is a fine because I missed the meeting. When I remind him that I can't go to meetings because I don't know where the house is, he twists my arm.

I have never regretted joining the fraternity because it is my dearest wish to be somebody on campus and get pointed at in spas, but you can see that it isn't cheap. It wouldn't be so bad if I slept at the house, but you must agree that I can't very well sleep at the house if I don't know where the house is.

I have had to rent a room. This room is not only hellishly expensive, but it isn't the kind of room I wanted at all. What I was looking for was someplace reasonably priced, clean, comfortable, and within easy walking distance of classes, the downtown shopping district, the movies, and my home town. What I found was a bedroom in the home of a local costermonger, which is dingy, expensive, uncomfortable, inconvenient, and I don't even get to use the bed till six o'clock in the morning when my Landlord goes off to mong his costers.

Well, anyhow, I got settled and started going to classes. But first I had to pay my tuition. This came to a good deal more than the advertised rates. When I asked the bursar what the extra money was for, he told me lab fees. When I said I wasn't taking any labs, he said I was taking psychology which counted as a lab because they used white mice. When I offered to bring my own mice, of which there are plenty in my room, he twisted my arm.

So I paid the man and went to my classes where I found that all my professors had spent busy summers writing brand new textbooks. Over to the bookstore I went, saw the prices on the textbooks, and collapsed in a gibbering heap. At length I recovered and made indignant demands to speak to the proprietor, but they told me the Brinks truck had already taken him home for the day. There was nothing for it but to buy the books.

Next I turned to romance—and found it. Harriet, her name was—a great, strapping girl. I first spied her leaning against the statue of the Founder, dozing lightly. I talked to her for several hours without effect. Only when I mentioned dinner did she stir. Her milky little eyes opened, she raised a heavy arm, seized my nape, and dragged me off to a dimly lit place called The Trap where everything was a la carte. She ordered cracked crab ($1.75), sirloin chateaubriand ($7.00), a scuttle of french fries (18¢ the french fry), an artichoke (30¢ the leaf), and compote (80¢ the prune).

After dinner she lapsed into a torpor from which I could not rouse her, no matter how I tried. I banged my glass with my fork. I did bird calls of North and South America. I pinched her huge pendulous jowl. I rubbed the legs of my corduroy pants together . . . But nothing worked, and finally I had to sling her over my shoulder and carry her to the girls dormitory, to the vast amusement of everybody along the route.

But it was not the jeers of bystanders that bothered me. It was the hernia. Fortunately, medical care for students is provided free at the college dispensary; all I had to pay for were a few extras, like X-rays, anaesthesia, operating room, forceps, hemostats, scalpels, sponges, catgut, linens, towels, amortization, and nurses. They would not, however, let me keep the nurses.

So, dear, cousin, if you see me these days without a Philip Morris cigarette, it is not because I don't like Philip Morris cigarettes. I do. I flip when I taste their mild rare vintage tobaccos. But I can't afford cigarettes. I can't even afford matches, what with fraternity dues and room rent and lab fees and textbook prices and my girl Harriet and medical care.

Well, I'll write you again soon. Keep 'em flying.

Yr. Cousin,

Haskell

WC Girls Need Water

GREENSBORO—Carolina boys dating here in Greensboro this weekend may find that their Woman's College girl friends couldn't bathe before the date.

A drought in the Greensboro area prompted City Manager James R. Townsend to limit residential water consumption to 15 gallons per day per person. And WC's student Legislature this week passed a bill requesting the girls to follow the rationing order.

Lynda Simmons, editor of The Carolinian, WC's student paper, told The Daily Tar Heel yesterday that the girls "are real patriotic about the whole thing."

According to Miss Simmons, "patriotic" WC students are:

(1) Bathing every other day only, and using just one or two inches of water.

(2) Taking Army-type showers (turning on the water to get wet, turning it off, soaping up, and turning back on the water to wash off the soap).

(3) Not running the water while brushing their teeth.

(4) Eating from trays in the cafeteria—to keep the tablecloths clean.

The gallon limit to water consumption had the WC girls counting the gallons for various water-consuming activities. WC sources said that it took three gallons to flush a toilet and eight gallons for an average bath.

A Chapel Hill source said yesterday that when the water shortage was first announced, WC authorities predicted that if the drought continued another 15 days school would have to be suspended.

Shortly after the announcement, the Chapel Hill source said, two freshman girls left the showers in their dorm running all night.

Meanwhile, six truckloads of Civil Defense Administration pipe, pumps, tools and other emergency equipment arrived in Greensboro to start a relief water line from High Point Municipal Lake Brandt watershed.

And William Reeves, city public safety director, was reported to have contacted cloud-shooting rainmakers.

Monday night's closed caucus agreed that party differences would be settled within the party itself and that the meeting would be kept secret. Both Fleishman and Muntzing made speeches on party unity.

While Fleishman is head of the party, there has been some question as to his powr since, as a senior, he has no political future on the campus. On the other hand, Muntzing—while not trying to overthrow Fleishman — has been an ardent student government worker and has another year after this one.

Fleishman is essentially a liberal in national political issues, while Muntzing holds to more conservative national political views.

As a legislator, Muntzing has been characterized by his carefulness and concern for details in bills. He heads the committee which handled the television purchases for dorms and is Inter-dormitory Council President.

Fleishman is president of the Di Senate, chairman of the Carolina Forum, as well as titular head of the party. He is also in the Legislature and introduces many of the party-sponsored measures.

chines. I feel they should share in the profits and that we must work towards this end.

We must constantly seek ways in which we can improve ourselves structurally," was Muntzing's statement on internal organization, the third point.

Concerning the fourth point of the program, visiting agreements, Muntzing said, "We must this year look very deeply into this matter of women visiting in our social rooms, see what solutions may be arrived at and proceed towards those ends.

"We must get the men and women together on this campus; we must provide entertainment for them; in other words we must offer a program," was Muntzing's statement on the social program, the program's fifth point.

The sixth point of the program concerned the relationship of IDC members to each other. On this Muntzing said, "We must be able to get together and pool our ideas, to talk over situations, and to be united in our efforts."

"I hope that through Ray Jefferies and Roy Hall we will be able to work closely with the dorm managers and advisors in the coming year," Muntzing stated about the dorm managers and advisors, the seventh point.

Of the eighth point, the individual dorm programs, Muntzing said, "This is possibly one of the most important fields, for there is so much that a dorm can do for its residents."

Muntzing ended his speech with these words, "Together I believe we can do the job for which we have been elected if we think deeply, work tirelessly and act accordingly."

Committee Votes To Hold Over Reid's Honor Council Measure

The Ways and Means Committee meeting yesterday afternoon failed to reach a decision on the Reid Honor Council bill.

During the prolonged discussion, David Reid, (SP), sponsor of the bill pointed out that the bill would grant the honor councils more flexibility. Chairman of the honor councils disagreed with him.

The committee voted to hold the bill over until next week's 3 p. m. meeting.

At that meeting, members of the faculty, administration, honor councils and other interested parties will be invited to attend. The committee at that time will try to clarify the purposes of the bill.

A bill sponsored by Joel Fleishman on a student government responsibilities conference was also held over to the next meeting for clarification by its author.

The committee voted to accept three bills without overlong discussion. The bills were for the authorization of the establishment of a seond State of the Campus Conference; the establishment of a committee to investigate the need for maid service in UNC dormitories and the establishment of a committee to investigate gasoline prices in Chapel Hill.

Polls Committee Underway

Under the leadership of Chairman Annette Levenson, the Polls Committee of Student Government is once again read for business.

The job of the Polls Committee is to find out just what everybody thinks about almost anything from football to formals. Full details on committee services can be obtained that the GMAB office on the second floor of the Graham Memorial Building. Rll campus clubs and organizations are welcome to make use of the committee.

A personal appeal was voiced by Chairman Levenson to campus groups and departments for any and all help and suggestions toward better service and wider coverage on campus and in town. She also added an invitation to all interested students to take an active part in the "Information please" project.

The Polls Committee was cited by Gordon Forester, President of the GMAB, as being an important part of varied and useful service offered to the students by the Graham Memorial.

Such training, Huxley said is definitely desirable, and as to the question of practibility, he said, "I can give no answer."

Such training requires at this time much research, and "It is always possible that the disintegrative effects of the kind of civilization under which our technology compels us to live, may completely cancel out the constructive effects of even the best and completest system of formal education. Time alone will show. Meanwhile we can only hope for the best."

Administration Decided On Segregation Policy In 1951

Pres. Gray Has 'No Intention' Of Changing University Policy

By DICK CREED

President Gordon Gray said yesterday that the administration's policy of segregating Negro students living in dormitory rooms came out of a meeting of administration officials in his office in he summr of 1951.

Gray stated further that "there is no intention" of changing this policy.

"In the summer of 1951 when the University faced for the first time the fact that there wwould be Negro students in the University, there was a lot of discussion," said Gray.

"The matter was attended by considerable differences of opinion," he continued. "The matter of housing," he said, "was discussed along with that of eating in the dining hall and the use of classrooms."

Gray said there was no provision made about eating and classrooms. "There didn't seem to be need of any," he said.

"The decision came to reserve space for Negro students," said Gray. "As far as I know the space is still reserved," he said.

He said that there were no "specific directions" or "written orders," but that after the meeting it was "understood" what was to be done. Since that time, he said, "there has been no serious discussion" toward changing the policy.

Trustees Aware

"I have no doubt that the board of trustees in one way or the other were made aware of the decisions that were made," said Gray.

The President said that he didn't know how many Negro students there are on the campus. "I have not pre-occupied myself with the matter," he said.

Gray explained that there was no record of the meeting or of the decisions made, and that the facts concerning them came from his "recollection."

President Gray presented the facts on the administration's policy after three University officials — Housing Officer James E. Wadsworth, Dean of Student Affairs, Fred H. Weaver and Chancellor Robert Burton House—refused to comment for publication on the segregated third floor south section of Steele Dormitory.

Two Negro students are living in two of the rooms in the section, while the other two rooms in the section remain empty.

Cold Wave Replaces Heat Here

It seems that our cold wave originated way out in Kansas several days ago, according to the Raleigh-Durham Airport.

The surge of cold air has moved slowly across the mid-West and then speeded up Wednesday night to hit the Carolinas. It will last through today and warm up tomorrow afternoon and Sunday, according to the weatherman.

No more rain is exepcted this week. Wednesday's showers produced only traces over the state with the heaviest rainafll in the eastern portion. Cherry Point received the most rain with 1.5 inches.

Paul Bowers, airport official, said that temperatures over the state last night ranged from 48 in the Winston-Salem Durham-Raleigh are to 60 at Harris.

Temperatures ranged from 58 to 63 all over the state yesterday, including the Chapel Hill area.

Council President Manning Muntzing announced Tuesday's activities as follows:

At 8:30 Tuesday night, the Interdormitory Council, in coopreation with Carolina Playmakers, will sponsor a free "preview performance of "The Crucible," Playmakers' first production of the season. The preview showing will be held at Playmakers Theatre. Two hundred and 85 dormitory men have been invited to attend the showing.

GMAB Series First Movie Is 'Country Priest'

By RUTH DALTON

The Graham Memorial fall film series began last night with the showing of the French production, "The Diary of A Country Priest."

The film, which starred Claude Laydu as the priest, was the portrayal of a sensitive young man in his first parish. He can eat nothing but stale bread soaked in wine, a diet which causes his parishioners to believe that he is a drunkard.

He does manage to convert the local countess and her "she-devil" of a daughter, in the words of the local bishop. But not without the rest of the family suspecting trickery.

The priest's death at the end of the scenario from stomach cancer does show his final peace of mind, however.

The pathos of the entire film is rather heavy, but is made up for by the delicate perception of the French photographers and the relief from the verbosity of our own American movies.

Carroll Hall, where the film was shown at 8 p. m., was well filled and the audience appeared to grasp some of the meaning of the exceptionally sensitive drama.

New Jersey Governor Speaks Tonight

GOVERNOR ROBERT B. MEYNER, of New Jersey will speak tonight in Hill Hall at 8:30. Gov. Meyner was elected governor of New Jersey last year. His talk tonight is sponsored by the Carolina Forum and will feature a question and answer period at its conclusion.

UNC's Godfrey Disagrees With Prof On Segregation Editorials

ASHEVILLE (AP)—Qualitative as well as qauntitative editorial analysis of congressional session was urged by the opening panel of speakers last night at the eighth annual national conference of editorial writers here.

Members of the panel were Dean Norval N. Luxon of the UNC School of Journalism; Dr. Curtis D. MacDougall, professor of journalism at Northwestern University; A. Gayle Waldrop, director of the University of Colorado School of Journalism, and Dr. James L. Godfrey, UNC proefssor of English history.

Each critized seven different newspaper editorial pages.

Godfrey found editorials on the 83rd Congress "very similar to news stories . . . item by item stuff . . . wtih no attempt to evaluate"

He said most editors appeared "too loyal to ignore it and too wise to praise it and they simply accepted it and sought to leave the impression that all had gone well."

MacDougall described himself as "an unreconstructed new dealer, . . . and I don't believe I lived through 20 years of treason'," he complained that to many editorial writers, "an argument is answered because Ike is for it . . . you bow down to Mecca . . . and I'll be darned if I believe it"

Claiming that in his group of papers there was little evaluation of congressional action, MacDougall said the tone of the editorials was: "Ike wanted it. Ike got it. Good! Ike wanted it. Ike didn't get it. Awful!"

MacDougall and Godfrey had differing views on editorials on the Supreme Court's school segregation decision.

Godfrey said editorialists failed to regard the losses as well as the

Muntzing Vote Was 13-9 For Approval

By LOUIS KRAAR

Aftr two Manning Muntzing supporters staged a walkout Monday night at the Student Party closed caucus, the group voted 13-9 against "disapproval of Muntzing's actions" in cutting committee meetings, an informed source said yesterday.

However, Jim Turner—a strong Muntzing supporter—and Joel Fleshman, leader of the censure movement, did not vote. And, of course Muntzing himself did not vote.

Fleshman, SP chairman, objected to the fact that Muntzing cut vital committee and cacus meetings, then spoke against SP bills on the Legislature floor. He proposed that the caucus vote disapproval of Muntzing's actions in cutting the meetings.

Louis Brumfield spoke for Muntzing, then stormed from the room. Don Warren did not vote, and Muntzing still came out uncensured.

Yesterday's report in The Daily Tar Heel pointed to the note of party unity on which the meeting ended, and it is understood this is true. Nevertheless, Fleishman lost out in his move for "disapproval" of Muntzing's action. And some have interpreted this as an indication of Muntzing's strength in the party.

For some time now, Fleishman and Muntzing have disagreed on party issues. While there hasn't been any definite split in the SP, it was evident late last spring that the two prominent party leaders represented opposite camps.

Poll Bill Is Passed; Dorm Maid, Gas Bills To Be Studied

By LLOYD SHAW

The student Legislature passed Tommy Bennett's (SP) bill last night giving the campus more polling places during election. Polls will be placed during the first general election in all dorms, in the Fraternity courts, in Victory Village, and other places on and off campus.

The bill establishing a maintenance fund, amounting to $500 for student government property passed on a divided vote. This bill was reported out of Finance Committee favorably, with a vote of 6-2 Wednesday. It was introduced by Bob Harrington (SP).

Dorm Maid Bill

By a close vote the bill calling for a committee to investigate the possibility of maid service in the dorms passed. This bill was introduced to the legislature last week by UP floor leader, Max Crohn. Crohn's other bill asking for an investigation of gas prices in Chapel Hill passed the Legislature with no negative votes.

By approval of the Legislature last night, the Publications Board will provide $340 for the D T H proofreader.

A bill providing the Yackety-Yack with extra funds in compensation of the extra enrollment passed with no negative discussion.

Creasy Names New Advisory Library Board

President Tom Creasy yesterday announced the formation of a Student Library Advisory Board.

The Board will meet "at least once a month to discuss problems concerning our University Library."

Said Creasy, "The Board will be a means by which student opinion can be voiced in the administration of the Library." He said members of the board will work closely with Dr. Andrew Horne, the new librarian. Horne, said Creasy, was "very much in favor" of the formation of the Board.

The group will voice criticism of the library and suggest the most popular hours, books that are needed and "other constructive ideas the students might have," said Creasy.

Violin Concert Slated Soon

Maurice Wilk, of New York, will present a violin concert Tuesday night, Oct. 19, at 8 o'clock in Hill Hall.

Accompanied by Dr. Wilton Mason of the Music Department, Wilk will play a program including works by Kreisler, Beethoven, Bach and Paganini.

Wilk received his early education in the New York public school system and the High School of Music and Art, in New York.

The violinist has spent many summers at the Middlebury Composers Conference in Vermont, where artists present new compositions before the severest of all critics — the composers themselves.

Wilk has often presented the works of contemporary American composers, including many premier performances of such composers as Aaron Copland, Norman Dello Joio, Roger Goib, Everett Helm, Gail Kubik, Walter Piston, Halsey Stevens and Otto Leuning.

Wilk recently received the honor of being asked to open the American Festival of Music, held at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D. C.

Rhodes Aspirants To Apply

Students interested in applying for a Rhodes Scholarship to Oxford University have been instructed to see Dean C. P. Spruill or someone in his office in 308 South Building not later than Monday.

Scholars elected in December this year will enter Oxford in October, 1955.

To be eligible to receive the scholarship the applicant must be a male citizen of the United States, with at least five years residence and unmarried. A Rhodes Scholarship is forfeited by marriage after election.

By the first of October in the year in which an applicant is elected he must be at least 19 and not more than 25 years old. If he has had at least 90 days of active service in the Armed Forces of the United States since June 27, 1950, he may deduct the period from his actual age if by so doing he will qualify under the regulations.

By the time of application he must have at least a junior standing at some recognized degree-granting University or college in the United States.

The value of a Rhodes Scholarship is 600 pounds — about $1,680 — a year.

Since the majority of Rhodes scholars obtain standing which enables them to take a degree in two years, appointments are made for two years in the first instance. During the course of his second year every Rhodes scholar will be invited to state whether he wishes to apply for a third year at Oxford, and if so what work he proposes to undertake.

Women's Late Hours

A special sign-out sheet will be used in coed dorms and sorority house for girls going on the Maryland football caravan to Washington, Women's Residence Council Chairman Ruth Jones said yesterday.

This includes those girls going in autos as well as on the train, Miss Jones added.

WILLIAM TROTMAN, Winston-Salem, will be seen in the role of Deputy-Governor Danforth from Boston in "The Crucible," opening Oct. 13. The Playmakers production of this drama of old Salem will continue thru Oct. 17. It will be the second Playmakers opener by Arthur Miller. "Death of A Salesman" opened the 1951-52 season.

The Last Day

Yackety-Yack Business Manager Tom Spain has declared that today will be absolutely the last day for societies and organizations to contract space for the 1955 annual.

Spain said contracts will be signed in the Yack's Graham Memorial basement office.

On This Liberal Campus:

Should UNC Break Out The Bermudas?

By NANCY EDWARDS And SUE RINGER

To wear or not to wear; that is the question. Whether it is better to stick to tradition with sweaters and skirs or whether to go all out for comfort and style in Bermuda shorts?

. . .to show?

Is Carolina getting behind the times? We hope not, but we seem to be a little slow when it come to campus wear. Convention is holding out! Not that tradition and convention are bad, but sometimes practicality is more important. Bermuda shorts are the cry.

All through the nation, colleges and high schools are taking this trend to the classroom in the form of Bermuda shorts. Vassar, Smith and others have started. Why not us? Carolina thinks of itself as being liberal; wouldn't this be a step forward?

Comfort is an important factor in study, work and play. Even though a cold snap hit us yesterday, the weatherman has predicted more of the warmer weather for the next few weeks.

The necktie and coat for men's classroom wear recently went out with a bang, to add to the relief and comfort of gentlemen, whose main objective was to learn under the best possible condition, not to put on a formal style show.

Outmoded Tradition

The day has long passed when a girl's bare knee received a curious glance much less a shocked one. Why should we cling to such an outmoded tradition?

There are lots of us who would love to go to class in Bermudas, but our main problem is: Who wants to go first?

We have consulted a few students and got about this question, the following results.

. . .or not to show?

Annette Leveson, a stray Greek, Alderman Dorm "I think it's perfectly all right, and certainly girls should be allowed to if boys are. I might even buy myself a pair."

Marilyn Zager, Smith Dorm, "I don't see anything wrong with it, but I don't believe too many people would do it anyway."

Ginny Green, Alpha Delta Pi—"I think it's a very good idea for labs and afternoon classes, but not for the morning."

An Alpha Gam says "I think they are a little too informal for class, and I don't particularly like the idea."

Bob Everley, a Lamba Chi, and his fraternity brothers say: "By all means, we're for them unanimously."

Bebe Bauman, Tri Delt—"Fabulous idea and they are very comfortable."

The general opinion at the Pi Phi House is "No."

Bobby Walker, Chi Omega—"Love them madly. I think they are great and so easy to take care of."

A coed in McIver said "I'm all for it."

Davis Merritt, Cobb Dorm—"It makes no difefrence to me. They are acepted in other places, and I can see no reason why they shouldn't be here."

Two Kappa Deltas think that Bermuda shorts are "very comfortable and practical, and they will save wear and tear on skirts and sweaters."

The Duty Of This Student Body

Not a single graduate of a Negro high school in North Carolina applied for admission to the undergraduate schools of the University this year.

Some may have wanted to, some may have looked from their hometowns to this citadel of North Carolina learning and wanted to. But they did not apply. They turned instead to North Carolina College or Johnson C. Smith or A. & T. for their college educations.

And why is that? We believe it is because they thought they would not be welcome. Because they felt as all of us did upon leaving high school and choosing a college—anxious lest the school of their choice be a formidable and unfriendly place.

That, we think, makes the duty of this student body remarkably clear. A legal injunction opening the undergraduate schools to Negroes is already in sight. Before it comes, we must find a way to say to the Negro high school graduates that we welcome them, that they will find on the campus of their University a place where in peace they may take up their books and become a part of Carolina.

It will be to the enduring credit of the students of 1954 if they do find a way to say that, before the courts force integration with sterner language.

Aldous Vs. Niccolo

Listeners to Aldous Huxley's lecture Wednesday night found the distinguished and urbane man a person of startling sanity. In one of his few departures from the area directly relevant to the humanities, Mr. Huxley said:

"Unrestricted violence as a means is incapable of producing the end of world-wide democracy. . . . Ends are always conditioned by their means."

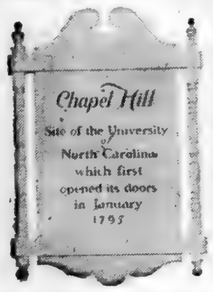
Thus, Mr. Huxley cited, we went plunging into the holocaust of World War I to "make the world safe for democracy." But because the violence of the war was extreme, we netted from the war not democracy but fear, strife and hatred.

Certainly the sane and logical light exhibited by Mr. Huxley needs to invade the brains of the big-larynxed politicians and orators in our midst who entertain the awful proposition of a so-called "preventive war." Premeditated violence will never work as a sword for democracy.

It is well to find such a strong voice telling us in no uncertain terms that a successful relationship among men cannot be grounded upon the terms of Machiavelli's The Prince. Ends can never justify means.

For there are those around us who are far from this conviction.

Welcome, Guv'nor!



Folks in Phillipsburg, New Jersey knew Bob Meyner successively as a newsboy, grocery clerk and silk weaver, a boy who worked hard while in high school to help defray family expenses. And occasionally, they heard his voice from a sound truck at street corner political meetings.

Mr. Meyner's voice has been heard with increasing frequency in New Jersey lately. As the state's liberal Democratic governor, he has toured New Jersey's villages and cities as no governor before him, appearing at dedications and fairs and public assemblies and making sense wherever he has spoken. Politicians agree he's headed for the Washington big-time: already, he is the most mentioned possibility for Democratic vice-presidential candidate in 1956.

We suspect he'll have some things to say on "The Art and Science of Politics" in Hill Hall tonight that will be of more than passing interest. We welcome Gov. Meyner to the campus and commend his speech to your hearing.

A Station Of Another Name Causes Worry

FELLOW WHO runs the Franklin St. Luncheonette called up the other day. He said he didn't like his ad in the Tuesday paper because students were confused about the location of his eating place.

"One guy said he looked all round the campus by the girls' dorms for my place. I wish you'd straighten that out about the location," the proprietor said.

Then we looked back at the ad, the last line of which read: "Across from the Bust Station."

TUESDAY NIGHT, if you weren't studying, you had a choice of going to Durham and hearing Aldous Huxley, going to a University Party meeting, attending a Hill Hall concert with Jack Ellis, or hearing Raleigh editor Jonathan Daniels at the Di Senate.

I ended up at the Daniels speech. The edtitor of the Raleigh News and Observer talked in inspiring terms about the University's tradition for freedom—and its lack of freedom from time to time.

Jim Wallace talked about Jonathan Daniels.

And Joel Fleishman, who was inaugurated as president of the Di, talked about the Di.

Afterwards, everyone talked about Daniel's speech and drank punch that contained, among other things, champaigne.

THE SURPRISING thing about this week's hot weather is that no one was wearing Burmuda shorts on campus.

Checking with some authorities, I learned that that it is quite against custom for coeds to wear shorts to class. As for men, there is no rule.

Franklin St. haberdashery emporiums inform me that the abbreviated trousers are selling well during warm weather seasons. However, as yet I haven't seen anybody wear the things to class. There seems to be some controversy whether the bristly gams of males look good in Burmuda shorts. Coeds, it would seem, look better in the things. But I'm no authority, because I think coeds look better anyway—Burmuda shorts or not.

AROUND campus there's a new way of saying that you've been given a raw deal: "I've been Rammed."

ANOTHER campus story about Chapel Hill has been making the rounds recently.

The story is about a Duke football player dating a Carolina coed. When the conversation finally drifted into nothing, the Carolina coed tried to make some by asking, "How high is the curriculum at Duke?"

"I don't know exactly," the Duke football player is said to have replied, "but you can see the UNC bell tower from the top of it."

STUDENTS WERE surprised to see Governor Umstead's big black auto with license plate no. 1 parked on Franklin St. late last week.

The governor met quietly here with members of a special commission studying reorganization of state government agencies.

After Inca Gold

EN ROUTE Through South America. — Jottings From a South American Notebook — In Washington you don't hear much about the United Nations except the rantings of Vishinsky or debates over Red China. But down here the UN is doing a great job for the Andean Indians of Peru, Ecuador, Bolivia. . . .Enrique de Lozada, a long time in the U. S. A. with the UN and the Nelson Rockefeller Committee, is working with Bill Dillingham of Philadelphia and Swarthmore, Pa., to resettle several thousand Indians. Up on Lake Titicaca, highest lake in the world, they have established an Indian farm co-op. Since the UN didn't want to work on land expropriated by the government which might later be litigated under the new land reform, Lozada persuaded his friend, J. Sanfines, to give the Indians 1,000,000 acres of land. The Indians then got acquisitive, also took 400 head of holsteins and 1,500 head of herefords. They had been caring for them for years, they said, so the cattle should go with the land. . . . But Dillingham finally persuaded the Indians to pay for the cattle on the installment plan and, believe it or not, they are now ahead with their payments . . . .Captain Sanfines, the man who donated the million acres, is a former student of Iowa State University and West Point who later put the Bolivian Army to work at irrigation, well-drilling and health projects instead of politics. However, he rowed with the new "National Revolutionary Movement" and is now in exile. . . .What President Paz needs most is to get some of this energetic young blood back.

Driving In Titicaca —The man who knows most about Lake Titicaca is Victor Andrade, now Bolivian Ambassador to Washington. He was exiled to an island by the previous conservative regime, found the water terribly cold but the only way to get a bath. . . .Braving the cold of Lake Titicaca shortly will be William Mardorf, U. S. frogman who has signed a contract with the Bolivian government to dive for Inca gold thrown into the lake several hundred years ago. Mardorf has spotted one area where the Incas worshipped the sun gods by throwing gold in the water, and if the shores of the lake are not too steep he may recover a fortune. Most of the lake is extremely deep, however, and the gold may have slid down below recovery. . . . Mardorf will not use a conventional diving suit. Oxygen can't be pumped down to him at such high altitudes. He will wear a Navy frog suit with three oxygen tanks strapped to his back. Under the suit he will wear plenty of heavy underwear, for his chief problem is icy water. He hopes to stay under two hours on each dive. . . . Previous Bolivian governments would sign no contracts for the recovery of Inca gold for fear of Indian uprisings. The Paz government is so popular with the Indians it fears no revolts.

Ike would love this — Biggest trout in the world are in Lake Titicaca—30 to 40 pounds. They came originally from the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries in Washington. . . . The Peruvian and Bolivian governments, which share the lake, got together in 1939 and decided to stock the lake with trout; So Paul Diez de Medina, then with the Bolivian Embassy and diplomatic correspondent for the Washington Star, sent the fingerlings down by boat. They died en route. Next shipment was sent by air and lived. For 10 years no one fished them and they grew to be the biggest trout in the world, also the most voracious. They are rapidly devouring all other fish in the lake. American missionaries are doing a fine job in South America. Near Montero, Bolivia, I met Fathers Foley and O'Brien of the Maryknoll Fathers. With friendly simplicity they are conducting schools and hospitals for the Indians. Also doing fine jobs, though I didn't get a chance to see them, are the Methodists and Seventh Day Adventists.

Jails are full—One great problem of President Paz is the number of political prisoners in Bolivian jails. U. S. Ambassador Eddie Sparks has remonstrated with Paz, urged him to release the prisoners. Replies the President: "You remember what happened to my friend President Villaroel? They hung him from a lamppost. It was very uncomfortable. I don't want that to happen to me." . . . Actually President Paz is in an almost impregnable political position — thanks to the Indians. As I traveled with him across Bolivia I saw delegation after delegation come to meet him, deluge him with flowers. . . . When Senator Capehart of Indiana visited La Paz about a year ago, opposition politicians staged an incipient revolt hoping to discourage U. S. funds for Bolivia. Two leaders of the Paz cabinet were seized and kept in hotel rooms. Whereupon Indians came down from the plateau above La Paz, crowded the streets carrying rifles. The white population would have been massacred if anything had happened to one hair of President Paz's head; and they didn't disperse until Paz came out on his balcony and told them to go home. . . . Paz now has his own private Indian army, thanks to the fact that nearly all Indians carry rifles. The regular Bolivian Army is in the background, used chiefly for engineering and health cleanups. Previously the Army was a political weapon, used to seat and unseat presidents.

Americans build friendship — Ambassador Sparks has done an outstanding job in South America, but will be replaced next week by Ambassador Jerry Drew. The high altitude necessitates frequent rotation of U. S. envoys. Unofficial envoys are the crews and personnel of Panagra. They penetrate to the farthest jungles of Bolivia, have won lots of friends for the U. S. A. . . . Some Panagra planes fly over such wild areas that Indians try to shoot them down with bows and arrows. . . . Les Thayer, radio expert for the Macco Pan Pacific Company, found it difficult to use telephone wires along the new Amerian-built highway connecting the lowlands with the Andes. Reason: The Indians took the telephone wires down to make bracelets. . . . Macco Pan

The Ram Sees

It must be recorded here that the Ram received, accepted and exercised the courtesy of an invitation to visit the Alpha Delta Pi sorority house on Wednesday evening. He took the following notes, which are here reproduced exactly as they were penned during several brief breaks: "Big crowd out on porch. Everybody talking about cool wave. Big electric ADPi sign over door lacks five white bulbs. Must start collection to replace 'em for the girls. Went to dinning room. Punch and ginger snaps. Can't stand ginger snaps. Punch delicious. Tasted like someone sneaked a slug of Gilbey's in it when Mrs. Maxwell wasn't looking. Found out later it was edgy apple cider. Some character playing the piano. Made lots of noise, but not too much music. Bunch of Joe Colleges wearing tuxedoes. Made me feel out of place. Picked up girl when 11 o'clock approached. Drove her to women's dorm quad. Hellacious traffic jam. Good for laughs. Drove up town and drank a tall Schlitz at Spero's." . . . Thanks, girls . . . it was the greatest.

The Ram Sees where there will be a big pep rally, Dixieland music and barby-Q to boot out behind McIver Dormitory this evening. Sounds like a good place to exercise the vocal chords, do a wee bit of socializing with the fair ladies of the campus, listen to some cool music, and possibly display a little of that school spirit that everyone insists we have here at Carolina. BEAT GEORGIA!

Our Man Mundy On Segregation

David Mundy

RACIAL DISCRIMNATION is indefensible. Its bigots may imagine some racial superiority, but that and all their other alibis are inconsequential and easily disproved.

I believe that the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, and other state officials on the higher levels realize the wrongs in discrimination, even though their public policies show no more than a "go slow" attitude. The leaders seem afraid to lead. Official positions apparently are valued higher than conscience.

Admission of Negroes to the University was a step forward —a risky one for politicians to make in this state. Once this step was made, however, it is difficult to understand why Negroes should be segregated in the dorms. Surely our white-supremacists could yell no more loudly over that.

It is especially disconcerting that no one seems to remember who made the ruling for segregation. Someone did surely. This ludicrous example of discrimination works both ways—especially against those students living in three-man room while two rooms stand vacant in the Negro section of Steele.

Anyone for moving in, uninvited ilke?

Jonathan Daniels, speaking at the inaugural ceremonies of the Dialectic Senate last Tuesday night, made the customary references to the threats against freedom of speech. He didn't, however, get around to saying who was doing the threatening. He made the liberals' usual derogatory references to McCarthy. I am yet to find, however, how McCarthy threatens freedom of speech. Mr. Daniels did give one example of the curtailment of freedom, though. It seems that back in 1856 a Carolina professor had all sorts of troubles because he announced that he would vote for the Republican ticket, should there be one in the state. He was burned in effigy and his view violently disclaimed by the other faculty members. The Democrat Party stands on its noble traditions. Now the professors just aren't hired.

Daniels' speech carried several other inference laden remarks about the sun dial, "messengers from the Pentagon" and the "tyranny of security." There also was a curious remark ot the effect that "freedom has lapsed at UNC."

The early stage of the fall campaign shows the Democrat Party stressing the theme of unity (a nice word). The "Democratic" Party stands united on the true policy. The Republican party is hopelessly divided, three secretaries of the state, big business at the wheel, no domestic policy, et al.

The Democrats have long been able to convince people that what they say is true. (This being the successful employment of the Big Lie Technique). But the united party has a few rips and tears which is doesn't seem to notice. In the New York state convention factions booed each other. At a party dinner in Indiana, one faction embarrassed another by leaking the news that it was having trouble selling tickets for the dinner. And, over in Johnson, Democrats are so busy arguing over the primary and seeking injunctions that they may not even have a candidate on the ballot this fall.

Sincerest sympathies go to the YDC upon the death of that great and noble Senator from Nevada, Pat McCarran. It is especially unfortunate that such a great liberal and progressive leader of such a united party as theirs should die at this time. I only wish to console the YDC, especially their more "liberal" members at UNC, upon the death of one of their greatest leaders of their great, united party.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . "—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.

THE HORSE was cropping chlorophyllic sustenance in the lee of The Playmakers Theater when I saw him. I wondered what he thought about Teedee Bullock's being elevated to the post of Number One quarterback?

"A cleancut win for Dramatic Arts," The Horse stated, pausing to pick his Steinway keyboard teeth with a dainty hoof. "A great day for Shakespeare, not to mention Ibsen! Len Bullock played in a few plays this Spring, and his emotings would have gladdended the heart of Thespis."

Yes; but wasn't tramping on opponents considerably different from tramping on stages? Did they mix?

"I haven't seen much tramping on opponents, lately," The Horse shrugged, knocking Mr. Wump aside to get another faceful of lawn. "But ere you write actors off as pantywaists, just stop and consider. Lefty Flynn, the old Yale hoofballer, was an actor, was he not? And how about Jack Palance, of our own Tar Heel campus? My blood runs cold as Wump's, here, when I recall Jack's performance as the professional gunner in High Noon."

I thought there had been more cons than pro opinion on Lefty Flynn's claim to acting ability. But were these equine citations not exeeptions?

"Heck, no," The Horse noed me. "Do not athletes develop big lungs for vocal power? Does not repeated physical exercise endow the exerciser with grace of movement?"

There was a school of thought which held that physical exercisers displayed, as often as not, more muscles above the neckline than below it. And were not male actors sort of. . .nice?

"Pooey," The Horse derided this view. "Tell that to Bing Crosby, Pat O'Brien, Jimmy Cagney, Don Ameche, Fred Bickel—"

—Who? Fred-what?

"Fred March, to you," The Horse sneered. "Likewise, Gentleman Jim Corbett, Norman Kaiser, alias Norman Kerry, Will Rogers, Slapsy Maxie Rosenbloom, Kid McCoy, alias Norman Selby and no relation to Talbot of the same yclept, Clark Gable, Brandon Marlow."

The Horse crashed to a derailment on the latter clobbered-up name. I queried just what he ws trying to prove?

"I have proved," The Horse snapped, "that being a he-man and being an acting man are in no ways dissimilar. In fact, Athletics would seem to bear a darkened optic, to judge solely from the marital jolt that Jolting Joe DiMaggio got from his un-Diorish spice this week. Alack and weladay, The King of Swatters flattened by The Queen of Sweaters!"

Well, so long as something or someone had to be flattened in that encounter, one could like Joe and still be happy that he was the flattened one, rather than vice versa.

The Horse eyed me with crossed eight-balls of eyes and snapped, "Line-stealer! That was to be my line, Roger! Or are you going to plead that we are discussing curves, and not straight-lines?"

I was going to plead, most reluctantly, that we get back to the original subject, which was Hoofball. I meant, Football.

"I have infinite respect for Coach George Barclay," The Horse got on the rails again. "Infinite."

Oh? So? This did not homogenize with some language I had heard The Horse using in some games last year, when others than Long and Bullock had quarterbacked-up throughout long afternoons!

"I was praying," The Horse fenced in true hunter-style. "I assure you my lankwich, if any, was merely for attention-getting value. The Lord is so very busy, what with listening to the prayers of the Democrats anent our National Administration, and with the prayers of School Integraters versus the Disintegraters, not to mention prayers for and against UN, NATO, EDC, CIO, AFL and innumerabilia of others not exactly disinterested in self service, that I had to make my lankwich—prayers, as I call what I was saying—unusual and freighted with attention-getting value."

Well, The Horse was lucky Coach Barclay hadn't heard him!

"On the contrary, perhaps he did hear me," The Horse said, preening himself against a holly tree. "What I love about Coach B. is, he stuck to his guns with what he thought was the right set-up, long after a lesser man would have scuttled the set-up and gone for a new combination. But what I love even more is, Coach George has finally decided to take drastic action. It takes a big man to do that when he knows that a chorus of I-told-you-so's lound enough to drown out a first-down cheer will greet him wherever he goes. As we say in Oireland—'Up, O'Barclay!' "

Up, O'Barclay? And who was it, only last Duke, ugh, game, had been neighing, 'Whaddya want wit' a bull-headed Pole named Barkowski runnin' the show?'

"Oh, no," The Horse murmured, looking most uneasy. "Roger, you hurt me to the quick, and Coach O'Barclay being the size an' kind of man he is, I am likely to be hurt to the quicker should he hear of your baseless charge. I did say, once, that the growlers in our stands should be reasonable, that Coach O'B. could not very well get out there and play for us, more is the pity."

Yes: but The Horse had not been himself when he had said that. He had been lowering the level of a gallon flagon of poteen when he had said that, and thus was not his usual unmellow self.

"I hope it works, this change," The Horse said. "It has a good chance to work, and three ways: Teedee may very well prove himself our greatest passer ever; the shake-up may spur our other lads in the backfield to re-prove themselves; and The Men Up Front, who have been opening up gaping holes for The Little Man Who Was Rarely There, may take new heart. It there is anything more discouraging than opening up a hole in a rough opposing line and seeing it go untrammeled by cleated Tar Heels shoes, it is opening up dozens of holes and seeing them go unused. And Bill Koman, Kirtland, Maultsby & Company have been doing just that, game in and Saturday out. But willy and nilly, Saturday will be a great day for the Yankees at Tar Heel-on-Franklin!"

How was this? Especially for our, urp, Yankees?

"We can all sing 'Marching Through Georgia', 'unmolested," The Horse horsed.

"Wump!" Mr. Wump whumped.

Texas Is Picked To Upset Sooners

Frosh Win, 25-12

LAURINBURG, N. C., Oct. 7—The University of North Carolina Tar Babies lived up to their pre-season press notices here tonight as Quarterback Buddy Sasser passed and ran them to a decisive 25 to 12 victory over the University of South Carolina freshman team.

Sasser, who hails from nearby Conway, S. C., received generous support from the overflow crowd of 4,000 as he dazzled them with touchdown sprints of 60 and 23 yards. The first North Carolina score came in the first quarter when the diminutive Sasser kept the leather on option play and wiggled through the enemy players for 60 yards in a style reminiscent of Charlie Justice, according to veteran sports writer Jake Wade.

The Biddies came back in the same period with a tally of their own when Sam Vickers passed to Buddy Nidiffer. Neither team converted and the first quarter ended, 6-6.

In the second stanza, Sasser ripped off a 23 yard scoring jaunt. South Carolina came right back with another Vickers pass, this time to Heyward King. The first half ended with the count knotted, 12-12.

The third quarter saw the visitors continue their scoring ways, and at the same time smother the South Carolina offense. Sasser led the Tar Babies down the field with a varied assortment of plays. Halfback Steve Kupchick climaxed the drive, diving over from a few yards out. Roland Coff made the first conversion of the game, and North Carolina led, 19-12.

Fullback William Williams bucked over for the final score of the game in the fourth quarter.

Georgia Tilt Looms Tomorrow As Tar Heels Drill Lightly

Carolina's Tar Heels were put through a brisk, no-contact practice session yesterday at Navy Field in their next-to-last preparation for the Georgia game tomorrow.

Clad in pads and sweat pants, due to the sudden cold wave, the locals were drilled extensively on their pass patterns, defense strategy for Georgia's aerial attack, and blocking assignments for punt returns.

The first team went through their races with Len Bullock at quarterback, George Stavnitski at center, and Doug Malone at right end. All three were named Wednesday by Head Coach George Barclay as starters tomorrow, climaxing three days of lineup shuffling which saw Marshall Newman, Bill Kirkman, and Dick Starner relegated to secondary roles. John Jones will fill the tackle slot vacated when Jack Maultsby pulled a tendon in the Tulane game.

Larry Parker was running the left halfback slot usually occupied by shifty Ken Keller. Keller drilled with the second team, although he still noticeably favors the ankle which was sprained severely in a pre-season game with Fort Eustis.

The big question mark in the Tar Heel lineup is Don Klochak, 213-pound fullback. Klochak suffered a concussion in Wednesday's scrimmage session and is still confined to the infirmary. Although his injury is not serious, it is doubtful that he will answer the opening kick-off tomorrow.

This would definitely weaken seven - point - favorite Carolina's ground game, as Klochak is the locals' only adequate version of a power runner. However, should Klochak fail to answer the starting gun, his position will be manned by Larry McMullen, a high-powered line-cracker in his own right.

Sigma Chi Trips Chi Psi; Pi KA, Phi Gam Also Win

Phi Gam-1 unleashed a powerful attack yesterday afternoon to overwhelm Phi Delta Theta to the tune of 41-0. Phi Gam scored 21 points in the first half, and almost matched that score with their second period total of 20. Big guns for Phi Gam were Jim Dillingham, Jim Prescott and Al Phelps.

Scoring: Phi Gam-1, Touchdowns —Jim Dillingham, 2; Jim Prescott, 2; Jim Montgomery, Larry Bruton. Safety, Jack Woods. PAT, Al Phelps, 3.

Sigma Chi-1 dropped Chi Psi-1 from the unbeaten ranks, and extended its own winning streak to three games without a loss in defeating the Chi Psi team by the score of 14-0. Sigma Chi exhibited an excellent attack as they moved downfield to score their first touchdown, and in the closing seconds of the first half added the second and final touchdown of the game to their total.

Scoring: Sigma Chi-1, touchdowns — Walt Converse, Claude Plumlee. Safety—Don Mitchell.

Pi KA scored early in each period to down ATO 14-0 in the remaining 4:00 Intramural game yesterday. ATO lacked a scoring punch, and could not penetrate the Pi KA defense. Pi KA passed for both extra points.

Scoring: Pi KA, touchdowns — Barney Cashwell, Jim Allen. PAT —Flynn Harris, Gene Rogers.

AK Psi-1 took a forfeit win from SPE-2 and Chi Psi-2 vs. TEP-1 was ppostponed in the remaining slated games.

Duke Favored To Beat Purdue

Carolina Gets Nod Over Georgia; Rice Favored

By BILL GRIMSLEY

NEW YORK, Oct. 7 (AP)—Oklahoma, the nation's No. 1 team, and Purdue, conqueror of Notre Dame, are marked for their own comeuppance this week as the football season moves groggily forward.

The last weekend brought an epidemic of upsets, but we managed to sneak through with 34 right out of 49 for .694. The gaudy season's average was pulled down to .786 on a 103-28 mark.

Here's to a bigger week:

Texas over Oklahoma: The Longhorns, with some of the best material in the country, have started rolling after that Notre Dame defeat. They have the psychological edge and are among homefolks.

Duke over Purdue: The Blue Devils from Durham have a more solid taem with a strong line and many good backs, headed by Jerry Barger and Worth Lutz. Lenny Dawson's air attack may be bottled.

Rice over Wisconsin: An individual duel between Dick Moegle and Alan Ameche, but the Badgers left too much in the Michigan State game.

Southern California over Texas Christian: The Trojans are getting better each week, may be the best on the West Coast. A Friday night game.

Notre Dame over Pittsburgh: The Fighting Irish start a new unbeaten string. Pitt is reeling from too much schedule.

UCLA over Washington: There is no sounder coach in the country than Red Sanders, who gets the ultimate from his material. The Huskies have the backs but no line to bump heads with the Uclans.

Ohio State over Illinois: The Illini's J. C. Caroline and Mickey Bates will break loose some time, but we stick with Red Cassady.

Iowa over Michigan: Forest Evashevski has too much depth for the Wolverines, still groggy from the Army setback.

Mississippi over Vanderbilt: The Commodores are coming fast and are in a good position for an upset, but we have to stick with the Ole Miss on its record and proven squad.

Army over Dartmouth: The Cadets should win by at least three touchdowns.

Georgia Tech over LSU: Bobby Dodd's youngsters are growing into men, should get tougher as season progresses.

The others:

Friday Night

Miami, Fla., over Holy Cross, Denver over Montana.

A CAMPUS-TO-CAREER CASE HISTORY

"All the answers aren't in the book"

W. D. Garland, E.E. '52, Univ. of California, is working for the Pacific Telephone Company. We thought you'd be interested in what Don told us about his first assignment.

(Reading time: 45 seconds)

Here Don Garland makes noise distribution measurements with a Level Distribution Recorder.

"My job is to help solve problems of noise and other interference on telephone lines due to power interference. Inductive co-ordination is the technical term for the work.

"First thing the Chief Engineer explained to me was that 'all the answers aren't in the book.' He was right. Most of the problems have required a combination of electrical engineering, a knowledge of costs and generous amount of ingenuity. I like it that way. It's given me an immediate opportunity to put into practice the theory I learned at school.

"In addition to this on-the-job experience, I have attended several special training courses conducted by the company. Now I'm breaking in a new man, just like when I started."

Don Garland's work is typical of many engineering assignments in the Bell Telephone Companies. There are similar opportunities for college graduates with Bell Telephone Laboratories, Western Electric and Sandia Corporation. If you'd like to get more details, see your Placement Officer. He will be glad to help you.

Let it never be said that Chapel Hill's climate is consistent. Where else could one go from shirt sleeves to sweaters, from air conditioning to heating systems, from ice cream to coffee in 24 short hours?

But, fortunately for the weatherman and unfortunately for the Y-Court bees, there's been a change in the weather and a change in general outlook. Saturday's football game is anticipated with enthusiasm, as blankets, heavy coats and internal warming devices are made ready for the spectators' sport.

SAE's will warm things up Saturday night with a party at the Washington Duke, in Durham. Brothers from Georgia are invading Chapel Hill en masse, and will be royally entertained by the local chapter.

Hayrides seem to be the thing these days, for Lambda Chi's are planning one for Saturday night. The destination is as yet unknown. But does it matter? Alpha Gam's had more definite plans for their hayride last night. They headed for Hogan's Lake and a marshmallow roast.

A party at the schoolhouse, complete with combo, is slated for the Phi Delt's Saturday Night. Also partying in the deep and wild woods will be the Zetes, who plan to journey to a cabin on the other side of Durham Saturday night. And Sigma Nu's, after honoring the Sigma Nu members of the faculty at a smoker Thursday afternoon, will loosen things up Saturday night at a party at Hoenig's cabin.

Phi Gam spirit is still high after Tuesday night's Fiji Island party with the Tri Delts. For Saturday night entertainment, brothers will celebrate at Lloyd's barn.

The new Elbow Room on the Greensboro Highway will be the scene for a PiKA party Friday night. At the Phi Kap house, plans are being completed for a buffet dinner Saturday night, followed by an exodus to the Saddle Club in Durham. Chi O's were entertained Thursday night by Phi Kap's with a party at Goat Hill Country Club.

This is the week for study breaks it seems. ADPI's held open house Wednesday night, and Tri Delt's entertained at their house last night. KD's also held a study break Wednesday night for the male population on campus.

ATO's reversing the situation, wwill entertain the sororities at study breaks, or more appropriately, rush breaks, next week. Chi O's are scheduled for Monday night, ADP's for Tuesday, Tri Delt's for Wednesday, and Pi Phi's for Thursday.

Also rolling out the welcome mat for visiting brothers will be the Chi Phi's. They plan a party Saturday night in honor of Georgia Chi Phi's at Turner's Cabin.

The Castle in Durham will be the scene for a Beta party Saturday night. And Chi Psi's plan a cabin party to celebrate the outcome of Saturday's game.

KA's will be elbowing each other at the Elbow Room Saturday night. All friends, alums and guests are cordially invited. At the DU house Saturday night, a buffet supper followed by a party, will honor visiting alums and dates.

gains in the end of segregation and that the court's action was not only a decision but 'an impact on institutions of every day life." He felt writers missed this phase in their analyses.

He also said they had failed to consider that the decision may lead to increasing numbers of private schools and "the growth of economic segregation."

MacDougall complained that he missed any editorial note of "enthusiasm and happiness" regarding the decision.

Luxon said some editorial sindicted no thought in advance of preparation although it was known a decision on segregation was forthcoming.

Faculty Club

The Faculty Club will hold a luncheon Tuesday at 1 p. m., at the Carolina Inn. Chancellor Robert B. House will speak on backgrounds of the University. Reservations for members and guests may be made by writing to the secretary by inter-office mail or post office box 660 before 10 a. m. on Oct. 11.

Episcopal

Bill Fetzer, one of the students in the show, had this to say about the pep rally: "This will be the greatest. We hope there will be a big turnout."

Ron Levin, another of the participants in the show, said "Man . . . the joint is really going to be jumping, so all you cats grab a kitten and cool on down."

The cheerleaders have announced that a cannon presented by th University Club will be fired during the game Saturday to mark the kickoff and all Carolina otuchdowns.

Grail Dance

The Order of the Grail will sponsor a dance Saturday night after the Georgia game.

After Monday night's caucus—closed to outsiders—Fleishman and Muntzing met briefly. An informed source said that the two are "quite friendly" and no split exists.

There has been some discussion recently about the political futur of Fleishman, since he is a senior. On the other hand, Muntzing is a junior and one of the most prominent SP legislators.

When The Daily Tar Heel called Fleishman's Graham Memorial office yesterday, a spokesman said, "Joel is out of town."

Muntzing called yesterday's news story a "straightforward account." He declined to say anything more.

One source pointed out yesterday that it would be inaccurate to interpret the failure of the censur emotion as a clearcut victory of Muntzing over Fleishman since five members were not present at the Monday night caucus.

However, even if all five absent members had voted to censure Muntzing, they would have been supporters who left the meeting. And it can not be determined just how the five not present would have voted.

Spirited Tar Heels Seek Victory Today Over Georgia Bulldogs For Fitz Lutz

Klochak Probable Starter; Len Bullock To Call Signals

By BERNIE WEISS

Carolina's Tar Heels take the field today at Kenan Stadium against the University of Georgia not only looking for their second win of the year but also seeking a victory for Fitz Lutz, their close friend and trainer who passed away this week.

The game is scheduled for 2 o'clock.

It is said that Lutz' last words before he died of a heart attack Monday afternoon were that he wished he could be on hand for the Georgia game. Lutz, whose innovations in protective football equipment had gained national fame, was head trainer for Georgia in 1946 when the Bulldogs beat Carolina in the Sugar Bowl.

Carolina would like nothing better than to capture the game for Lutz, and from the appearance of the Tar Heels at practice yesterday a victory seems likely.

Carolina is rated a one-touchdown favorite, principally because the game is being played on home territory. Georgia has a powerful but vastly under-rated passing attack which is liable to spring forth from any point on the field at any time, according to scouting reports.

Georgia arrived in town yesterday and is making headquarters in Durham, but the team was in Kenan Stadium in the early afternoon, dressed lightly and getting the feel of the turf.

The probable starting lineups:

Georgia	Pos.	Carolina
Wilkins	LE	Frye
Mosteller	LT	Jones
Spadafino	LG	Foti
Saye	C	Stavnitski
Shae	RG	Koman
White	RT	Perdue
O'Malley	RE	Malone
Harper	QB	Bullock
Bell	LH	Parker
Madison	RH	Gravitte
Garrard	FB	Klochak

Following Georgia's workout, Carolina took the field for a brief and spirited drill, stressing pass defense and offense. Toward the end of the practice the team worked out their kick-off patterns when Don Klochak wasn't booting the ball into the end zone.

Klochak, incidentally, probably will start despite a slight brain concussion he sustained this week. The big 213-pounder operates out of the fullback position.

The UNC defense is sixth best in the nation, but it will certainly get a test today. Jimmy Harper, quarterbacking pilot of the Bulldogs, has been hailed as the new successor to Zeke Bratkowski, Georgia's All-American of 1953. Harper, only a junior, is just reaching his prime.

Revised Lineup

Carolina's Barclay, who sports the No. 1 defensive team in the Atlantic Coast Conference, has revised his starting lineup for this game in an attempt to improve the offense. The offense is fair, too, but the team doesn't score as often as the opportunities present themselves.

At quarterback for the locals will be Len "Teedee" Bullock, a junior making his first starting appearance for Carolina. Bullock, perhaps the team's No. 1 passer, gained the spot this week as a replacement for Marshall Newman. The team will have a new right end in Doug Malone, a soph replacement for Dick Starner, while George Stavnitski, also a soph, will take the place of center Bill Kirkman.

John Jones, a Richmond, Va., soph, will be in the line-up at kickoff time in place of Jack Maultsby, injured last week against Tulane.

The remaining Carolina backs will be Connie Gravitte and Larry Parker at halves, with Klochak at full. Gravitte is first in the ACC individual rushing offense department with an average of 7.2 yards per carry.

If Klochak fails to start, his place will be taken by Larry McMullen, a 200-pound soph.

Long Feud

Carolina and Georgia have been feuding on the gridiron since 1895, and their battles include one Sugar Bowl tiff. UNC has won 11 of 22 games with the Bulldogs, two of the contest being ties. The teams met in the Sugar Bowl, January 1, 1946, Georgia winning that one, 20-10.

Science Fair Subject Of Meet Here

The use of school science fairs to encourage students in scientific careers will be studied at a two-day Regional Science Fair Work Conference to be here next Friday and Saturday.

Around 100 science teachers from North Carolina and Virginia are expected to gather in Chapel Hill to study the science fair procedure which will be carried out in these states next spring.

Dr. Arthur Roe, UNC Chemistry Department chairman, and Dewey E. Large, field representative, Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies, are co-chairmen for the event, which has been arranged by the University, in cooperation with the N. C. Academy of Science and the Oak Ridge Institute.

The teachers attending will hear discussions of science fair organization and operation by authorities from industry and science. Panel discussions, work planning sessions and material studies will be included in the program, along with the main speakers.

Main speakers will include Dr. Edward R. Kane, Director of Research, Du Pont Laboratories in Kinston; Dr. Ralph T. Overman, Chairman, Oak Ridge Special Training Division; Keith C. Johnson, Science Supervisor, District of Columbia Public Schools; and Henry A. Shannon, Science and Mathematics Adviser, N. C. State Department of Public Instruction.

Conferees will register early Friday morning, before the opening session at 10 o'clock, when Dr. Roe and Large will speak briefly. Friday will be devoted mainly to science fair theory and objectives in general.

Saturday morning the teachers will assemble according to their home educational district, to begin specific plans for the science fairs to be held in April, 1955.

Large, formerly a school administrator in Sevier County, Tenn., described a science fair as "a collection of exhibits, each of which is designed to show a biological, chemical, physical or engineering principal; a laboratory or other procedure; an industrial development; or an educational and orderly collection which can be taken as fitting into the concept of any branch of applied science."

Dr. Roe, commenting on the science fair's long range goal, said: "Especially in the 13 southeastern states and Puerto Rico, where the Oak Ridge program of distributing information on Nuclear fission and fusion is being established, institutions of higher education, industry, agriculture, research foundations, and government are feeling the vital need of more local men and women who have education and training in science."

Conference officials said that representatives from industry, communication media, state departments of education, and representatives from institutions of higher education are invited to attend, along with educational administrators, instructional supervisors, and science and mathematic teachers from public, private, and parochial schools.

1,100 Scouts Here Today

Some 1,100 boy scouts of Central North Carolina Council, with headquarters in Albemarle, will spend the week-end at UNC, where they will attend the Carolina-Georgia football game and participate in other activities especially planned for their visit.

The scouts are members of patrols which qualified for the trip by winning blue ribbons at the recent council camporee.

In addition to the football game they will tour the campus and attend a special showing of "The Heavens Tonight" at the Morehead Planetarium. They will bunk in the Tin Can overnight, and attend church services in Chapel Hill before returning home Sunday.

Special Show At Planetarium

A special performance of the Morehead Planetarium show, "The Heavens Tonight," will be held immediately following the Carolina-Georgia football game Saturday, Anthony Jenzano, director, announced today.

The new show, which opened Tuesday offers an interesting and colorful presentation of solar phenomena visible in the heavens at this season of the year.

One feature of the show is eight constellations pictured in color, "telling" the story of their formation. Planetarium technicians have devised an amazing illusion for this phase of the presentation.

In addition to the special performance the regular daily show open to the public will be offered at 8:30 p. m. Sunday matinee are 2, 3, and 4 p. m.

Student Shot At NU

EVANSTON, Ill., OcOt. 8 (AP)—A Northwestern University student was shot and seriously wounded last night by a policeman who said his gun fired accidentally when he lost his balance in a chase.

The victim, struck in the side, is Crayton E. Rowe, Jr., 23, a graduate student in the University's speech school. His home is at Charlotte, N. C. His condition was described as satisfactory today at Evanston Hospital.

Fred Wynn, acting chief of Evanston police, suspended the policeman, William Labbe, pending an investigation. Wynn gave this account:

Police received from the student health center at Northwestern papers showing that Rowe had taken a psychiatric examination preparatory to commitment to Evanston Hospital. Two detectives went to his hotel from a route investigation and learned he had moved to another address.

WC Jazz Group To Gather

Jazz fans will have a chance to get together tomorrow at Woman's College for a jazz discussion group and record session.

Speaking to the group will be Richardson Preyer, a jazz record collector from Greensboro. Preyer has traveled to many parts of the world in his study of the different types of jazz and during his travels has assembled an extensive collection of jazz records.

The discussion group and record session will be held at 3 p.m. in the East Lounge of Elliot Hall.

On Oct. 21 a jam session will open the annual Woman's College lecture-entertainment series for 1954-55. Robert G. Reisner, curator and librarian of the Institute of Jazz Studies, New York, and teacher of jazz history at Brooklyn College and the New School for Social Studies, will be featured with his quartette. With the quartette to demonstrate all varieties of jazz, Reisner will talk on jazz history from Dixieland to more sophisticated contemporary concepts.

IDC Slates Chess Tourney

The Interdormitory Council announced yesterday that the Interdormitory Chess tournament will open the fall activities slate for the men's residence halls. The tournaments will be held in each of the nineteen men's dorms starting Tuesday, October 12.

Manning Muntzing, IDC President, pointed out that the tourney would be directed by the members of the UNC Chess Club and local dorm intramural managers, under supervision of the IDC Social Committee.

Interested players must register with their own Intramural manager on or before Monday. No player who has won an intercollegiate match will be permitted to participate. Pairings will be made on Tuesday and will be placed on the dorm bulletin boards.

The winners in each dorm will receive an individual trophy. These residence champions will then be entitled to participate in the interdormitory championship.

Coach Rabb, intramural activities director, added that points will be awarded to both individuals and dormitories entering the tourney. Dorm points will be awarded for entrance, achievement (matches won), and standing. Players will earn points with entrance and each victory.

Seniors Hear Furniture Man

"Determination is the keyword for the college graduate seeking a job, determination to know himself and his job market." So spoke Mr. Finley White of Whitehall Furniture Co., Durham, to some 300 seniors at a Tuesday night meeting sponsored by the University's Placement Service.

Mr. White also stated that the big three aids in job hunting are: an informative application letter, a good personal history and an impressive interview.

J. M. Calloway, director of the placement service, announced before the meeting that several other companies will be represented during the course of the year and that seniors are advised to register for the interviews.

The UNC Extension Division has just published an extension bulletin on the subject "The Role of the United Nations in the Building of World Peace" for the use of high schools participating in the World Peace Study and Speaking Program of 1954-55.

Compiled by E. R. Rankin, Director of the program, the bulletin features excerpts from addresses by many national figures as well as endorsements by leading state officials.

All high schools in the state are invited to register for the program, now in its ninth year of existence, and a "World Peace" gold key will be presented to the winning speaker from each school.

Downie Fund Gives Dental School Grant

A $100 grant, to be known as the Blanche C. Downie Memorial Fund, was presented the University of North Carolina Dental Foundation by the North Carolina State Dental Hygienists Association here Sunday.

The grant is to be used to aid a deserving second year dental hygiene student at the University.

Dean John C. Brauer of the UNC School of Dentistry received the gift on behalf of the Dental Foundation, at a tea held Sunday afternoon in the Pine Room of Carolina Inn. The tea, given by the State Dental Hygienists, was held in honor of UNC students in dental hygiene and dental hygienists who recently passed the State Board examinations.

Also representing the Dental Foundation was Mrs. Henry O. Lineberger, Raleigh, chairman, Dental Foundation Committee, of the North Carolina Auxiliary.

Miss Emma Mills, Winston-Salem, president of the State Dental Hygienists, said the initiation of the Blanche C. Downie Fund commemorates "a life-long leader in the field of dental hygiene.

"Until her death in 1953, Miss Downie set a beautiful example for young dental hygienists to follow," Miss Mills said. "She taught them to accept responsibility and to do their best in the way of making contributions to dental hygiene."

A native of Hatboro, Pa., Miss Downie graduated from the School of Oral Hygiene in the University of Pennsylvania in 1923. She became a member of the teaching staff of that school the following year, a position which she held without interruption until her death.

During her outstanding career she served as president of the Philadelphia District Dental Hygienists' Association, The Pennsylvania State Dental Hygienists' Association; The American Dental Hygienists' Association and of the University of Pennsylvania Dental Hygienists' Alumnae Association.

In addition to Miss Mills, other officers of the North Carolina Dental Hygienists Association are Miss Margaret Jones, High Point, secretary; Miss Jean Blackwell, Tryon, membership chairman, and Miss Eleanor Forbes, Chapel Hill, program chairman.

Choral Club Is Meeting Every Monday Now

The Chapel Hill Choral Club, an organization which "cuts across social and occupational barriers to find singers," according to a club spokesman, held its first practice Monday night.

Sponsored by the University's Department of Music, the Choral Club's main interest is recreating choral masterpieces. Members are drawn from among the townspeople of Chapel Hill, from neighboring communities, and from the faculty, staff and students of the University.

In recent years the Choral Club has performed such selections as: Handel's "Messiah," Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," Haydn's "Creation," and Parker's "Hora Novissima." This year the club will continue presenting others in its series of selections.

Rehearsals are held every Monday night at 7:30, and all who are interested are earnestly invited to attend. Tryouts for the club are unnecessary, and all who take interest in music are assured of a good time.

YDC Trip

The University Young Democrats Club will go to Greensboro College this Tuesday to participate in a panel discussion there.

All YDC members are urged to attend this meeting. The group will meet at the Monogram Club at 5:30 for supper and will leave from there at 6:15 p.m.

Meyner Scores U. S. Political Indifference

WUNC-TV Inaugurates Press Confab

With the Democratic governor of New Jersey, the Hon. Robert Meyner seated in a deep chair in the Graham Memorial lounge and reminding the audience of earlier pictures of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, the first WUNC-TV "Press Conference" took place last night.

A crowd of about 150 persons gathered curiously in the lounge to watch Charles Kuralt and Fred Powledge of the Daily Tar Heel interview the governor under the glare of kleig lights.

Governor Meyner had just arrived from Hill Hall, across the campus, where he gave the first Carolina Forum address of the year on "The Art and Science of Politics."

Against the background of GM's persian carpets and a high picture of former University president E. K. Graham, Powledge and Kuralt questioned the rising Democrat, who says he "is proud to be called a politician" about current affairs.

Asked by Kuralt about segregation, the governor said "I didn't come to North Carolina to tell the people what to do." He thinks that's a problem for this state to work out. He has been pleased by strides to eradicate racial segregation problems in his own state of New Jersey, he said.

He was optimistic about Democratic Congressional chances in November—"almost certain that we'll take the lower house of Congress."

In response to other questions by the audience, the New Jersey statesman says he favors Point Four, Reciprocal Trade Agreements, and a New Jersey state medical school.

W. S. Jenkins Is Appointed To New Post

Dr. William S. Jenkins, Professor of Political Science, has been appointed Documents Consultant to the University Library.

Dr. Jenkins received his Ph.D. here in 1927, and a LL.B. in 1931. In 1943 he received a M.A. in Military Government from Columbia University. He has been a member of the Carolina faculty since 1930.

Dr. Jenkins was director of the 1941-1950 project, sponsored jointly by the Library of Congress and the University of North Caroina, which produced the great microfilm collection of early state records. The project has been widely acclaimed as one of the most prominent contributions to legal and historical research in the United States.

All friends of the church, both in Chapel Hill and in other communities, are invited to attend the services. Following the installation there will be a reception for the Rev. and Mrs. Barron in the church parlor.

The laymen and ministers in Orange Presbytery who will take part in the services are the Rev. John Whitley, minister of the First Presbyterian Church of Leaksville, pastoral prayer, the Rev. Chalmers McCutchen, minister of the First Presbyterian Church of Sanford, charge to the congregation, Howard Holderness, elder of the First Presbyterian Church, Greensboro, charge to the congregation, the Rev. The Rev. Mr. Barron, a native of Arkansas, comes to the Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church from the Second Presbyterian Church of Charleston of which he has been minister for the past four years. He and his family moved here last week, following acceptance of an official call extended to him by the congregation in September.

The church here has been without a regular minister since the resignation of the Rev. Charles M Jones a year ago. The Rev. Robert J. McMullen, acting pastor during most of the interim, has recently retired from the active ministry.

N. J. Governor Hits Those Who 'Sneer'

Gov. Robert B. Meyner, Democrat of New Jersey, last night scored "the general cynicism and indifference of the American people toward politics and politicians."

He spoke here under the auspices of the Carolina forum, non-partisan student organization, which brings to the campus prominent representatives of varying shades of political and economic opinion.

Governor Meyner, who was inaugurated last January for a four-year term and who is a former U. S. Senator, discussed politics as a career.

"These people who are forever griping about politicians are often the same persons who take no direct interest in public affairs — some of them don't even vote," he asserted.

"A good many business and professional men shun politics as though it were some kind of virus. They sneer at politicians. Yet these same people do not hesitate to seek political favors when it profits them to do so. Nor do they hesitate to ask politicians to do unethical things, from fixing parking tickets on up."

Governor Meyner added that "there is nothing whatever to prevent businessmen from going into politics; and I somehow feel they can do so with greater success if they will keep in mind that what is good for their business is not necessarily what is best for the country."

Admitting the possibility that some politicians fall in the classification of crooks and chiselers, Governor Meyner expressed his faith in the great majority of public servants as "honest, faithful and capable persons."

"A man in public life who is disloyal to his trust is far more likely to be exposed than a man in private industry, business or a learned profession. The public man is always under the watchful eye of the press."

Expressing his pride in being called a politician, the Governor defined creative politics as "testing new ideas in the light of the needs and aspirations of the people."

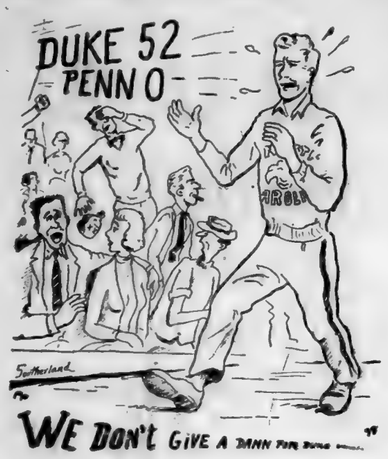
Quoting from an article in the New York Times last Sunday, he agreed that in politics it is sometimes necessary to compromise, provided essential principles are not violated.

"No man who is oversensitive to criticism should enter public life, for he is sure to get plenty of it. And no man who cannot face defeat should be a politician, because the people can throw him out of work—and often do."

Saying he was delighted to be in North Carolina, Governor Meyner paid tribute to former University President Frank P. Graham and to editor Jonathan Daniels.

North Carolina, he said, has been for some time in the forefront of Southern progress. "And its State University has won an illustrious place in the educational history of the nation and enjoys a great tradition in student government."

Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, professor of history, introduced Governor Meyner. Joel Fleishman, senior from Fayetteville, and Carolina Forum chairman, presided. The address was given in Hill Hall.



Preceding the address, the Carolina Forum gave a small dinner party at the Carolina Inn in honor of the Governor. A public reception in Graham Memorial followed the speech.

Governor Meynor said in his address that "there is also a kind of politics that specializes in resistance to change—in preserva-

Beat Dook!

The sports writing wizards who predict the outcome of football games are all agreed — Carolina over Georgia this afternoon. We trust they are right. And while we're hustling up encouragement for the Tar Heels, let's save a little for the Boilermakers of Perdue. Carolina rooters who remember the little scene at the Carolina-State game that is pictured here are hoping for something to holler about when the Duke-Purdue score comes over the Kenan loudspeakers this afternoon.

Break Out The Red Flannels, Ma!

While we all stood in the dusk of Wednesday evening, rubbing disbelief from our eyes, fall came. A thundershower beat down the dust in the afternoon; then the chilly air marched down from the Northwest and drove the hot air before it in retreat to the South.

Fall had put up a long, trying boycott. No one wanted to open a book during the week. No one wanted to celebrate on the football weekends. We waited, but fall demurred in the distant North. Nor would it even flash a hopeful breeze to us late in the night.

Then, as the first chilly breezes started blowing in Chapel Hill, the suddenness of it all—like drink after long perishing—imparted a certain indeterminable craze. People snatched woolens out of mothballs; they stepped about with a new spring in their toes; they even talked dizzily of building snow men on the lawns and throwing snowballs when the first snowflakes arrived.

Everybody agreed: Warm weather could have a long vacation. Fall was here.

Spencer On Shorts

After reading the case for Bermuda shorts on yesterday's front page, we were almost convinced they should be adopted by the coeds on days when chilly weather doesn't make them impractical. The coeds quoted in our feature story pronounced them comfortable and the campus is not so formal that they would be out of place.

That was before Betty Covington brought a communication from Spencer Dorm by the office. The verdict of the Spencer girls has convinced us against Bermudas, and perhaps you will be convinced too after hearing their quatrain:

Deck your lower limbs in pants,
Yours are the limbs, my sweet—
You look just fine approaching,
But have you seen yourself retreat?

Carolina Front

Forgotten Hero Had His Day On Grid Field

Louis Kraar

TODAY AS the fall winds flap the kick-pleats in trim coeds' skirts and Kenan Stadium fills, the ancient—but always changing — Georgia - Carolina football show will be on.

Since 1895 (when the Tar Heels threw the Bulldogs 10-6), these two schools have been taking each other on. There's been many a change since that first game. The long skirted young ladies who accompanied their Carolina gentlemen on that first encounter in the 90's have changed almost as much as the game of football itself.

NEVERTHELESS, the wave of enthusiasm that will start this morning with the arrival of alumni and continue until dawn crashes the parties along fraternity row is the same.

And the admiration for a football hero is still present. Carolina hasn't had a real one for the last few year. If today one is born his name will be on departinf alumni tongues, his picture in every coed's mind and his praises sung until the last party plays out.

The life of a football star's fame is usually as ephemeral as an edition of a daily paper, and fter one's time has passed his only gloryq is in the record books—and the minds of those oldtimers who watched him play.

TAKE A guy who used to play football. His name was William Webb Ellis, and he played for a school called Rugby in England back in '23—that's 1823.

Football wasn't too respectable a sport then, by the way. It seems that the whole business started early in the 16th century on British village greens. Only the young fellows of the lower classes participated (the nobles never liked to dirty their hands), and the ball was an inflated animal bladder.

Fortunately, by the time of our man Ellis (Rugby, '23) the elder's objections to the rowdy bladder booters had subsided. Public schools and fewer nobles helped quite the objections, I suspect.

ON THE fall afternoon that Ellis distinguished himself, football was strictly a kicking game. Scoring was possible only by kicking the ball (or bladder) over the opponent's goal.

Ellis grew rather disgusted with the game—an intraschool tilt—because it was drawing to a close without a score. Finally, exasperated to the final degree, Ellis seized a punt. And instead of heeling it for a free kick at hte goal, he ran helter skelter through his amazed opponents with the ball under his arm. Young Ellis scored football's first touchdown that afternoon.

RUGBY CAMPUS leaders were torn out about the play though. And alumni didn't praise Ellis, coeds didn't idolize; not even a little party was thrown. Instead he was censured, (term more suitable to politics than sports htese days).

Eventually, Ellis' touchdown was glorified. His fellow students a few years later voted that running the ball was perfectly cricket. And to show that they really appreciated the first touchdown, the erected a tablet in a shady ivy-grown wall comthe event.

So this afternoon in Kenan if Carolina finds another Justice, I'm for the alumno talking him up, the coeds looking starry-eyed, the parties continuing past dawn—and a tablet in some shady walk.

Teller's Bomb A Dud?

Joseph & Stewart Alsop

(The following is excerpted from the Alsops' syndicated column.—Editor.)

There is publicly available evidence which strongly suggests that the hydrogen bomb designed at Dr. Edward Teller's Livermore Laboratory turned out to be a failure during the Pacific test series last spring.

This evidence, it should be said at the outset, is in no way secret. It is all on the public record.

The evidence may not be conclusive—on that point, the reader must be allowed to judge for himself, yet it is worth reporting, simply because an extraordinary campaign is now under way to picture Dr. Teller as the true and only "father of the H-bomb", and virtually every other American scientist as a fuzzy-minded fool or worse.

The first part of the evidence consists of an official release by the Atomic Energy Commission itself. At the time of the test series at Eniwetok, in the Pacific, the AEC announced that both the Livermore Laboratory, established to give Dr. Teller a free hand in designing an H-bomb, and the great Los Alamos Laboratory, were "participating" in the tests.

The second part of the evidence consists of a statement by Dr. Norris Bradbury, Director of the Los Alamos Laboratory. This statement was made at an extraordinary press conference called by Bradbury on Sept. 14, to refute charges in the book, "The Hydrogen Bomb", by James Shepley and Clay Blair Jr., that Los Alamos resisted the H-bomb program.

The Los Alamos Laboratory, Dr. Bradbury said with emphasis has "developed EVERY SUCCESSFUL THERMONUCLEAR WEAPON THAT EXISTS TODAY" in the free world. The capitalization of the above words is to be found in the official Los Alamos release.

This statement certainly looks like a broad hint that only the Los Alamos bombs worked—that the H-bomb or bombs designed at Livermore failed. Dr. Bradbury should certainly know what he is talking about. An even broader hint came from Sen. Clinton P. Anderson. As ranking Democratic member of the Joint Congresional Atomic Energy Committee, Anderson should know what he is talking about.

Asked to comment on the Shepley-Blair book, Anderson said: "I wish that the AEC would remove from its classified character the report of what happened to the bombs designed by Dr. Teller and the Livermore Laboratory. The authors . . . might have asked the AEC how Dr. Teller's thermonuclear bombs have thus far exploded."

The conclusion is obvious. The "New Mexican," the astutely edited newspaper which serves Los Alamos, drew it. Anderson's statement, the well - informed "New Mexican," noted, "most nearly says what informed Los Alamos opinion has left unsaid." Quite obviously, what informed Los Alamos opinion has left unsaid is that the Teller - Livermore version of a hydrogen bomb was a dud.

There is nothing shameful about this. Although, as far as is known, there has never been a previous failure in the many AEC nuclear tests, failures are no doubt inevitable in so unexplored a field. Moreover, his bitterest critics do not doubt that Dr. Teller is a brilliant scientist. Yet in the rewrite of history now being promoted, Teller is not only brilliant. He is the virtually single - handed creator of the hydrogen bomb.

Teller, according to the book, "was at least within citing distance of a successful H-bomb" in 1946. Yet the opposition of a cabal of the most distinguished American scientists, combined with "foot - dragging at Los Alamos," caused a near fatal delay in the American H-bomb project. The day was saved when. thanks to the intervention of Lewis Strauss (the book's second hero), the new Livermore Laboratory was created for the lonely genius, Teller. This, the authors contend, belatedly had the effect of "energizing Los Alamos."

After citing the evidence that the "successful H-bomb" which Teller supposedly envisaged in 1946 turned out to be a dud in 1954, the "New Mexican" mildly remarked that there should be no doubt in anyone's mind who is energizing whom."

There is irony in this episode. But there is tragedy too. The tragedy does not lie in the expensive failure at Eniwetok — if such is was. The real tragedy is Dr. Teller's. Gordon Dean, former Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, has called the Shipley - Blair book a "blood-strained Valentine to Edward Teller." The blood, of course, is that of Dr. Teller's fellow scientists. The scientists are the more bitter because Teller has not yet seen fit to repudiate the "blood-stained Valentine," and to expose the falsehoods and distortions in the book, which he is in an excellent position to do.

The Ram Sees

Fall is definitely here and winter is rumbling in the background. Y-Courters have deserted the trees beside the Y for the sun-drenched steps of South Building, and the greenery on campus is beginning to sneak into autumn colors. All of a sudden you can tell who belongs to the Monogram Club and who doesn't, for to a man they break out in their sweaters. (And more power to 'em.) Coffee sales pick up in the Boox Ex, and winter clothing purchases boom downtown, which pleases the merchants no end. Ah yes, good old fall weather. You can have it. We'd rather sweat.

Notes and things: . . . .Only to a far rightist like David Mundy could the late Senator Pat McCarran seem "liberal and progressive." . . . and Mundy doesn't have to tell people he is not Rameses. Rameses at least has a speaking acquaintance with the king's English . . . All this talk about Bermuda shorts for the ladies seems a bit belated. A movement to put them in slacks or long woolies or something on that order would seem more appropriate to the weather. Brrrr. . .

Today is the last day to sign up for the Carolina-Maryland trains and buses to Washington, D. C. And today, also, is the day when the Tar Heels, to the theme of "Marching Over, Under and Through Georgia," will show that they can rid themselves of their fumbles and intercepted passes and romp to a victory which should announce to the world that we have a team to be reckoned with. We'll be there, Bushy and I, and we'll be listening for some real noise from the stands. BEAT GEORGIA!

Integration Won't Work, Says Creed

Dick Creed

Racial integration won't work.

One of the tragedies of our time is that it doesn't work and that a look into the future shows that it never will.

It won't work because people don't want it to, even those who are fighting for it most.

Because they are fighting not for integration, but for an idea.

An appeal to the spiritual, aesthetic, and democratic mind which this nation has evolved tells us that segragation should and must work. And we have a manifestation in tangible form of this mind's one big idea. It is the Constitution.

This is the idea over which the fight is waged. The Negro is secondary in the fray. It is inconceivable to the champions of non-segregation that the elements of that idea which they have inherited and which, they fancy, forces them to act was misconceived, or that, being conceived, it has been misinterprted.

It is needless to say that we are a young country. And it should be just as needless to say that our evolution is far from complete.

Though it may be said that whatever we do and whatever this country becomes has its foundation in the spiritual, aesthetic, and democratic ideals which we bost, practicality must be reckoned with.

Complete racial integration is not practical.

When the evolution of our national mind is complete, the benificent ideals will still be around, but on a more practical and realistic basis. They will be applied only to dealings between members of the superior race.

Brotherly love won't mean love for one's brother, but for one's kind. The dignity and rights of the common man won't mean that, but the dignity and rights of those with whom one has everything in common.

In other words, nothing will mean anything, and our evolution can end only in chaos.

There's something unfriendly about the smell of fresh paint.

They were just getting well under way toward painting the stairways and hallways of Everett when school started this year, and the dorm just didn't seem to when I came back in the fall.
and the dorm ust didn't seem to be as friendly as they used to

The musty smell, the cracked concrete floors in the halls, and the worn tile in the lower quad are being hidden.

I think the workmen have finished in Everett now, but just like always when I watch something being built or repaired, it looks as if they didn't finish, although I can't find anything in particular which should make me expect them back in the morning.

They put in television down there the other day. I don't think they finished that either. The knobs are there but they don't do much good. I think it must be the aerial.

YOU Said It

Strengthen The Honor System

Editor:

It seems that every time the words "Honor System" appear in the DTH, or are mentioned in conversation, there arises a multitude of quibblers saying, "Do you want a professor staring at you every time you take a quiz?"

Pray tell what it is so terrible about that? I can immediately see two definite advantages: (1) Did you ever want to ask a question and have to walk two flights of steps, or go from office to office looking for the prof? Why can't he remain present during the quiz and avail himself for questions which might save you valuable time needed to complete the quiz? (2) Do you prefer kissing your girl in the presence of a crowd? No? Then you prefer waiting until you are in private. So must a person prone to cheat like as much privacy as possible while carrying on his undercover activities.

Critics immediately point out that students are on their honor to report violators of the Honor Code. Does a person lose his honor when an instructor presents himself during a quiz? Of course, he doesn't. But I believe that chances of him having to invoke his responsibility can be greatly reduced.

There is no perfect system, but a combination of two good ones might lessen the frequency of statements such as this, "I know I saw him looking on your paper but I couldn't prove it; it was just my word against his."

Why not remove some of the temptation for the weak to stray from the straight an l narrow?

Editor:

In Friday's paper Mr. Louis Kraar notes that your column "The Ram Sees" is headed by an unknown person.

Saturday's paper contains some attempt at defense of not signing in "The Ram Sees," but both this column and "The Eye of The Horse" continue to be published without their writers being identified.

Just why is this? Both columns seem at times fairly readable examples of undergraduate journalism.

Sounds

Tom Spain

(This is the first in a series of Saturday columns on recorded jazz, mostly modern, by Tom Spain. It will be interesting reading for the connoisseur and a guide to good jazz for the neophyte.—Editor.)

Enthusiasts of jazz as an honest basic art have something to live for. The many who suffered the decline of real New Orleans and Chicago jazz, watched the fade-out of Goodman and Shaw, tolerated the the bop era, and are presently awaiting the end of this age of imitation, can again look for new, different, and good music. It was with sorrow that many watched the dollar do to jazz in the thirties just what Whiteman did to Bix Beiderbecke in 1929. All seemed lost when it came to finding jazz that was creative and new as it was back then, and the relief could be found only in a not-so-difficult choice between old-time record reprints and the Norman Granz boys.

But today's story is different. What happened in New Orleans and Chicago back in prohibition time is happening in uptown New York and Hollywood.

The comparison is a good one. A look at a '24 issue of Metronome would reveal many unknown artists and titles. Condon, then unknown, was featuring "I AIN'T GONNA GIVE NOBODY NONE OF MY JELLY ROLL," and Jimmy Noone was playing blues numbers of untold characteristics and titles. But to the followers of early jazz, "I'VE FOUND A NEW BABY" meant as much as "YES WE HAVE NO BANANAS" means to the United Fruit Co. The bandstand and hotelroom improvising of the jazz artists was something new. It was creatively honest and pure without impediments of any sort. Its quality will never lose its luster and feeling.

A latest copy of Metronome will allow a similar picture; only the year and styles differ. The musicians' names and the titles, too are different, but as in the Twenties, the music is something new, untried and fresh.

Nobody's quite sure just what the new stuff is called. Modern-Progressive is an apt term, although it conotes bop. There's no doubt about Harry Babasin and Gerry Mulligan being both modern and progressive in their music, but its definitely not bop. Critic John Hammond says that today's jazz is a no-man's land as the opinions as to its origin run in two general directions. Some say it began with Leadbelly's strumming an ill-tuned guitar in a New Orleans train depot, while others maintain it is a result of a refining process of better bop. It's true that many of the most prominent artists in the progressive school are refugees from the late forties, but their stuff isn't the same. One sure way to identify today's creations in sound is in reference to the West Coast or Uptown.

One of this year's most delightful recordings is by Buck Clayton and an assortment of musicians picked at random by a pair of Columbia's jazz authorities. In an effort to achieve spontaneous improvisation, eleven artists were invited to participate in a jam session at Columbia studios. Some of them met for the first time, while others renewed old acquaintances; some had played together; some had only heard of the others. But their styles and musical feeling were similar.

Clayton, certainly an old timer—but an adaptable one—was picked to lead and name the selections. They were asked to play what they wished, in any way they wished, as long as they wished. "HUCKLE-BUCK" and "ROBBINS' NEST" are the selections picked for the first session. There were no time limitations, no arrangements and no rehearsing. They simply sat back listening and awaiting their solos, making one of the first and definitely the finest jam session in captivity.

Improvising all the way, they ramble through sixty-three choruses of Huckle-Buck, developing, setting up riffs, and experimenting. The pace is easy, set by a Basietype rhythm section which is led by Sir Charles Thompson on piano. Walter Page and Jo Jones, bass and drums respectively with Freddie Green on guitar could fill out no finer section in any band. Clayton and Joe Newman (Basie's lead trumpet) set up a question and answer team on six choruses, their styles sounding so similar that one might think Clayton in an echo chamber. Urbie Green, perhaps the finest trombone man around, is backed up by Henderson Chambers, who can hold his own in anybody's jam session. On reeds we find Charlie Fowlkes, baritone, Julian Dash, tenor, and Lem Davis, alto. The entire ensemble is made up of eleven great soloists, yet excellent team musicians.

The performance of both numbers is truly outstanding. The easy, definite beat is most relaxing and the solos aren't forced or hammed up. "ROBBIN'S NEST and HUCKLE-BUCK are real creations in sound, the results more pleasing than can be imagined or described. Take about thirty-seven minutes of Kemp's time and pick up on some of the best in jazz—jazz as is was meant to be.

Quote, Unquote

A multitude of Americans will remember James Street best as the author of such best sellers as "The Gauntlet" and "Tap Roots." Certainly he was an author deserving a lasting place in the people's memories. But some of us newspaper folks in North Carolina are going to remember James Street best as the champion of non-conformity who stood boldly in Chapel Hill a few days before his death and ex claimed, "Keep your dirty hands off this University."

Don't let the trustees tamper with freedom of the University. Don't let the President tamper with it Don't let the writers tamper with it. Don't let anybody tamper with it. Keep the University free That's what James Street said. And his audience burst into spontaneous applause.

Though none of us knew it at the time, this was a farewell message to newspaper people from a man who bounced to fame as a novelist from the newspaper world. This was the real James Street speaking. And if he could be among us once more with an opportunity to choose a farewell message, we have the feeling that he would still exclaim with compelling fervor. "Keep your dirty hands off this University!". —Smithfield Herald.

Over The Hill

By FRED BABSON

The football sailed lazily through the crisp autumn air, rising high above the gray outline of the stadium. The dark oval seemed to hang in mid-air for an instant, forming a silhouette against the milky-white clearness of the October sky. Then it began its wobbly descent into the arms of a waiting back. The final, booming echo of foot meeting pigskin faded away, lost in the vast emptiness of Kenan Stadium.

The University of Georgia Bulldogs were working out at Kenan in their final preparation for today's game. Coach Wally Butts had brought his boys up a day earlier than most coaches do to give them the benefit of familiarizing themselves with a foreign field. The Bulldogs went through their drills spiritedly, ignoring the fact that the dopesters pick them to lose today. A casual glance at the squad would remind one of the Red and Black Georgia warriors who romped over the Tar Heels down in Athens last year by a comfortable 27 to 14 margin. But closer scrutiny discerns the absence of a couple of lads who were practically the whole show a year ago, namely, Zeke Bratkowski and John Carons. It was this passing combination that wrecked the Blue and White charges of George Barclay.

Carolina had developed a defense designed to thwart the dreaded "Brat" to Carsons phenomenon. History shows that it did not work.

Butts apparently has not found anybody to fill the shoes of his departed All-American combination, for Georgia hasn't exactly been setting the world on fire with any sort of scouting flame. Johnny Harper, Bratkowski's old understudy, has moved up. Steve Belichick, a member of the Tar Heel coaching staff, scouted the Bulldogs' last two games and made the bold statement that Harper was "better than Bratkowski." Judging from Georgia's unimpressive record thus far, Belichick's statement had all the earmarks of pre-game pessimism usually voiced by coaches who expect a close contest. At any rate, we will see today.

Shortly after the visitors had worked up a mild lather and decided to retire to the showers yesterday, the local gridders trotted into the stadium for their daily exercise. Head Coach Barclay took his first two teams up to the West end of the gridiron and put them through their pass defence drills. At the East end, Line Coach Marvin Bass worked easily with a group of linemen. There was no obvious display of excitement or pre-game jitters. Strenuous work was avoided. The players were being allowed to regain the vitality that a hard week of practice takes out of them.

Coach Barclay was not in his working clothes. He wore a brown suit. Most of the shouting of orders that was necessary was left to his assistants, Coaches Belichick and Edwards. Some of the players occasionally livened the proceedings up with shouts; but, generally, they went about their tasks in a quiet, business-like manner. This was their last chance to get their assignments down pat, and to that end they worked. Len Bullock presented a study in concentration. Two weeks ago, he played approximately three of the last four minutes in the State game. That was the extent of his action that day. Today he is the starting quarterback; he has come a long way in two weeks.

Booters Beaten By Fort Bragg In Exhibition

Ft. Bragg defeated Carolina's soccer team 3 to 1 yesterday for their second exhibition victory over the Tar Heels. The much improved Carolina squad, seeking revenge after last weeks 7-1 loss to the Soldiers, gave the Ft. Bragg team a good battle.

Carolina scored first as Chip Bryant booted a goal in the first period. Ft. Bragg retaliated as Lachiw and Luckashawsky scored for the soldiers to give them a 2-1 lead at the end of the first quarter.

Neither team scored during the tight defensive play of the second and third periods. Luckashawsky boosted an insurance goal for Ft. Bragg in the last period.

Center-forward Chip Bryant led Carolina's attack, and Pete Cothran, Calvin Lane, and Jerry Russell drew praise for their play from Coach Marvin Allen.

Todays match was the last exhibition game for the Tar Heels. The squad opens its conference schedule by playing Maryland's defending champs at College Park next Saturday. Game time is 10 a. m. Students who arrive early for the football clash will have an opportunity to view the match.

tion of the status quo. It is the tug between these two forces that produces great issues and great debates.

"I believe that the intelligent conservative has his uses, for it is through his resistance that the nation is protected from extremists. It is in the clash of controversy that ideas are refined and cleansed of error. And that is why freedom of speech and thought, and open debate, are indispensable to the democratic spirit."

In his opening remarks Governor Meyner commented on education and the segregation decision. New Jersey faced the same problem in 1947 when a new Constitution was adopted, and during the next five years ended segregation "almost without untoward incident," he said.

"I do not mean to minimize the difficulties of the problem in the South, but the Supreme Court is allowing time to work it out, and it is also true once changes in the social structure are completed, they gain a general acceptance.

"If you look back 30 or 40 years you will find many proposals which were considered dangerously radical, but which have become part of everyday customs, laws and morals," he asserted.

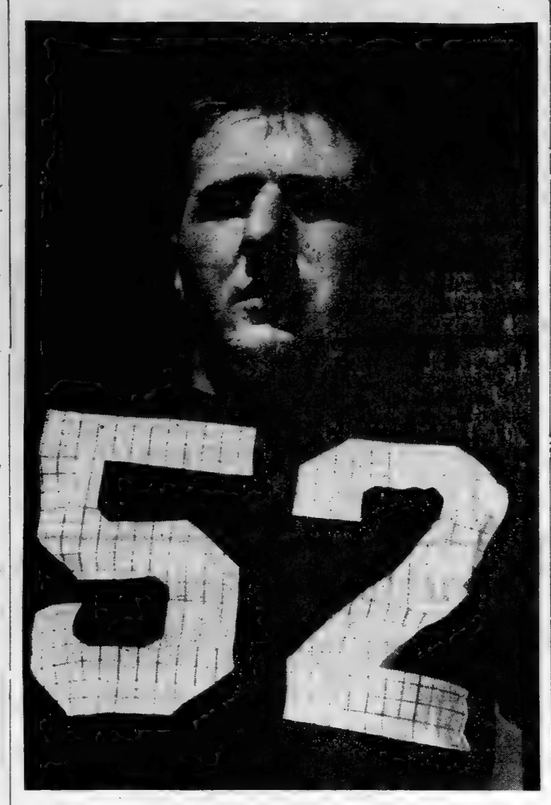
Georgia also won last year's game, 27-14.

Georgia, in compiling its 2-1 record this season, holds victories over Florida State (13-0) and Clemson (14-7). The Bulldogs dropped last week's game against Texas A & M, 6-0.

Carolina won its opener from N. C. State, 20-6, and was tied last Saturday by Tulane, 7-7.

Officials for today's game are: Referee, L. L. McMasters (S. E.); Umpire, T. B. Amis (S. E.); Linesman, M. E. McClenny (no college); Judge, Tatum Gressette South Carolina).



A crowd of 20,000 to 25,000 is expected.

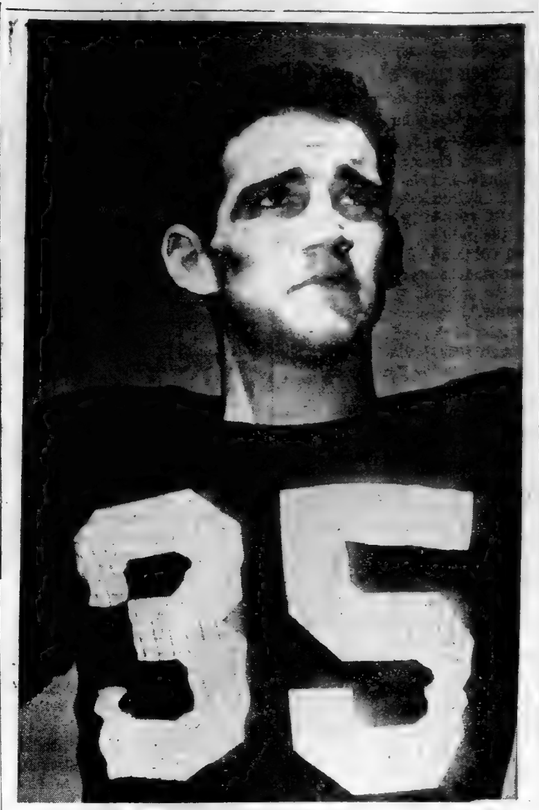
Oklahoma - Texas, Wisconsin - Rice Hog Gridiron Spotlight This Afternoon

GEORGE STAVNITSKI, 210-pound center, who moved up to take first team center position during the week. Stavnitski, only a sophomore, sparked the freshman line last year.

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.

Oklahoma and Texas, two of the most potent football teams in the Southwest, if not in the entire nation, meet today in the 49th game of an old and colorful series. And the result could leave the national rankings as thoroughly scrambled as Oklahoma's lineup has been since Gene Calame got hurt.

Because of their high ratings and their tradition of playing fast and furious football in their annual clash at the Texas State Fair, these teams get top billing over such encounters as Wisconsin vs. Rice, Iowa vs. Michigan and Purdue vs. Duke.



Oklahoma was awarded the No. 1 spot on the national list this week by the sports writers and broadcasters voting in the Associated Press ranking poll after Notre Dame, the former leader, took a tumble. Texas, in spite of a loss to Notre Dame, collected enough points for 15th place.

Calame, a clever, experienced quarterback, suffered a cracked collar bone in Oklahoma's games against Texas Christian two weeks ago. That could be called a Calame-ity. The Sooners never have lost a game Gene started at quarterback and his replacement, a 164-pound sophomore, Jimmy Harris, isn't his equal at faking, ball-handling and reading the enemy defenses. Two other injuries caused Coach Bud Wilkinson to make a total of eight changes in his first and second lineups.

As a result of all this and of the strength of the Texas line, the odds-makers have disregarded the ratings and installed Texas as a slight favorite.

Wisconsin-Rice is the nationally televised game of the week and, for once, the screen watchers can't complain that they were shorthanged by the seletion. They're third and 11th in the AP ratings, respectively, and offer a duel between two of the season's best-publicized backs, explosive Dicky Moegle of Rice and Wisconsin's rashing Alan Ameche.

Purdue-Duke brings together the fifth and sixth teams in the AP poll. It was Stu Holcomb's Purdue Boilermakers and sophomore passer Len Dawson who deflated Notre Dame last week. Today Duke, with four able flingers in its starting backfield, a bruising line, and one of the nation's best pass defense records, is primed to do a little deflating.

HALFBACK KEN KELLER is expected to see limited action against Bulldogs this afternoon.

Boilermakers, Blue Devils Risk Victory Streaks Today

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Oct. 8 (AP) — Purdue's Boilermakers, hoping to rivet a third victory onto their season's string of two, meet Duke's unbeaten Blue Devils tomorrow in a game that is expected to draw a near-capacity football crowd to Ross-Ade Stadium.

Both will be aiming for top ranking honors. Purdue was rated fifth and Duke sixth in the nation in this week's Associated Press poll.

National attention shifted to Purdue last Saturday when the Boilermakers upset Notre Dame 27-14, after the previous week's win over Missouri 31-0.

But Duke has been in the spotlight, too, with its 52-0 drubbing of Pennsylvania and 7-6 defeat of Tennessee.

All eyes will be on Lenny Dawson, Perdue's 19-year-old quarterback whose forward passing production this season has been phenomenal. His two-game total is eight touchdowns.

But Duke has a reputation for pass defense, having allowed Pennsylvania and Tennessee to average only 40.5 yards in nine completions out of 29 tries. Duke defenders intercepted seven of their opponents' aerials.

Perdue has memories of last year's meeting at Durham, N. C., where quarterback Jerry Barger scored in the last 39 seconds to beat the Boilermakers 20-14.

The Blue Devils also have a sophomore sensation of their own in quarterback Sonny Jurgersen, who engineered touchdowns against both Tennessee and Penn. Furthermore, Worth Lutz, moved from quarterback to fullback this year, carried with him a fine throwing arm which Duke has yet to exploit to the fullest this year.

Both squads were expected to have most hands ready for action.

Purdue coach Stu Holcomb said he expects to stick to the starting lineup used against Notre Dame with the exception of injured left end Bob Springer. He will be replaced by senior John Kerr.

Duke arrived at Lafayette this afternoon and took a light workout in the stadium.

Maryland Terps Open Atlantic Coast Loop Season Against Deacs

WINSTON-SALEM, Oct. 8 (AP)— Maryland's travel - minded Terrapins, ranked 13th in the nation, open their Atlantic Coast Conference football season here tomorrow against Wake Forest.

The schools last met on the gridiron in 1944, with Wake Forest a 39-0 winner, its only victory in three starts against Maryland.

Maryland has played only two games this season and has yet to perform at home. Jim Tatum's Terps won at Kentucky last month, 20-0, and last Friday night dropped a 12-7 game to UCLA at Los Angeles.

Wake Forest has won two of three games blanking North Carolina State, 26-0, last week in its conference opener. The Deacons' aggressive line blocked two punts to turn a tight game into a rout. Their hard-running backs rolled up 242 yards on the ground in their sharpest performance of the season.

Gamecocks Out To Regain Rank

GREENVILLE, S. C., Oct. 8 (AP) — South Carolina's injury-ridden football team will try to regain some of the prestige lost in last week's game with West Virginia in a meeting with Furman here tomorrow.

Drama Group Meets Tomorrow

Tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock, the Community Drama Group will meet once more in the assembly-exhibition room of the University Library.

Everyone is most welcome to come and join in the reading of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Background music will be furnished by recordings.

The reading will be directed by Mrs. Sybil Linde, who, for a number of years, taught speech and dramatics in Cincinnati, where she also served as a church organist and choir director. Much of her training was received at the Pasadena, California School of the Theatre. A very large cast is required for the reading of this play, and Mrs. Linde hopes that all who are interested in reading Shakespeare will be present to share in the evening.

Copies of the script are available through Miss Stella Lyons, at her newsstand in the Post Office.

'Biggest Show' In Raleigh Monday

Peggy Lee will be co-starred with Billy Eckstein in the fall edition of "The Biggest Show of '54" at the Raleigh Memorial Auditorium on Monday evening October 18th.

Other artists to appear are Pete Rugolo and his orchestra, the Drifters, Harold King, The Slate Brothers, George Kirby and the Arnauts. There will be only one show at 8:15 which will be the only appearance of the show east of Charlotte.

During the 1948-49 season Miss Lee was featured on the Chesterfield Supper Club. She was named Capitol Records top female recording artist and won Billboard Magazine's accolade as the nation's most favored feminine vocalist in 1949-50.

Pete Rugolo, a pioneer in progressive jazz composition and orchestration, will make his first appearance with the Biggest Show; but his past work in the music world justify his selection to the spot.

Pete has been voted best arranger of the year for the past five years in polls conducted by top jazz publication "Downbeat" and "Metronome" as well as a South American poll for outstanding scoring. He was Musical Director for Capitol Reords in 1950. Rugolo has conducted and arranged for such outstanding artists as Nat Cole, Billy Eckstine, Mel Torme, Tony Martin, Betty Hutton, Debbie Reynolds, Peggie Lee and June Christy. He has also arranged music for many movie films, among them "Skirts Ahoy", "Glory Alley", "Latin Lovers", "Easy To Love" and "The Strip". Pete also conducted and composed for the "Woman of the Year" radio show which starred Bette Davis.

Sine 1945, more than sixty of Rugolo compositions have been recorded by Stan Kenton. Music critics say Rugolo represents the modern jazz musician's ideal arranger and conductor.

Mail order and ticket sale for this show will be filled at Thiem's Record Shop in Raleigh. There will be both reserved and non-reserved seats for this date. Doors will open at 7:15 p.m. with the show starting at 8:15 p.m.

'Crucible' Stars Veteran Actors

Leslie Casey and Robert Sonkowsky have been given the leading roles of Elizabeth and John Proctor in "The Crucible by Arthur Miller, to be presented by the Carolina Playmakers October 13 through 17, at 8:30 p. m., in the Playmakers Theatre.

The play, a story of suspicion and rumor bringing hysteria to the Puritan town of old Salem, Mass., tells how one man, John Proctor, battles to bring forward the truth about the witchcraft panic even at the risk of his own reputation.

Leslie Casey, graduate student in the department of dramatic art, is a familiar figure to Playmakers audiences. Last year she appeared in the touring production "On Borrowed Time" and in the Forest Theatre show "Dark of The Moon." She has also acted with the Playmakers in "The Silver Whistle" and in several one-act productions. Prior to coming to Chapel Hill, she was active with the Children's Theatre in Goldsboro, N. C.; the Corpus Christi Little Theatre, Corpus Christi, Texas; and the Shanks Village Theatre, Shanks Village, New York.

Robert Sonkowsky is a newcomer to the campus. A graduate student in the classics department, he received his B. A. from Lawrence College, Appleton, Wis., where he appeared in productions of "The Devil's Disciple," "Boy Meets Girl," "Arms and the Man," "The Inspector General," "Othello" and others. In all of these plays he had major or leading roles. The versatile actor has also appeared with the Attic Summer Theatre.

"He's cute," said one coed to another.

"Umm, hmm, but he's crazy," replied Coed Two.

"Crazy how?" asked the first.

"Well, for one thing, look how he dresses. He has a whole wardrobe of those perfectly stunning Van Heusen Vanahue shirts . . . you know the beautiful colored ones with the wonderful collar styles, those short ones and button-downs and spreads and everything?"

"He must be loaded," commented No. 1. "He's really cute."

"Silly. You don't have to be rich to own Vanahue Shirts. They may look like custom shirts, but they only cost $3.95."

"So what's so crazy?"

"Look at him," replied No. 2. He's got on that lovely green Vanahue with a blue suit."

"I don't care. He's cute."

"But he could wear almost any of his others . . . the pink, the yellow, the blue, or even the vintage. It's only because he's nuts."

Shortly thereafter, our No. 1 girl met the freshman in question at the drug store. With astonishing tact, she said: "My girl friend thinks you're nuts."

"So does my room-mate," he replied sadly.

"Why?"

"Just because I like pancakes."

"You do? Well, gee, come over to the fraternity house. I've got trunks of 'em."

"You're cute," she said.

Bulldogs Capitalize On Tar Heel Fumbles; Win 21 To 7

A Little Heat, A Drill Squad, Little Boy Lost

Football in Kenan Stadium yesterday was 20,000 spectators, some cheering and others silent.

It was a drink vender in the card section wearing an orange and black no. 55 football jersey. And it was the UNC band playing "The Bunny Hop" in the stands when things out on the field weren't hopping in the right direction for Carolina.

It was a couple hundred Boy Scouts who cheered the University's Naval ROTC's crack drill squad when they went into the intricate Queen Anne salute.

Yesterday's football game was the autumn leaves effect that you saw in the air when the card section tossed away their colored cards. And it was the guy next to you who said of the card stunts, "They're droodles. We're supposed to guess what they are."

And it was the cheer that rippled through the Carolina stands when the loudspeaker boomed out the Duke-Purdue score. Duke was ahead. It was Spero in section 15. who (with the help of his portable) was giving a play-by-play of the Blue Devil game.

It was gray sport coats and coed sweaters in the almost too warm sun. And it was the cop who alfeel asleep in the stands during the third quarter.

But most of all it was football —where one team usually loses. And we were the team.

UNC's First Loss; Bullock Makes Tally

By BERNIE WEISS

Georgia's Bulldogs recovered two fumbles, converted both into touchdowns, and drove 54 yards for a third score to defeat Carolina, 21-7, yesterday afternoon at Kenan Stadium before approximately 20,000 fans.

It was the Tar Heels' first loss of the season.

Again Carolina bested its opponent in rushing yardage, 186 yards to 168 (net), but the Blue and White just couldn't come through with the offensive power when it was needed most.

Georgia racked up 17 first downs to Carolina's 12.

"We just made too many mistakes," said Carolina coach George Barclay after the game.

Charlie Madison, fleet Bulldog halfback, and Jimmy Harper, the master - minding quarterback, were the big cogs in the winners' ground - gaining monster. The team showed a tremendous amount of power in the second half, scoring two touchdowns on long drives which wilted UNC's defense, previously rated third in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Harper did most of Georgia's damage in the airlanes, completing four passes for 57 yards.

Madison Scores

Georgia tallied its first touchdown on its initial series of downs when Madison ran 28 yards to paydirt. Carolina did not get into the scoring column until halfway through the second period when Bullock dove over on a quarterbak sneak. Georgia's other scores came in the third period, Bob Clemens going over from three yards off-tackle, and in the fourth quarter when Howard Kelly made it on the same play.

Madison was Georgia's top ground-gainer, eating up 48 yards in seven carries.

For Carolina, Ed Sutton was the top individual runner, carrying the ball six times for 67 yards. Most of this came on a fourth-quarter43 - yard run. Ken Keller, his leg still sore from an injury sustained before the season's opening, gained 48 yards.

Len "Teedee" Bullock, starting his first varsity game and playing without relief for more than three quarters, could gain only 14 yards via aerials. Three of his four completions came in the first half. Bullock was replaced in the fourth period by Marshall Newman, who tried two passes and completed both for 30 yards.

Carolina's old nemesis, the fumbles, got into the game early. On the second play from scrimmage fullback Larry Parker dropped the pigskin, Georgia's Bill Saye recovering on the Tar Heel 47.

Seven Plays To Score

Bulldog mastermind Harper took over from there and engineered the distance to the goal in seven plays. He had moved the pigskin in six downs to the Carolina 27 where he executed a beautiful fake and handed off to Madison, who went around the end all the way. Madison also made good on the point - after - touchdwn and Georgia led, 7-0.

Carolina finally got its sputtering offense burning on high octane gas in the second quarter, moving 70 yards behind the running of Sutton and Keller to Georgia's goal. The drive began when a Bulldog punt rolled dead on the UNC 30. With Bullock's arm working full-time, either passing, pitching out or handing off, the Tar Heels quickly got to the Georgia one. Bullock swan-dived over the center of the line for the tally and Keller's placement was perfect to deadlock the sore at 7-7.

The Tar Heels almost tallied again toward the end of the period when Gravitte attempted a pass to Keller, who was waiting in the end zone. However the aerial was interepted by Bob Garrard to end the threat. The first half came to

Says UNC's Barclay:

Same Old Story

By LARRY SAUNDERS

Coach George Barclay sat in the Kenan Stadium equipment room, his head bent low and his slightly gray hair brushed down over his forehead. Red faced, with his head in his hands, the Carolina coach listened silently to the radio description of the Duke-Purdue football game. Suddenly, he pushed his hair back, got up and walked toward the dressing room. His Tar Heels had just suffered their first defeat of the season, a 21-7 loss to Georgia.

In Barclay's opinion, it was the same old Carolina story. "We made too many mistakes," he said. "We made it easy for them (Georgia). We just made too many mistakes. Our fumbles really hurt us."

The Tar Heel dressing room was quiet. The players trickled in slowly and headed for the Coke machine. Quarterback Len Bullock talked to friends outside of the locker room. He agreed with Barclay that the fumbles hurt. "Their line was good and I thought their quarterback (Jimmy Harper) played a good game," Bullock said.

Guard George Foti agreed that Harper looked good. He said, "They were just better than we were. I didn't believe they had us beat until the game was over."

End Dick Starner didn't know what was wrong with the Tar

What Won The Game?

Those Two Drives

By BOB DILLARD

Coach Wally Butts was all smiles yesterday afternoon as he drifted through the crowd of well-wishers and friends toward the Georgia dressing room. And well he had a right to be, after the showing his Bulldogs made.

The Georgia mentor was modest in his statements about the game. "We were fortunate enough to sustain two drives in the second half. That was the main thing, those two drives."

The Bulldogs were a happy lot. The laughter and smiles were flowing freely throughout the room. There was no doubt in the mind of someone entering the room that he was seeing the winning team. The managers were in with the team, making cracks and in general adding to the happy atmosphere of the room. Out of the shower came loud laughing, and noises were hurled back and forth across the room.

When Bill Saye, Georgia center, said, "It was good for us," he echoed the sentiments of the rest

Three Grants Are Awarded In Pharmacy

Three research grants, totaling $16,095, have been awarded the School of Pharmacy at the University for the year 1914-55, Dean E. A. Brecht of the Pharmacy School announced yesterday.

A grant of $6,235 was received for the eighth consecutive year from the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Research Foundation, Dean Brecht said. This grant includes research fellowships for four graduate students in the School of Pharmacy and funds for research supplies and library materials. It was incorporated in 1946 through the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Association to foster and promote pharmaceutical education and research at the School of Pharmacy and throughout the State.

Industrial research fellowships are assigned as follows: William S. Merrell Company Fellowship to Nicholas H. Batuyios, Wilmington; Vick Chemical Company Fellowship to Earl T. Brown, Leicester; and the Sharpe and Dohme Fellowship to Robert W. Meschke, Darien, Conn. A. W. Jowdy, Jr., New Bern, received a non-industrial research fellowship from the foundation.

Grants totalling $3,360 were received from the American Foundation for Pharmaceutical Education, a national corporation organized to promote pharmaceutical education and research at both the graduate and undergraduate levels. Two graduate research fellowships were assigned to Ben F. Cooper, Warsaw, and Cleborn E. Kimsey, Chattanooga, Tenn.

A post graduate research grant was assigned for a third consecutive year, to be directed by Dr. W. H. Hartung, Professor of Pharmaceutical Chemistry, on the syntheses of amino acids and peptides.

Med School Now Offering Grad Courses

Postgraduate courses in medicine open to all physicians in the State are being offered during the 1954-55 academic year both in Chapel Hill and as extension meetings in other cities throughout the State.

Dr. W. P. Richardson, assistant dean for Continuation Education at the school, released yesterday a preliminary schedule of all courses, which are sponsored by the UNC School of Medicine and Extension Division.

"The programs for these courses are carefully planned to give a balanced presentation of subjects of particular significance to the general practitioner, to aid him in professional growth as well as in meeting his day to day problems," Dr. Richardson said.

He added that certificates of attendance will be given, and all courses provide credit toward fulfillment of the American Academy of General Practice's requirements.

Frat Rush Starts Today

Fraternity row will roll out the welcome mat and extend its glad hands to several hundred rushees this afternoon as formal rushing gets underway.

Rushing begins today at 2:30 p.m. and will continue through Thursday night. The following Monday, Oct. 13, will be shakeup night. Strict silence between fraternity men and rushees will be maintained from Thursday night. until shakeup night.

After shakeup on Monday night, strict silence will be observed again until pledge day — Wednesday, Oct. 20. Silence and rushing will end after Wednesday noon.

Inter-Fraternity Council spokesman Ed McCurry reminded fraternities yesterday that it is a violation of IFC rules to inform a rushee that he has been accepted before Wednesday, Oct. 20. It is also a violation for rushees to commit themselves before shakeup night.

McCurry said that any violation of strict silence after rushing hours will be punishable both to fraternities and to rushees.

Freshman with questions about rushing may refer them to the Dean of Student Affairs Office in 206 South Building, according to McCurry.

Rushing schedule is as follow:

Today from 2:30 to 5:30; Monday night from 7 to 10 o'clock, Tuesday from 7 to 9:30, Wednesday from 7 to 9:30 and Thursday from 7 to 9:30. Shakeup night is Monday, Oct. 18, from 7 to 8:30. Pledging is anytime atfer noon Wednesday.

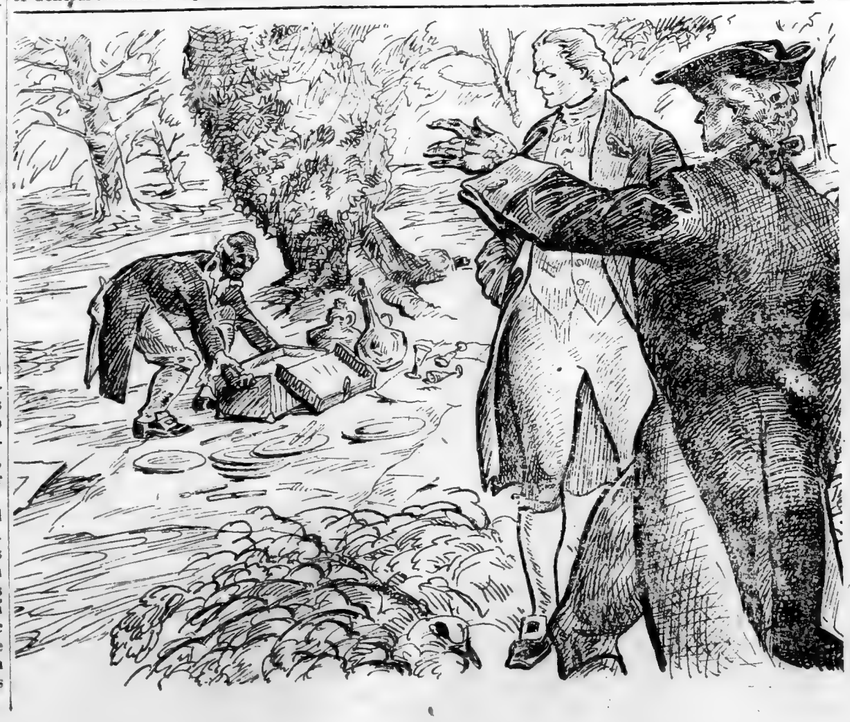
UNC Pianist Carol Sites Will Play Second Petite Musicale

Carol Sites, graduate student in the Music Department, will present a piano recital on the Graham Memorial petites musicales series next Sunday night, Oct. 17, at 8 o'clock in the GM Main Lounge.

Miss Sites is the second artist to appear on the petites musicales series this year. Her program will consist of selections from Mozart, Chanler, Piston, Barber, Debussy and Shumann.



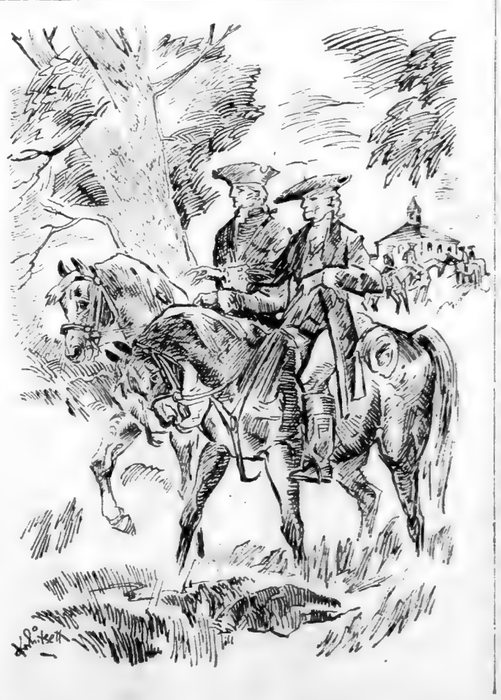
Since the fall of 1952, Miss Sites, a native of Martinsbury, Va., has been a graduate assistant and instructor in piano in the music department here. Previously she taught piano and theory at the Adirondack Music Center and piano and music appreciation at Averett College in Danville, Va. Last summer she taught piano at the Uuniversity of Wisconsin music clinic.

Before coming to UNC she graduated from the University of Cincinnati and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. She has also studied privately with Roland Goldsand, pianist, in Cincinnati and New York.

The petites musicales are presented every other Sunday night by the Graham Memorial Student Union. Following each performance a reception is held in the Main Lounge in honor of the guest artist.

CAROLINA CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

The Carolina Christian Fellowship will meet Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Woodshop Room of Graham Memorial. The speaker will be Connie Bouldin, a Greensboro engineer.



Cornerstone Re-Laying Will Be Held

Old East's cornerstone will be re-laid Tuesday as part of traditional University Day activities, according to Chancellor Robert B. House.

The 161st anniversary of the founding of the University of North Carolina, called University Day, will be observed Tuesday morning beginning at 10:50 in the south court of South Building. Classes and laboratories will be dismissed at 10:50 o'clock for the remainder of the day.

On the right, two gentlemen on horseback ride from a meeting concerning plans for the University.

A Quiet Afternoon At Kenan

We know this is an old song—but you haven't been listening. And so this morning we'd like to take you to task again for not cheering for the Tar Heels yesterday afternoon.

Things were fine before the game. Good and loud. Same for the tight first half. But after the half (and a wasteful, dangerous, and embarrassing sailing of stunt cards over the card section) nothing Jim Fountain could do was enough to coax more than a quiet ripple from Tar Heel throats. One coed we know worked a crossword puzzle during the whole second half, thus missing Ed Sutton's thrilling run. And with Carolina only one touchdown behind, the hometown cheering section let a handful of Georgia rooters out-holler us.

It used to be that Carolina was well known for cheering for its football team. Even when its football team was losing.

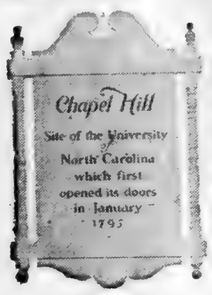
The Omnipresent Bee

If anybody thinks the bees that infest the campus are a bourgeois breed, let it be here reported that they were observed in great numbers yesterday at a floozy luncheon on the Morehead Planetarium balcony three stories above the ground, testing the tea of President Gray, Provost Purks, and Dr. Archibald Henderson just as they sip our nickel cup of coffee every day in the Y Court.

From The News And Observer

Lost Art

Many persons in recent years have deplored the "lost art" of conversation. The number of laments has arisen since the advent of television, which seems to have the power of silencing even the most garrulous.



In a recent speech at Brown University, Dr. A. Whitney Griswold did more than deplore the decline of conversation; he also proposed to do something about the situation. The president of Yale told Brown students:

> The most important thing about any form of communication is what is communicated. The most important thing about what is communicated is its valuation in the currency of Socrates' coin. The utilitarian skills and techniques of each generation are soon outmoded. The search for wisdom and virtue never is. Not all the technological triumphs of history have satisfied man's need for these, nor displaced or even approached them as the most inspiring and fruitful of all subjects of human conversation.
> We must manage to present this subject to our undergraduates in such a way as we will inspire them to help revive conversation in this tongue-tied democracy that has such good ideas yet cannot speak its own mind.

Dr. Griswold places the responsibility where it belongs. If the trend which has resulted in the decline of conversation is ever reversed, colleges will have to do the job. And Yale and Brown, great universities that they are, cannot do the job alone. If all colleges should join with Dr. Griswold, they could not only revive the art of conversation, they could also revive the distinction which once was attached to being a college graduate.

Pink-Breasted Starlings Have Plenty of Spunk

Louis Kraar

COLLEGE STUDENTS "have gone back to the coal bin."

A grizzled old graduate told me this recently when I was home. He was talking about the clothes today's students wear. He recalled a visit to his old campus.

"Remembering the sweaters of my youth, I sure was sad to see the girls in their droopy skirts and Bermuda shorts. But the real shock came when I saw the fashion-conscious collegians drooping around the lawns of fraternity row," he said.

"WHAT SHOCKED you about the fraternity row clothes?" I asked.

"Well," he went on, "in their drab blacks and grays and murky browns and their uniformly pink shirts, they looked like a convention of thin-blooded undertakers with their throats cut. It was depressing."

He lit up a cigar. And after what must have been a wistful pause, the old alumni said, "It wasn't that way in our day, son. Why, I can remember when the college man wasn't considered well-dressed if you could look at him from 15 feet with the naked eye and not be temporarily blinded."

I winced a good, modern, conservative wince. He didn't notice.

"OF COURSE," he went on, "there were a few on every campus who went to extremes, with a shaving brush that was bigger than the hat, trousers with a waist that fitted under the armpits, or a jacket that was longer than the accepted 14 inches from the ground.

"But no one ever accused us of looking like a bunch of pink-breasted starlings, like this year's collegians."

"BUT, . . ." I protested.

"Hell, we had spunk, boy. They don't make 'em like that any more," he said.

I told him today's collegians had spunk too, (whatever that is). And we soon parted company.

Later, I began wondering about the old alum's complaint on what the well-dressed collegiate wears. I sat down in the Rat and watched the "murky browns" and "drab grays" pass. There was a certain uniformity — down to the last stripe in the silk rep ties (always tied in a small knot to fit the rounded collars they all wore).

The girls that passed looked less alike, yet they too had a trim, tweedy look which spelled out uniformity.

DEEP THINKERS probably will look out over the heads of the charcoal gray-suited males and dress-alike coeds and say that this is all part of a deep trend. They, no doubt, will tell us that this is one manifestation of the age of conformity. And down to the last stripe in the ties, the boys are alike — because they are afraid to be different.

This is an age of conformity in many ways. But the college people who dress alike are not a sign of this conformity of thought. For years, college folks have dressed alike.

Take the seasoned grad who complained about the college clothes of today. The flashy dress of his day was just as uniform as the Ivy League look of our day.

MY ALUMNI friend did have one good point. Those pink shirts do make guys look like "thin-blooded undertakers with their throats cut."

I wore one of those new striped jobs the other day, and one friend asekd if I had taken up barbering. All of which goes to show you, it's a matter of taste. And the taste of every college generation in clothes is as different as the taste of individuals.

'Carry On, Lads!'

France-German Friendship

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON. — During the winter of 1953, while in Paris, I suggested to friends in the Quai D'orsay that the mayor of Paris invite Mayor Ernst Reuter of Berlin, a great champion of democratic freedoms, to come to Paris as a guest of France and as a gesture of friendship between the French and German people.

It seemed to me that the United European Army had to be based on something firmer than a pact between politicians, and that i fthe French people had a chance to nkow Mayor Reuter for what he was — a rugged battler for a peaceful Europe — a start would be made toward better understanding between two ancient and sometimes bitter rivals.

The French seemed to like the idea, but suggested that it might be easier fro them to overcome local French prejudice if Mayor Reuter invited the mayor of Paris to visit Berlin first. Then the visit could be reciprocated.

So I put the idea up to Mayor Reuter, whom I had come to know during several visits to Germany. He made no promises but seemed open to persuasion.

Perhaps I didn't press the matter hard enough. Anyway, like a lot of other things, the idea drifted on a sea of good intentions, until I was shocked one morning to find that Mayor Reuter had died. He was one of the few Germans who could have electrified France and helped break down the war of suspicion that has disrupted relations between those two countries—and the peace of Europe — for 80 years. And he was dead.

However, perennial optimist that I am, I still do not think relations between France and Germany are beyond the point of saving. And though they have deteriorated badly of late, the recent herculean efforts of Anthony Eden and John Foster Dulles have given new hope and a breathing space.

However, these two gentlemen can't build the peace alone..

The basic fact we have to remember is still just the same as it was when I talked to Mayor Reuter — namely that treaties are no stronger than the public opinion behind them; that a European Defense Pact is as flimsy as the sands of time unless the people who have to shoulder arms are willing to shoulder arms in each other's deefnse; in brief, that the peace of Europe rests upon friendship and understanding between the two rival countries which hitherto have been torn apart by three major wars.

This is something the diplomats don't always realize. They can sit with other diplomats around the conference table. They can sign protocols and covenants. But none is worth more than a marriage license unless the signatory countries, like the newlywed couple, want to work at the job of getting along together.

Of late, I have detected that the American people are getting a bit fed up with our old friends and former allies. I don't especially blame them. We have taken a lot of unmerited criticism. But, on the other hand, world peace, if we can attain it, is a lot more important than being called a few names, or crawling into our hole in a huff and saying to heck with the world.

So I have a suggestion to make.

It would have a revitalizing electrifying effect if a couple of million Americans wrote letters to their friends and relatives in Europe — especially France and Germany — urging them to forget ages-old bitterness and pull together for the peace of the world. It would be especially important if these Americans told their European friends and relatives that the United States is ready to stand behind them if these suspicions are buried.

Obviously, the official position of the Eisenhower Administration makes it possible for the individual American to say this. This is the official policy of the United States today. However, when the assuring word is personal, when it comes from one individual to another individual, then it counts for a lot more than any pronouncement by a government.

Furthermore, think of the effect if Premier Mendes - France in Paris and Chancellor Adenauer in Bonn received a slew of letters fro Americans urging unity between France and Germany. Imagine the effect if Adenauer could go before the German Bonestag and tell its members that 2,000,000 Americans had written him urging that Germany and France bury the hatchet, heal old wounds and pull together for the peace of Europe.

Coming right now, when Molotov is doing his best to upset the hopeful Eden - Dulles compromise, such a batch of mail in the hands of the German chancellor could strengthen his hand enormously. Similar mail would also strengthen the "cooperation hand" of Premier Mendes-France.

Once before, in the spring of 1948, when the new republic of Italy was going to the polls for the first time, I suggested that Americans write their friends and relatives in Italy urging them to vote against the communist regime. As a result, an average of a million letters a week clearned through the New York Post Office for Italy, and the communist were given a resounding defeat.

The American people are a bit more tired now, more blase, more discouraged. But, as the friendship train and the democracy letters to Italy proved too clearly, there is nothing more forceful in foreign relations than people-to-people diplomacy.

I may be cockeyed. And I may be too optimistic. But I think nothing would give the people of Europe — especially France and Germany — a bigger shot in the arm, a better lift along the difficult road to unity than a literal deluge of letters right now from their friends and relatives. And the prime ministers of France and Germany would get equal help.

Note — And incidentally, if there's anyone who can't afford the extra postage (ordinary mail — eight cents; and airmail — fifteen cents to either Paris or Bonn), send the letter to me—care of Drew Pearson, Washington, D. C. — And I'll tap some of my friends ofr the extra stamps.

The Ram Sees

The Ram wishes to take issue with his editor. In his first editorial yesterday, Charles Kuralt announced the following: "And while we're hustling up encouragement for the Tar Heels, let's save a little for the Boilermakers of Purdue." What Charlie was saying, of course, was that he wanted to see Dook lose to Purdue. At this writing, the Ram does not know the outcome of that game, but he hopes that the score was in favor of Dook, and here's why: What would be sweeter than a victory over the number one team of the nation on Nov. 27 in Kenan Stadium? What would give Tar Heels more prestige (AND PLEASURE) than whipping a Dook team which had trounced the conquerors of Notre Dame? The Ram remembers when a Dook victory announced over the PA system in our stadium evoked tremendous cheers from the Carolina student section. It should be that way again. The Ram wishes sincere success for Dook on the gridiron — that is, until Nov. 27.

Memo to Stanford B. Morton, Jr.: The Ram likes the Carolina Honor System because it is based on the assumption that every man is honorable. We know, of course, that every man is not. That is why we have our courts set up to deal with violators. But we enjoy the compliment which is paid to us when the professor leaves the room after handing out a quiz. We enjoy the freedom of an Honor System which permits us to go to the Y for a cup of coffee in the middle of an exam, and then have no one question where we have been or what we were doing. The crooked, and the weak, among us will cheat, it is true. They have no place here, and the Honor Councils are set up to weed them out.

YOU Said It

Two On Segregation

Editor:

The problem of integration here concerns not only the students at the University, but the whole town of Chapel Hill. Allowing Negroes to attend classes at Carolina is after all a small concession. The rub comes when the Negro student tries to claim the privileges that every Carolina student now enjoys.

Will the Negro student be permitted to take part in campus and off-campus activities? Will he be allowed to go to a campus lecture or play or concert and sit anywhere in the audience? Will he be allowed to go to the town theaters or eat in the town restaurants? Will he be allowed to take an active part in campus social and religious organizations? Will he be allowed to sit with fellow students at football and basketball games? Will he be allowed to attend student dances? In short will he be a full-fledged Carolina student or just a means of complying with the Supreme Court ruling?

If the Negro student is afforded the same freedom in town and on the campus as other Carolina students then every Negro resident of Chapel Hill must be given that same freedom.

When Negro students are admitted to classes here, Chapel Hill will become a testing ground for segregation in all its forms. Once the foundation starts to crumble the whole house will fall and we will be forced to build a new one. Will it be a larger house — large enough to include people of all races — or will it be a duplex where we enter through the same hallway but continue to live separated by a wall of prejudice?

This problem of architectual planning is a tough one. It concerns not only every student but every resident of Chapel Hill as well.

Wm. A. Brockman

Editor:

Many of the arguments upholding segregation are fallacious and invalid. Such naive observations as "God didn't intend for races to mix," "Social equality will lead to intermarriage," "Negroes are right in their place," and "The better class Negroes don't want social equality," reflect narrow, prejudiced opinions; yet these were the unmeditated retorts of four students interrogated at random on the campus yesterday.

The Daily Tar Heel has long been a potent instrument in the propagation of University dogmas, but it now seems to stand alone in its effort to arouse interest in immediate integration at the undergraduate level. Most of the students, organizations, and faculty members are willing to acquiese the eventual abrogation of segregation, but none are exerting any effort to facilitate or accelorate the move. The administration in South building and the politicians in Raleigh are considering the situation, but you can be assured that they won't move until pushed; and the secret prayer that the Supreme Court will alter its decree by re-interpretation is in the back of all their minds.

Isn't it ironic that this great university, founded on the principle of "education for all" and sometimes called a "cross-section of the universe" should need a congressional promulgation or judiciary interdiction before admitting students who qualified in every way except in skin color?

Yes, there were demonstrations in Washington and violence in West Virginia and Delaware, but these young, unknowing students were merely responding to the prodding of prejudiced parents, or either simply seeking excitement. The mature, level-headed students at UNC should be ready, not only to accept, but to promote, the abolition of one of civilized man's most vulnerable practices.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . "—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.

THE HORSE was limping along Campus Cameron, when I saw him, headed east. I wondered had he dropped a drink and it had exploded?

"Never dropped a drink in my life," The Horse said.

Was this something to boast about?

"Nope," The Horse said matter-of-factly. "Quite the reverse. I trust grandpa is not suffering too much because of it. You see, when he was dyin' he made me swear—or so I thought—to never drop a drink. Years later, when it was too late to do anything about it, I learned that what he had said was, 'Never drink a drop.' You'd think he would have spoken more clearly, wouldn't you, considering those were his last words. It just goes to show that some people got no consideration nohow."

I wanted to know why he was limping?

"Just finished getting the Royal Order of the Purple Chisel conferred on me," The Horse growled. "Deep into my flank, it were sunk."

"I am just come from supping at the Carolina Inn Cafeteria," The Horse related, as he paused to watch the stewdents gathering at immemorial Hall (so-called because of its immemorial age), "and loud do I cry Ehue! Us feedbaggers lost a friend and a considerate Bonface when Lou Breslin left these here parts for Germany. Or was it Carolina Beach? At any rate, it was some foreign place."

Whoa! Back up to the Carolina Inn Cafeteria please!

"No soon again, me lad," The Horse growled, "will I back up there. Not unless I acquire folding money wherewith to pay l'addition, as we say in Kerry County."

Oh? Were prices higher, then?

"They're higher now, not then," The Horse corrected me. "Not only that, but the portions are smaller. For example, I commissioned the uniformed minion of the soup-and sector to vend me a bowl of Clama de Chowd, price twenty-cents, or one-fifth of one simoleon."

Waaaaadaminnit, waaaaadaminnit! He asked the counterman what?

"I asked him for Clam Chowder," The Horse explained. "I am so used to eating in Hellene burperies that I have become conditioned to calling it Clama de Chowd. Anyway, this guy carefully eavedroppers me a half bowl of the Succulent monovalvic brew. When I neighed him a pitiful nay, he said. 'Them's orders. Horse, you have had it. Get bowl. Thus, in effect, prices are doubled, because hoofing!' Now, in Lou Breslin's time, we got a full bowl. Thus, in effect, prices are doubled, because you get half what you used to get for the same money. The roasta biff, close at elbow to the soup sector, was available at eighty cents the shaving. Me, I settled for what was proclaimed, apparently, as a portion of Ham Omelet, priced at forty-five cents. It was good; but it was small. In the future, I shall tip my noggin to hens and pigs if their by-products can command such handsome sums of money."

How did The Horse account for this advance in prices at the neat, clean, well-staffed, well-run Inn Cafeteria?

"They can get it,'" The Horse said. "What with the jump in population, especially in the higher pay brackets—docs and technicians at the hospital and dental clinic; enlarged staffs at Swain, the Library, elsewhere—there are more of demanders proportionate to the suppliers. Too, in this day and age when the trick is to show not just a profit, but a big profit, the Inn Cafeteria is but following established precedent."

I thought this unfortunate in an operation such as The Carolina Inn which was, in effect, not alone, a campus showpiece, but actually a gift, the building, to The University.

"Misfortunately, our noble institution of learning here at Tar Heel-on-Franklin is not altogether innocent of conferring The Royal Order of the Purple Chisel on hapless victims, itself," The Horse shrugged, pausing to stare into Immemorial Hall at the anti-Georgia pep-rally. "Take two instances—the fees charged graduate-assistants who are practically forced to take courses for superior degrees if they want to stay on here. Many institutions with similar sound aims of having highly educated staffs let their faculty—and staff-employees take courses for free, or at a nominal fee. Furman, I understand, charges fifteen dollars for faculty and staff taking courses. Princeton not alone charges nothing, but sons of staff and faculty and faculty members are matriculated free from any and all charges."

Okay, okay; but those were private institutions. Our rates here were set by Legislature's decree, or something, and everybody is equal under the law.

"I think you man, inequal," The Horse chittered. He paused to shake hooves with Coach George O'Barclay and wish him and his lads the best again Jojah. "However, with the Pine Room in the lead, I must say our campus feedbaggeries do wonders to give out the most food at the least cost."

So, then, these were small irritations, and confined? And they could be set down to good business, if you agreed good business was getting all you could, and nuts to any moral points involved such as what is a fair profit versus what is the most profit, a businessman can get.

"Not always good business, Roger mebhoy," The Horse contradicted me. "Take the case of a certain large drugstore on East Franklin, where coffee—and good coffee it is, too—is eleven cents the toss. Second cup free if you get the right servitor. I have heard more rhubarbs over this one-penny cup for java than ever I heard over any item that without doubt bears a much higher mark-up and profit. I know of business that has been driven away to competing drug stores. But does the management shrugg off the penny and keep friends? No! They yell for the penny, even; and once I heard a German professor—foreign, I mean, not teaching German per se—insulted with the question, 'You mean t' say you koin' t' holler ovah a pinny, Man, now, ain't that cheap!' What astounded me was, it never occured to this servitor, nor perhaps to the management itself, that the cheap item in the deal was in slapping customers with this one-cent extra charge."

What had The Horse so growly, to begin with?

"Equity should hear of me workin' until twelve each night with no pay," The Horse. "Wurra-wurra, and ohone! No, pay!"

"Wump!" Mr. Wump whumped eventually.

Purdue Comes Back To Tie Duke In Last Half, 13-13

Over The Hill

By FRED BABSON

What transpired in the Georgia dressing room at half-time yesterday will probably reman a myster. But whatever Wally Butts said to his boys was the right thing. The Bulldogs charged out for the second half like Native Dancer left the post in the Kentucky Derby. They took the kick-off on their 25 yard line. Nine minutes and 43 seconds later Fullback Bob Clemens pulled up in the Carolina end zone ripping and snorting like a bull that just caught the scent of fresh blood.

All week the Tar Heels had worked diligently on their pass defense, apparently at the expense of their rushing defense. For the fast-stepping Georgia backs went through the Carolina line like water through a sieve. At times it appeared to be a case of sheer Bulldog superiority in manpower. Their forward wall ripped the Tar Heel line to shreds, opening holes that Bushy could have led Rameses through.

There were intermittent bright spots, however, in the local line. Will Frye demolished a couple of enemy sweeps in fine fashion. And in the first quarter, Jimmy "Hoot" Neville, 5'9", 200-pound guard, shot through the Georgia defense as if he had been fired from a gun. He nailed Johnny Harper for a 14-yard loss in a diving, ankle-high tackle, knocking aside two, would-be blockers in the process. Again, in the second quarter, the little dynamo brought the crowd to its feet when he stood on three Georgia players with one block, enabling Len Bullock to make a six yard gain out of what looked for a minute like a ten yard loss.

In the second quarter Carolina looked like a winner. Len Bullock exhibited a variety of plays on an 80-yard sustained drive. Bullock's swan dive climaxed the downfield march, during which Bill Koman snagged a pass for a short gain. Koman is a guard.

Bullock played the first 50 minutes and thrilled the fans with his daring execution of the option plays, waiting until he was actually in the arms of a tackler before lateralling off to one of his backs. He mixed the plays up nicely, with the possible exception of not passing enough. His four completions out of seven tosses seem to indicate his aerial effectiveness.

Marshall Newman assumed the Tar Heel field generalship for the final ten minutes. But the former first string quarterback was not given much of a chance to display his talent. When he faded back to pass, his blockers deserted him as if he had malaria. He found time to launch two aerials, completing both of them.

Carolina Coach George Barclay, obviously distressed at losing after being a one-touchdown, pre-game favorite, mentioned that mistakes hurt his team badly. Apparently he was alluding to such blunders as "illegal receiver downfield," which twice cost the locals 15-yard penalties. Fumbles continued to plague the backs. Three potential touchdown drives were lost to fumbles.

Out of the surprisingly decisive defeat shone a new hope. Halfback Eddie Sutton added his name very impressivey to the growing list of sophomores, who are forming a nucleus about which more promising Tar Heel elevens may be built.

Powerful Tennessee Vols Barely Squeeze By Chattanooga 20-14

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 9 (AP)—Fullback Tom Tracy's 73-yard touchdown dash in the waning moments pulled Tennessee out of a 14-14 tie with subborn Chattanooga today for a 20-14 victory.

Chattanooga had battled the heavily favored Vols on even terms for 55 minutes until Tracy broke off right tackle and cut loose for his spectacular dash.

Tennessee scored once in the first period and twice in the fourth. Chattanooga got its touchdowns in the second and fourth quarters, fullback Dick Young of Trumbell, Conn., smashing through the line for both.

Sophomore Tailback John Majors, starting in place of the ailing Jimmy Wade, raced 79 yards with a punt midway the first quarter for the Vols' first marker.

Chattanooga stormed right back in the second period and went 50 yards for a six-pointer. Young pounced over from the two.

Tennessee took the lead again in the fourth period on Major's 30-yard pass to end Roger Urbano.

Blue Devils Score Two Touchdowns Before Half

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Oct. 9 (AP)—Duke's alert defenders ran sophomore passing sensation Len Dawson out of the airlanes today but Purdue struck back in a second half rally with the crunching runs of 204-pound Fullback Bil Murakowski to score twice and settle for a 13-13 tie.

Dawson, who had hurled eight touchdown tosses in Purdue's victories over Missouri and Notre Dame, found his targets caught by the Blue Devils defensive web to such an extent that Purdue was forced to stay close to the ground in the last half.

Duke, rated no. 6 nationally, and Purdue, ranked No. 5, each maintained their unbeaten records before 47,000 screeching fans.

The southerners previously had romped over Penn 52-0 and edged Tennessee 7-6.

A recovered fumble touched off Duke's first touchdown in the second period, with Bryant Aldridge barrelling over from the two to end a 29-yard drive.

Seconds before the end of the first half the Blue Devils marched 60 yards with quarterback Jerry Barker sneaking over from the one. Jim Nelson booted the Duke extra point and Aldridge's try after the second tally was wide.

Purdue smashed 65 yards in 17 plays to cut the lead to 13-6 in the opening 10 minutes of the third period.

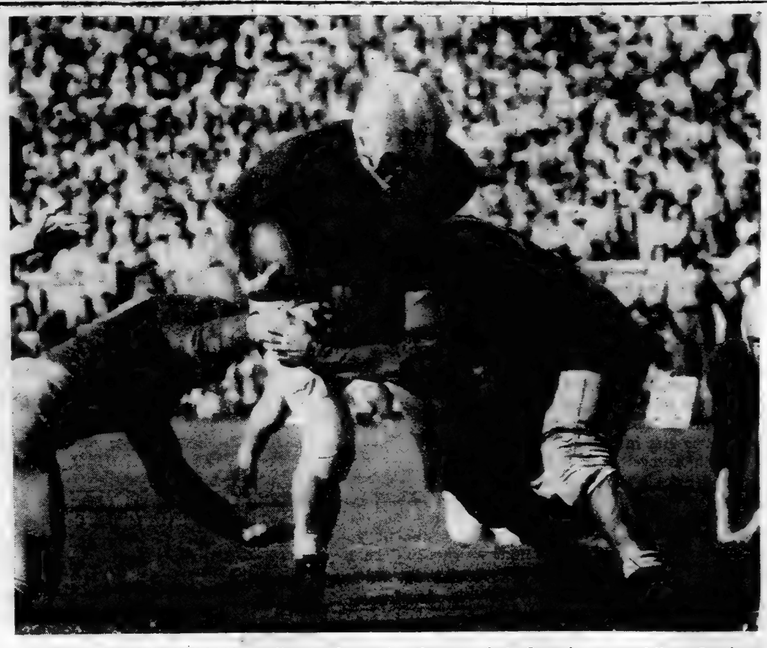
Junior Quarterback Froncie Gutman passed 24 yards to Murakowski, a 5 foot 11 junior from East Chicago, Ind., to feature the drive. Murakowski blasted seven and five yards at a crack to keep it going and Gutman finally sneaked across from only inches out.

Jim Reichert's conversion attempt was low and wide.

Late in the third Purdue started another surge that carried 53 yards and was capped in the first 30 seconds of the fourth on Murakowski's smash from the seven. Dawson's boot was perfect and the score was tied 13-13.

After surging to the Purdue 19 in the first quarter only to fumle away the ball, Duke's speedy, versatile backs got moving for keeps in the second quarter to score twice and put the Boilermakers in a hole 13-0 at halftime.

Beatty PPaces Tar Heels



The Carolina cross - country team registered a perfect score yesterday and won its first meet of the season, beating the University of Virginia, 15-52 (low score wins in cross - country).

Sophomore Jim Beatty copped first place for Carolina, running the distance in 20 minutes and 22 seconds, 41 seconds faster than teammate Bob Barden.

Tony Houghton placed third and Marion Griffin and Don Wright tied for fourth place.

Bob Green was the top finisher for the Cavaliers, placing eighth, 2 minutes and 23 seconds behind Beatty.

The victory evened up the Tar Heel's season record, having lost to N. C. State last week.

Underdog Demon Deacons Battle Fumbling Maryland To 13-13 Tie

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., Oct. 9 (AP)—Wake Forest's underdog Demon Deacons battled heavily-favored Maryland to a 13-13 tie today, forcing the fumbling Terrapins to come from behind twice to get as much as a deadlock.

It took a 66-yard sprint by Quarterback Charlie Boxold on the first play of the final period to get Maryland even. Boxold was dragged down from behind, a foot shy of the goal line, by Joe White, Wake Forest quarterback. But on the next play Boxold went over.

Fullback Dick Bielski, who had converted after the first Maryland score in the third period, was wide in the attempt for the point that would have won the game.

The final minutes were crammed with excitement as both teams threatened. Wake Forest was stopped on Maryland's 12 late in the quarter. Then the Terps took over to move to Wake's 22 before being thrown back to their own 44, where Maryland's third fumble gave Wake Forest the ball and a chance for one pass. With 17 seconds left, quarterback Nick Consoles threw a desperation pass, but halfback Ronnie Waller intercepted for Maryland on its 15 as the game ended.

Oklahoma Tumbles Longhorns By 14-7

Oklahoma power, featuring hammering Bob Herndon and Buddy Leake and the adept passing of Jay O'Neal and Jim Harris, ground out a 14-7 victory over Texas today as the Sooners held their domination of this storied game.

The No. 1 ranked Oklahomas won despite six fumbles, five of which were gobbled by Texas.

It was the third straight year that Oklahoma had won this game—the 49th in the series. A record crowd of 76,204 witnessed the battle.

Leake fumbled the opening kickoff on the Oklahoma 29 and Kirby Miller pounced on the ball. Texas made two first downs, but on the Oklahoma four, Quinn fumbled and Oklahoma's Burt Burris recovered. Leake kicked out to Delano Womack, who raced back to the Oklahoma 27.

Womack threw a running pass to Menan Schriewer on the Oklahoma six. Maroney cracked center for three and Brewer hit the left tackle for a touchdown. Buck Lansford converted.

Then Oklahoma took the next kickoff and went 73 yards for a touchdown. Leake slammed across from a yard out then kicked the extra point to tie the score at 7-7.

After an exchange of punts, the Sooners launched another touchdown drive in the second period from their own 42. The biggest blow was a 40 yard pass play from O'Neal to John Bell to the 15. Harris made the touchdown from the Texas two and Leake again converted to put Oklahoma ahead 14-7. That ended the day's scoring.

Two-Party States Have Characters In Politics Too, Says Fulbright

By LATHAM MIMS

ASHEVILLE, (AP) — The South's racial and political patterns came under the scrutiny of the nation's editors yesterday with Sen. Wm. Fulbright (D.-Ark.), declaring that two-party states have matched the one-party South in producing odd political characters.

Fulbright supported his contention by naming nine senate colleagues—seven of them Republicans and two Democrats. He said he would put them "against the oddest characters we've had in the South."

Fulbright's list included Sens. McCarthy of Wisconsin, Dirksen of Illinois, Dvorshak of Idaho, Malone of Nevada, the late Pat McCarren of Nevada, former Sen. Glen Taylor of Idaho, Jenner of Indiana, Mundt of South Dakota, and Bridges of New Hampshire.

The question arose as Fulbright and two other speakers discussed "the two-party South, fact or fable" before the National Conference of Editorial Writers. The writers also heard three prominent Southeners discuss the Supreme Court's school segregation decision and the effect it will have on the South.

UNC Man Talks

Both Dr. Alexander Heard, a political scientist of the University of North Carolina, and John Minor Wisdom, a Louisiana Republican leader, said that changing Southern economic and social conditions favor the Republican Party's bid in the region.

Wisdom said, "the Republicans have not muffed the ball. A two-party South is developing." He asserted President Eisenhower is one dynamic force and the historical reason for the one-party South—the fear of the Negro—has vanished.

Fulbright agreed with Wisdom that Republicans are gaining strength in the region but he questioned whether the two-party system is the answer to the South's problems.

Education Solution

"The real solution to our problems . . ." he said, "lies in the field of education." He said Southern voters still have a choice based on a candidate's "quality of character" which might be just as good an index as political issues on which voters in two-party states can base their votes. And he cited Sens. Russell and George of Georgia as praiseworthy examples of a one-party state.

Partisanship when carried to extremes can be dangerous, the senator asserted, adding that Republican charges of Democratic treason had weakened America's international position.

During the discussion on the Supreme Court's' segregation decision Harry Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette and author of "The Negro And Schools," said, "give us a little time and I think it will turn out better than any of us think." He declared the American white man is not yet ready to accept the Negro as an equal and the "Negro is not willing to accept anything less."

Integration

Ashmore added that integration had been easily accomplished in Fayetteville, Ark., a city having few Negroes, but, he continued, it will be difficult in Forest City, Ark. which has many more Negroes.

A Negro educator, Dr. Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, declared the court's decision "says to me that it is the genius of American democracy that great injustices can be corrected" without revolution and violence. He said "it worries me to see the wrong emphasis placed . . on the social aspects. Really the emphasis belongs on equal educational opportunities for every American child. We will learn eventually that our great fears have no foundation in fact."

George Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, said the solution to the racial problem lies in calling Negroes and whites together in small groups, such as city councils, so that they can approach the problem with mutual understanding.

a close after Georgia ran one play from its 20.

But the second half no sooner opened than Georgia was on its way again. The kickoff was returned to the Bulldog 46. Operating behind a rejuvenated line which brushed the Carolina defenders aside like so many flies, Madison, Bob Clemens and Harper negotiated their way to the UNC goal in less than five minutes. Clemens took the final plunge from the three-yard line and Madison's kick was good.

Georgia opened the fourth period in a similar manner. Keller fumbled near the Carolina 40 where Georgia end Laneair Roberts recovered. Bulldog fullback Howard Kelley bulled his way to the 30 and Wendell Tarleton picked up six yards through the center of Carolina's buckling line. At this point Richard Young entered the game at quarterback for Georgia, Harper leaving because of an injury. Young went to the 23 and Tarleton to the 18. Young flipped a short pass to Roberts at the six, where he was dropped immediately by Don Klochak. Madison raced around left end to the four and Kelley won honors by moving across the goal through right tackle. Hal Reese converted for the 21st point.

For Carolina fans, the only exciting part of the fourth period, except for some excellent defensive work by co-captain Jim "Hoot" Neville, was Sutton's 43-yard dash, the longest jaunt of the long afternoon.

of the team. There wasn't a straight face in the bunch. Dick Young, who quarterbacked the Bulldogs after Jimmy Harper's injury, said, "It was the second game we really showed any offense." And show it they did. Knox Culpepper, fullback who exhibited plenty of drive in the second half, said, "It was a rough game." There were a few scrapes and bruised evident, but there were no real in juries.

When asked what happened to his line in the second half, Coach Butts looked up, grinned and said, "I don't know." Something happened; the game result is evidence of that. Coach Butts further stated, "Carolina played good ball, but the main thing was those two drives." And they were.

— Barclay —

Heels. "I guess we just ran out of gas," he said.

"Four plays beat us,'" Sophomore Ed Sutton related. "They kept beating us back with the same four plays."

Barclay, although not pleased with the showing of his team, said that the offense was working better this week than last. The Tar Heel mentor had praise for Bullock, who played the entire first three quarters. "Bullock played well and did a good job of calling signals," he said. "Will Frye also did a good job. Sutton ran well. He's gaining experience with every game."

The Carolina coach didn't agree with his players in the ability of Harper. "He threw too well against us. I did think that (Bob) Clemens and (Bobby) Garrard, their fullbacks, looked very good. Their line looked good in the second half."

Ken Keller, who was helped off the field in the last half, hurt his knee. Trainer Doc White said "its just a charleyhorse. He'll be okay."

Emory University Paper Against Segregation

ATLANTA, Ga.—Emory University's student newspaper, The Wheel, asked for an end to racial segregation on the Southern campus in a front-page editorial this week.

"The Wheel believes that the greatest effort which Emory could make toward relieving racial strain in the South and toward improving the lot of both the white and colored races would be action toward the admittance of qualified Negroes to the University," the student paper said.

The Emory paper added, "for segregation in schools to be abolished all at once—from grade one to graduate school—is a mistake. The people of many sections of the South are neither willing nor ready to accept unsegrated public schools.

"And people as used to freedom of choice as are Americans cannot be forced to do something they do not wish to do—be it right or be it wrong."

The editorial concluded, "There are many legal, social and political roadblocks to admitting Negroes at Emory, but for that matter, few great actions are ever done without opposition."

Emory is the only Southern University, other than the University of North Carolina, whose paper has come out favoring an end to segregation on the campus level this fall.

The University of Georgia's Red and Black, the student paper, spoke out against segregation last year and has been under strict administration and faculty control since then. Two sets of student editors resigned last year as result of the censorship.

'Fifty Books Of The Year' Now On Display At Library

"Fifty Books of the Year" is the title of the latest library exhibition.

The display, considered the outstanding cross-section of American book design and production of 1953, is sponsored by the American Institute of Graphic Arts and the American Federation of Arts.

The fifty books were selected from a group of six hundred submitted by American book publishers. They were selected on the basis of physical appearance rather than on content.

The exhibition, located in the lobby of the library, will remain there until October 23. It was arranged by Mrs. May Davis Hill, General College librarian and I. T. Littleton, assistant to the librarian.

More than one-third of the books were published by university presses. In commenting upon the unusually large number of university prss books represented in the exhibit, the selecting jury stated, "This happened simply because quality, in both design and production seemed top heavy in that category." Eleven university presses have books in the exhibit.

The books range in price from 50 cents to 65 dollars. Two of the paper-backs are "Raoul Dufy" by Alfred Werner and "Shakespeare" by Mark Van Doren. The most expensive is "Persepolis: Volume I," which includes 208 pages of plates. It was published by the University of Chicago Press.

SOUTH CAROLINA WINS

GREENVILLE, S. C., Oct. 9 (AP)—South Carolina cleared its bench of substitutes early in the game mixing running and passing about evenly, to beat Furman 27-7 today, as expected.

Students Will Travel With Football Team To Maryland

The Tar Heel team will go to the Maryland game this weekend on the same train as the students. The announcement was made yesterday by George Reddick of the Seaboard Airline Railway and C. P. Ericson, UNC director of athletics.

Reddick and spokesmen for the Graham Memorial Travel Agency said that there are still seats available on the special train. The seats will be available up until train departure time; however, students are advised to reserve seats as early as possible.

Carolina males were given another break last week when representatives of the University Club visited sororities and girls' dorms to urge them to go to Maryland "Dutch."

According to Ted Tawes and Harriet Parrish the coeds were very cooperative with the plan and seemed eager to share both their time and expenses with the lucky males for the weekend.

The complete weekend will include two games ,the Maryland-Carolina one and the Washington Redskins game when Charlie Justice will be the honored), a dance for Carolina students Saturday night, a parade, and pep rally, a reserved train seat and game seat all shared with a date who will share expenses.

The buses will leave Chapel Hill at 3 p. m., Friday afternoon; trains will leave Raleigh for Washington at 4 p. m.; the trains will arrive in Washington at 9:30 and a pep rally will follow.

On Saturday there will be a parade through downtown Washington; the game that afternoon at College Park, Maryland; and a free dance for UNC students and their dates at the Shoreham Hotel. One train will leave for North Carolina Sunday morning at 12:45.

The Redskin game is Sunday afternoon. The last train will leave Washington at 6 p. m.

The train will have a diner for the team, and after the team has been served it will be open to all students. A snack bar, selling cigarettes, cigars, sandwiches, soft drinks, candy and gum, will be open during the trip.

Sauter-Finegan Band Slates Two Concerts

The Sauter-Finegan Orchestra will appear here in two concerts on Monday, October 18.

Concerts will be given from 4 to 6 p. m., and from 8:30 to 11 p. m. in Memorial Hall. Tickets are now on sale at Ledbetter Pickard, Carolina Sport Shop, Monk and Bob's and the information desk in Graham Memorial. They will go on sale in Y court next Monday.

Rated among the country's top five arrangers, for over a decade Sauter and Finegan shaped the music played by a dozen or so of top-flight bands. Sauter is responsible for many of Benny Goodman's most famous arrangements, and Finegan has written many scores for both Tommy Dorsey and Glenn Miller.

Sound is a serious thing to Maestri Ed Sauter and Bill Finegan, whose exciting band, unlike the average aggregation, numbers 25, including five saxophonists who double on such unlikely danceband instruments as the flute, piccolo, oboe, English horn, bass clarinet and recorders. (The last-mentioned is a woodwind instrument of ancient vintage.) toy snare drums.

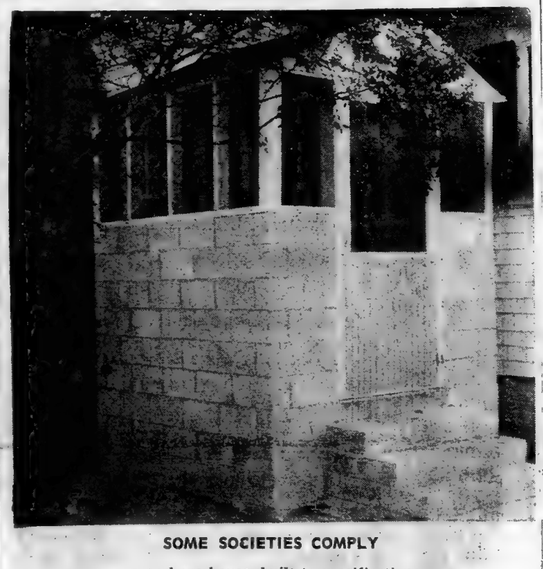
Sauter and Finegan have explained it this way: "We have included an actual percussion section, aside from the drummer because we feel that percussion sounds are needed to add color and thus broaden the musical spectrum of our arrangements. In fact whenever we feel that only a toy trumpet or a toy drum or even a kazoo will give the particular sound we want why we'll use a toy trumpet, toy drum or kazoo! The only thing we don't use are artificial sounds, which is why the band sounds the same in person as on records.

YDC Trip

The University Young Democrats Club will go to Greensboro College today to participate in a panel discussion there.

All YDC members are urged to attend this meeting. The group will meet at the Monogram Club at 5:30 for supper and will leave from there at 6:15 p. m.

Fraternities & Sororities:



Garbage Still There

The Chapel Hill Town Council's ordinance, passed last January, required all town restaurants, fraternity houses and sororities to erect "garbage houses," has not yet been complied with, said Town Manager Tom Rose yesterday.

Rose said the ordinance has not been strictly enforced, since the town wants to give Greek letter societies and eating places enough time to raise money for the buildings.

Brevitt Hook district health officer, said yesterday his department had not yet checked on the building of the houses because he also wants to give organizations and restaurants enough time to raise money.

In the case that fraternities and sororities make no effort to construct the houses, Hook said, his department would be forced to "push it as they did the fire escapes last year."

SP Heads Discuss The Party

By JACKIE GOODMAN

"The majority of students on this campus know nothing of student politics. Through membership in this party you can give the students good government," said Virginia Agnew in a panel discussion held in Student Party meeting last night.

With David Reid as moderator, three members of Student Party discussed the question of what the party can mean to the individual, and what the individual can do for student Legislature. The three members of the panel were Tom Bennett, Virginia Agnew and Bob Harrington.

"I have received knowledge from the Student Party, knowledge of student government, of how it is run and how to appreciate it," said Bennett. In connection with the contribution of the individual, Bennett said, "I want to give my time and energy. I want to make it a better organization than it was when I joined it."

Harrington pointed out, "I have received friendship from the Student Party. Here deep and true friendships are made. Here we get exprience. These are two of the most important things we will ever get."

"Through membership in Student Party you enlarge your circle of friends by a great number. You also learn how to meet people through campaigning and visiting in the dorms," said Miss Agnew.

Di Senate Meets Tonight

The Dialectic Senate will meet tonight at 8 in Di Hall, third floor of New West. Guests are invited to attend and to participate in the debate, with the regular five-minute limitation on speeches.

The bill of the evening, which will be introduced by David Mundy, proposes the eventual liberation of Red China. It specificially proposes that the United States continue giving Nationalist China its firm moral and economic support; that the Nationalists be aided in propaganda warfare and encouraged to promote unrest and guerilla activity on the mainland; and that the United States offer limited military support should an actual invasion ever become possible.

An executive session of the Senate will follow the regular debate session.

Gieseking, Salzburg, Peerce & Chamber Orchestra:

Concert Tickets On Sale

Student tickets will go on sale today for the newly-instituted Chapel Hill Concert Series, according to Don Geiger, ticket chairman.

The season passes will cost students $5, and will be good for evenings with the American Chamber Orchestra, the Salzburg Marionette Theatre, Pianist Walter Gieseking and famous tenor Jan Peerce.

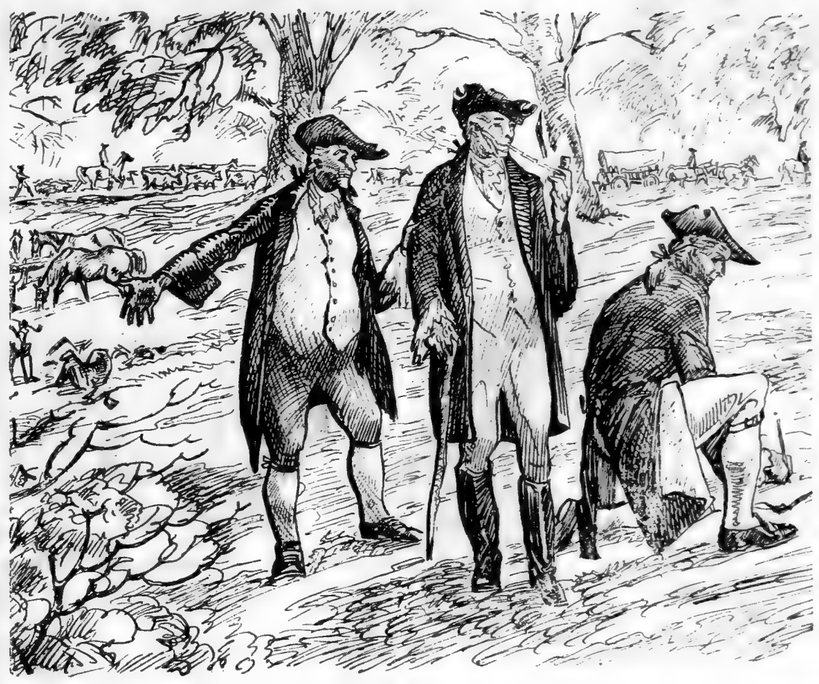
Concert Series Secretary Jim Wallace said yesterday only 500 students tickets remained. The Series had origionally planned to hold out 600 for students, he said, but 100 of them were bought by students during the recent ticket drive for townspeople and faculty.

Dormitories, fraternities and sororities are participating in the drive, with prizes offered for the group selling the most tickets. Wallace said the men's dorm with top sale will receive a ping-pong table or two card tables; the women's dorm, a block of theater tickets; fraternity, block of movie passes, and sorority, two card tables.

The ticket drive will end Saturday, but passes will continue to be sold up until the first concert Oct. 20.

Chamber Orchestra

Robert Scholz will conduct the American Chamber Orchestra in Memorial Hall Oct. 20.



The orchestra, formerly known as The Mozart Orchestra, is an ensemble of string and wind players "dedicated to the performance of symphonic masterpieces inthe authentic manner of their period," according to a spokesman for the group.

Classes Out At 10:50 For Ceremony

Today is University Day.

Carolina, the oldest state university in the United States, will celebrate its 161st birthday this morning with traditional University Day ceremonies, beginning at 10:50 o'clock in the south court of South Building.

Chancellor Robert B. House, who will take part in the exercises, has announced that classes and laboratories will be suspended at that time for the remainder of the day. Administrative offices will be closed from 10:50 until after lunch.

Music and pageantry in pantomime will combine to re-enact the laying on October 12, 1793 of the cornerstone of Old East, oldest building on the campus.

Included in the ceremonies will be a brief memorial service "to honor the Founders of the University and those who have contributed to its development over the years." Chancellor House will lead the assembly in the responsive reading of lines from the Apocrypha.

Following the singing of Integer Vitae by the Men's Glee Club, the University Band, directed by Earl Slocum, and the combined Men's and Women's Glee Clubs, under the direction of Joel Carter, will render Festival Finale, "God of Our Fathers."

June Eschweiler, graduate, assistant in drama, will direct Carolina Playmakers in re-enacting the cornerstone laying. Pantomime roles will be taken as follows: General William R. Davie—Harvey Whetstone; Masons—Larry Braverman and Carl Williams. William Trotman will be narrator.

Immediately following the cornerstone laying, the assembly will follow the band and glee clubs to Davie Poplar for the benediction by Dr. Samuel T. Habel, pastor of the Baptist Church, and the singing of "Hark the Sound."

Color guards for the occasion will be supplied by the NROTC and Air ROTC. Members of the Grail will serve as ushers.

Besides Chancellor House, others taking part in the exercises will include President Gordon Gray and student body President Tom Creasy.

Oldest Student Says Chapel Hill's Where You

'Keep Your Mind Active'

By SUSAN QUINN

There's a man on the Carolina campus today who probably holds some kind of record for the number of years he has been in school without receiving a degree.

E. B. Jeffress has been in and out of this University since 1903, and in the meantime he has also been publisher and half owner of the Greensboro Daily News, president of the Greensboro Chamber of Commerce, and mayor of that city. From 1931-33 he sat in the State Legislature.

Jeffress

In 1903, Jeffress came to UNC to major in history, but the administration "derailed" him, as he put it. When he left the library was still located in the building now known as the Playmakers Theater, Carr was known as the wildest men's dorm on campus, and there were not more than four or five coeds to brighten up the scene.

Now the picture is quite different, but E. B. Jeffress is back, complete with a cane, a battered grey felt hat that got a smudge on its crown when it blew across the street in Salt Lake City, Utah, and an opinion on almost any subject anyone wishes to discuss.

Having given up hope of obtaining a degree, the bright-eyed old gentleman has simply decided that Chapel Hill is a fine place to loaf and to "keep your mind active." Currently, he's studying problems of highway transportation in North Carolina, with a political science course thrown in for good measure. The professors are pretty good, he thinks, but "There are too many Republicans among em!"

One of Jeffress' favorite topics is the fact that the "University is losing leadership in the State." He sems to think that the legislature in Raleigh is going to be in pretty sad shape if the people don't wake up and start nominating their own candidates for this body. These bright young men must come from the University, he says. Right now they're not. He blames this, in part, on the fact that students' interests are now scattered among too many activities. In 1903, everyone had to belong to either the Di or the Phi, and the debate against Georgia was more important than the football game against that institution. What takes the place of this now? Campus politics, which, in the opinion of Jeffress, "Get warmed up about once a term."

E. B. JEFFRESS
. . . University's suffering in North Carolina's eyes

Commenting on campus issues today, Jeffress stated his firm belief that Negroes should be admitted to the medical school without question, as long as they meet entrance requirements. Only in this way can the health of the North Carolina Negro be improved, he said. "We shouldn't make too much of an issue of this thing," he mused. "The only thing wrong with the darkies they haven't got enough bathtubs in the country!" (This last with the hearty slap of the knee which is his favorite method of emphasis.))

This "oldest student" also expressed his views on the drinking

Tom Shores Takes Over Office Of Tar Heel Business Manager

Tom Shores, junior from Hickory, is the new Daily Tar Heel business manager, replacing Oscar A Shortt.

Editor Charles Kuralt appointed Shores to the position yesterday upon Shortt's resignation. The former business manager gave "pressing outside duties" as reason for his resignation.

Duties of the business manager include supervising the business and advertising offices of the newspaper, as well as keeping an eye on the circulation and subscription departments.

Said Shores yesterday, "I am very pleased with my new position and will do everything I can to run the business end of the campus newspaper on an efficient basis."

Auditions For 'Figaro' Set

Auditions for roles in Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" will be held in Hill Music Hall Friday, 3:30 and 7:30 p. m. Under the sponsorship of the Music Department, Dr. Wilton Mason will be in charge of production and act as musical director. The scheduled dates for presentation are January 17th and 18th, 1955.

"The Marriage of Figaro" will be the first full length operatic production by the Music Department, though previously several doublebills of short operas have been presented.

Previous operatic experience is not necessary to participate in these auditions. Any selection which displays the range and ability of the singer is all that is required and it does not necessarily have to be from the opera to be produced.

Individuals may bring their own accompanist if they desire, but a pianist will be available at the auditions if needed to assist the singer.

Want A Proofreader

The Daily Tar Heel needs a proofreader. The salary is $340 for the rest of the year. Hours: 8:45 - 11:30 p. m., Monday - Saturday. If you're interested, apply this afternoon at 4, Daily Tar Heel offices, Graham Memorial.

University Day

October 12th—as you may have forgotten from your grammar school history—is the day Columbus discovered America in 1492. In 1807, it was the day Robert E. Lee was born. And it was on the 12th day of October, 1793, that an imposing procession of men with names like Davie, Haywood, Mebane and Blount walked through a forest across three cleared acres of land and layed the cornerstone of Old East Dormitory.

The sweetgums and dogwoods and maples were just beginning to turn russet and gold. A little cloud of dust stirred under the feet of the men, many of them clad in the striking insignia of the Masonic Fraternity. They were the greatest men of the state—senators, governors and judges. They were about to lay the foundations of the first state university.

The orator of the day was a sturdy Scotch-Irishman named Samuel E. McCorkle. And this is what he said:

" . . . Knowledge is wealth, it is glory, whether among philosophers, ministers of State or religion, or among the great mass of the people. Savages cannot have great men, though many a Newton has been born and buried among them. Knowledge is liberty and law; and how this knowledge productive of so many advantages to mankind can be acquired wit out public places of education, I know not . . .

"May this hill be for religion as the ancient hill of Zion; and for literature and the Muses, may it surpass the ancient Parnassus!"

Most of North Carolina's great men since that October day have been touched by Chapel Hill. Hinton James wandered in a year and a half later, the first student, the precursor of a hundred thousand seekers after knowledge.

This morning we will stand facing South Building and watch the reenactment of the cornerstone laying. The band will be there and the chorus will sing "Integer Vitae."

And we will stand for a moment in silence, remembering these things:

The men of the University, the Davies and Caldwells and Swains and Grahams who gave their lives to Chapel Hill. The tortuous years when the school was still aborning and a critic called the whole idea "a Temple of Folly." And the later years, after the Civil War had seared the state and the University closed its doors, when a student with bags packed to leave a shut-down college wrote in bold letters on a blackboard, "This old University Busted and Went to Hell To-Day."

We will stand on the broad lawn of the old campus under the ancient oaks and listen to the story of the cornerstone laying, and we will remember the students who have stood there before—North Carolina's soldiers and statesmen and lawyers and carpenters and teachers, and among them a President of the United States, more than one demagogue, a few communists, a few governors, countless hundreds of good and noble citizens.

The Chancellor will call for a re-dedication this morning, and if there be one in our minds, let it be this:

That we will guard Carolina's freedom and its character and see it for what it is—a hill of strength and truth for North Carolina and for all the land. That this University is our own, it is the highest heritage those who have gone before could give us. That there remains no one to take it nearer Parnassus but we, ourselves, and that we will do so.

A Better Use For Revenue From Tickets

Louis Kraar

A SMALL news item in this week's papers informed the world that the University of Washington is considering a plan for conveyor-belts to carry students from a parking lot to the campus center.

As I read it, I remembered what an Egyptian student had said this summer.

"I was surprised to hear that one of your greatest problems here is where students can park their cars. We are concerned about where money is coming from to provide books and tuition," the Egyptian told a group of American students.

Apparently, when a country has bought its books, fed its hungry students, and paid its professors (or underpaid them), it's time for production line parking.

A CLOSER look into the conveyor-belt parking idea at Washington revealed that parking fees would pay the freight rate. Perhaps this is the point on which the Seattle educators will justify their production-line parking setup.

Here at Carolina the student concern is being allowed to keep cars on campus—not having an automatic parking lot with conveyor-belt. And that concern is an honest one. Chapel Hill, always a free place, should allow a student to have a car if he can afford one.

But, while plans for mass production parking are in the air (and the newspapers), why not something new for students here?

EACH MONTH the University police tag from 300 to 500 student autos with parking tickets. Currently, the town collects the money from the student car owners.

If the University kept the money—or even a part of it—the two-bucks-a-throw parking tickets would go far toward establishing a scholarship fund.

Students have to pay out their two bucks anyway. And it might as well go for education.

WHILE STATE politicians seem to be conjuring up a tuition raise for the University, the N. C. Foundation of Church-Related Colleges has come up with some encouraging statistics about college education in the state.

One out of every three white public high school graduates enters college. This is a 34 percent figure for North Carolina as compared with a national average of 25 percent.

A higher public regard for college degrees, existing scholarships, and the GI Bill of Rights have helped interest graduates in going to college.

A raise in tuition would be discouraging at this point.

ALTHOUGH TODAY'S headlines may not show it, this is a crucial day in the history of democratic countries.

France's Pierre Mendes France faces a vote of confidence on the EDC agreement arrived at in London recently. Germany, whose power the French still fear, is waiting for France before it ratifies.

Thus diplomatic eyes are on France today as Mendes France fights harder than he ever has before to get EDC ratified. The outcome may not change your draft status, but it probably will affect your children's.

'The Top Top One? That's The Dixon-Yates Contract'

GOP Campaign Strife

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower now has the benefit of an especially built electronic device to help him with his golf.

It's the first one ever used in the United States and was developed by Dr. Lewis Alvarez of the University of California at Berkeley.

The electronic instrument is not used in an actual game of golf but in practice. It measures the timing of the swing, the impact of the club on th golf ball, whher the stroke is off center, and how far the ball would have traveled.

Presumably the gadget will be developed for public use later, but at the moment the President's instrument is understood to be the only one in existence.

The Battle of Denver

For about a week prior to the political strategy meeting last week, the President's advisers were pretty well torn apart over what he should do about the alarming reports coming in from the campaign front.

The political advisers were determined that the President go out on the Hustings and make a two-week whistle-stop tour through the strategic states. But his personal advisers said no.

The latter argued first that the President was under no compulsion to go out and rescue the Congressmen who had failed to support his legislative program. They also argued that Ike could not afford to have his prestige lowered by sticking his neck out in certain key states and then having his neck politically chopped off, if the GOP candidates in those states lost.

The remembered of coure, the attempt of President Roosevelt to invade certain states against key Democratic senators, and although Ike would be speaking for, not against, Republican Senators, they were afraid outside interference would not be effective just the same.

But the political advisers argued just as vigorously on the other side. They included such potent figures as GOP Chairman Len Hall; Congressman Dick Simpson of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee to Re-elect Republican Congressmen; and Charley Halleck of Indiana, the House majority leader.

They pointed out that reports from all over the country were bad—so bad that if the Republican Party suffered a major defeat the collapse was sure to bring the President down with the party. It was not only the party's prestige that was at stake, they said, but Ike's.

The debate was really hot and furious, and at one time the President was reported lapsing into typically Trumanesque language "Those——wouldn't have been inthis troube," friends quoted him as saying, "If they had upheld me in the Congress."

War Of The Starlings

With Ike out in Denver, Washington officials have been busy with one of the perennial problems of the nation's capital. The Democrats never could solve it, and now it looks as if the Republicans can't solve it. But they've tried awfully hard.

It's a tougher problem than balancing the budget—namely getting rid of the starlings.

Those irrepressible birds have the habit of nesting over the porticoes and doric columns of government buildings, where they keep up an incessant chatter, littering the streets—and passers by—with debris. Bureaucrat after bureaucrat has tried to drive them away, scare them away, entice them away. All have failed.

Archivist Wayne Grover, who boasts one of the least-sullied buildings in Washington, has been the last valiant soul to cope with the hitherto undefeated starlings. In an effort to keep his archives building clean he tried focusing floodlights on his columns and porticoes at night.

This, however, merely acted as a beacon. The lights attracted more starlings. Furthermore, the starlings which already lived in and around the archives building resented the intrusion and put up an awful shrief when the new arrivals came swooping in.

In fact, the noise got so bad that archivist Grover next tried to scare them away with a sound truck.

Consulting scientists from the University of Pennsylvania, Grover was advised that the distress call of the starling would frighten the other birds away. So he got a recording of a starling in extreme pain and anguish and had a sound truck play it as it circled around the archives building. This worked fine—until the sound truck stopped circling. Then the starlings came right back again.

Archivist Grover couldn't afford to keep the sound truck busy all day and night After all, Ike was trying to cut the budget. So he gave up.

However, Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey was more resourceful. His Treasury Building is not quite so bright and shiny as Archivist Grover's, but even so he had pride in its exterior, did not like to see it sullied by the Starling's posteriors.

So he devised the idea of installing loud speakers in the eaves of the Treasury Building to play the distress call at regular intervals.

This worked fine. The starlings were scared away and went down to visit Archivist Grover. Apparently they realized this was a Republican administration and that cut-throat competition between Bureaucrats is the accepted creed of the party.

However, Secretary Humphrey didn't have peace for long. A flock of pigeons moved in where the starlings moved out. So now Humphrey has to figure out the distress call of the pigeon and change the records on his loud speakers.

Merry-Go-Round

The Democrats, who have taken literally to begging in the streets in an effort to raise money for the coming campaign, had a great success in the Capital. They collected more than $4,000 in eight hours of panhandling from an estimated 15,000 contributors. . . They would like to repeat in other cities, but in some cases are up against city ordinances. Pittsburgh, for instance, permits street and door-to-door collections only by charitable organizations . . . In Washington, Democratic collections were lowest near government buildings. Many government employees, apparently fearing reprisal, whispered: "We'll contribute at home." . . . GOP National Chairman Leonard Hall is giving liberal Republicans the cold shoulder in the campaign. He has left them off speaking schedules except in their home states . . . The Atomic Energy Commission will built a giant, 15-billion volt cosmotron at Brookhaven. It will speed up atomic research considerably.

Mexico

When Mexico seized its large estates and parceled them out among the peons, the State Department at first objected; and Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State under Coolidge, wrote a series of notes that sent U. S.-Latin American relations to their lowest ebb. To repair the damage, Coolidge sent Dwight Morrow, millionaire partner of the J. P. Morgan banking firm, as ambassador to Mexico, and Morrow surprised the world by endorsing the Mexican land reforms. Morrow's cooperation with Mexico set a new landmark for Mexican - American friendship.

Don't Sterotype Honor Decisions

Editor,

On September 30, Dave Reid, vice-chairman of the Student Party, introduced a bill concerning Honor System violators to the Legislature. Since that time the bill has been widely discussed and grossly misunderstood. Reid's proposal, on the other hand, has led to confusion about existing policies of the Honor Council.

As I understand it, the present Honor Council policy is that if a student is convicted of cheating, and he did not report himself he will be suspended from the University for a period of one semester. He can be readmitted only through the channels of the Honor Council. However, if a student is a victim of extenuating circumstances and if he can show that he turned himself in voluntarily, then he may be put on probation. These actions are purely a matter of Honor Council policy. There is no written regulation that binds the Honor Council to suspend all offenders. However, it should be noted that the Council does not differentiate between Freshmen offenders and upper classmn. That is, a freshman who is being tried for the first time and an upper classman are dealt with in approximately the same manner.

Reid's proposal does not bind the Honor Council. The Council is not, under the provisions of the bill, forced to put first offenders on probation. The bill merely encourages the Honor Council to be lenient with first offenders. It does, however, leave a provision for the suspension of flagrant violators. In other words, the bill, if passed, would merely be a recommendation to the Honor Council and not a directive.

Where does this leave the convicted student? In precisely the same position he occupied before the debate started—out on his ear.

Representatives of the Honor Council have said time after time that the purpose of their decisions is not punitive but corrective. Their view is that if a student gets away from the campus and has an opportunity to reflect about his misdeeds he will see the error of his ways.

Civil law is found on the theory that fear of punishment acts as a powerful deterrent to crime. On the other hand, the Honor System at Carolina thrives on the assumption that the majority of college students are honorable enough not to cheat and that they will report anyone who does. Thus our system encourages honesty while civil law threatens dishonesty. Which environment is more likely to accomplish the job of rehabilitating the wayward student?

Probation is a better answer to the problem than suspension. If we assume that the typical first offender is basically honest and that he merely succumbed to the many temptations inherent in the Honor System, then it would be better if he remained on campus. Here he would not have to face the problem of public disgrace. Only the Honor Council and certain University officials would know of his mistake. He would not have to explain why he "left school for a semester." The problem of readjustment under a system that makes it easier to cheat than to be honest is sizeable enough without adding the burden of social disgrace.

Reid's bill recommends probation for first offenders whose violations were not flagrant, but this is only a recommendation and is finished and Honor Council policies are no longer a matter of general interest, the issue is as far from being resolved as ever.

The crux of the matter is this. There is no pat definition for the terms "typical first offenders" and "flagrant violation," nor is such a definition possible. Hence the Honor Council must be left free to decide each case solely on its particular merits.

In return for such freedom the members of our highest judicial body cannot allow themselves to adopt a "tradition." They cannot allow their decisions to become stereotyped to the extent that conviction always equals suspension. Their policies and decrees must be as flexible as the human personality.

Don't Slick Down The Campus

Ed Yoder

Much talk circulates these days about the form plan, or design that gives this campus its physical beauty An undeniable trend has taken shape, having its share of followers, toward making the Chapel Hill background one of staid inflexibility—one that gives danger signals of looking ultimately like a Gay Nineties fop with high collar and hair slicked down with bear grease. This trend would replace the rustic expanses of sand and oaks with ordered lawns of deep grass and curved walkways.

The lately-constructed "New, New Old Well"—with its plush lawn and azalia-lined brick-walks, presents a case in point. A great change has come over the well since 86, as is demonstrated by a faded photo in Archibald Henderson's Campus of the First State University. The photo shows a rickity wooden structure over the well—and it really was a well then because one of the figures in the picture is just drawing a bucketfull of water. The pagoda-shaped dome of the well is supported by eight flimsy wooden timbers. President Alderman decided one day some twenty or thirty years later that the Well needed treatment. He had worekrs erect "a sort of sixth cousin of a Greek shrine, or the third cousin of the Temple of Vesta, or second cousin of the Temple of Versailles." Now this country cousin is gone and a slick new version has taken its place.

Another example of the slicker trend is the Graham Memorial parking lot, which has had a verdant toupee set on its hitherto dishevelled pate. Now it has been collared around with an asphalt run-way for the myriads of Chapel Hill autos. Last of all, the toupee is to be crowned with a silent and majestic sundial.

A strong band, in which I include myself, disagrees that this new look follows the tradition of natural beauty on this campus. We have tried calumny. We have called the trend "Dukism." We have said it is pompus. We have said that these "beatuy spots" look out of place. But there exists a more logical argument on our side—for the Carolina campus has not always showed signs of degeneration into foppishness.

It didn't, for one thing, look dandyish to Thomas Wolfe in Look Homeward Angel, from the book called "Artemidorus Farewell," one reads of this campus:

"There was still a good flavor of the wilderness about the place—one felt its remoteness, its isolated charm. It seemed to Eugene (Gant) like a provincial outpost of great Rome: the wilderness crept up to it like a beast . . . Its great poverty, its century-long struggle in the forest, had given the university a sweetness and a beauty it was later to forfeit."

But when he came, "the greenest of all green freshmen," the forfeiture he speaks of had not been made. The tradition of the campus of this school has consistently been one of relaxation, informality, and of rusticity—but this does not mean that it has been one of sloppiness. Its history has included an inherent factor of heterogeneity of building and planning. But it has held onto that Greek virtue of unity within variety. All of its seemingly discordant parts, it has always been agreed by those who have been fascinated by its natural charm, melt together into a pleasing unity in the eye of the beholder.

As Dr. Henderson says, "the architectural forms and idioms of the structures upon the Campus . . . reflect the successive phases of its historial development. The features which impress the visitor—amidst a welter of untitiviated Colonial, Classic, Revival, Tudor, Georgian, Italian, Romanesque, and eevn a touch of Gothic—are not so much the variety and heterogeneity of disparate style, as the harmonious elements which pull the whole composition together."

Unless the advocates of the new trend intend to tear down and start anew—and surely that would meet with overwhelming adversity — it would be wise if they reconsider their piecemeal effort to slick down the campus. An old story has it that one of the LaFarge brothers, on a visit here some years ago, gave out the hill tidings that the stadium is the only beautiful edifice on campus from a classic architectural viewpoint. Yet, almost to a man, visitors have yielded to the enigmatic charm of total effect.

When will we take note of the virtue our campus has and grant that it is enough?

Here's a little rundown on the Huxley audience and their makeup. One tenth came to hear what the man had to say. One quarter came to see who else was there. One fifth came with their copies of Brave New World to have them autographed. Another fifth came because they had seen both the movies. A final fourth came out of sheer, unadulterated college curiosity. I was there . I didn't see you .

After the lecture the folks retired to Graham Memorial for punch. Here the confusion started. Two girls in the GM kitchen had been making punch for the students wathing the Tulane football game upstairs, It seems that Huxley and his crew just had to have some punch. The poor students who took in the football flick went dry . . . I got mine anyway

After three insufferable weeks of humid, heat-laden horror, we were finally blessed with a beautiful typical fall day with the wind a little nippy roun' the corners. I overheard one guy remark. "Man, I just can't stand this Aartic weather." Wouldn't you know it? Wouldn't you just know it?

Old East Edges Cobb In 6-0 Tilt

Of the three games scheduled yesterday in the Intra-Mural Football League only one was played. In that one, Old East defeated Cobb, 6-0.

The other two contests were forfeits: Manley over Winston, and Stacy over the Med School.

The lone score in the Cobb-Old East battle came early in the first half on a 20-yard aerial from Jack Jones to Jerry Mayo. Except for this score, neither team threatened seriously.

Dick Hargitt and Bradford Mills were outstanding on defense for Cobb.

Gridders In Top Shape After Loss To Georgia

Although Coach George Barclay's Tar Heels lost to Georgia Saturday afternoon, 21-7, the Carolina gridders survived the contest without any serious injuries and should be in near-top condition for the Maryland encounter Saturday afternoon.

Jack Maultsby, the big Tar Heel tackle who was injured in the Tulane game may return to the line-up against the Terrapins. However, Coach Barclay is still not sure whether Maultsby will be ready. He could only say "I hope he'll be okay."

Barclay had little praise for his teams showing against Georgia. "We just made too many mistakes and gave them the ball too much," the Carolina mentor revealed. "I'm not planning any changes in the line-up right now though," he added.

Yesterday the Tar Heels saw pictures of the Georgia game and then worked out briefly at Navy Field. The gridders ran through some plays and put special emphasis on passing.

"Maryland has a fine team," Barclay related. "I think they let down against Wake Forest. Maybe they just underestimated them (Wake Forest)."

The Carolina coach believe that the Terrapins will be plenty tough when they meet Carolina, especially since it is the homecoming game for the Maryland team. Barclay seemed pleased to find out that nearly a thousand tickets have been sold here for the game. "I think the student's spirit will help us a lot," he said.

Maryland fullback Dick Bielski, end Billy Walker, center John Irvine, and quarterback Charlie Boxold drew praise from the Carolina coaching staff. Barclay aso admitted that the Terps have a much bigger team than his Tar Heels.

Bobo Olson Risks Title Against Joey Giardello

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 11 (AP)—Middleweight Champion Carl "Bob" Olson will risk his title for the third time since he won it in a fight with Britain's Randy Turpin by taking on the top-ranked contender Joey Giardello, of Philadelphia, in 15 rounds here Dec. 15.

Turpin was European Champion and Olson the American titleholder when they met.

The agreement announced today came as a surprise. Olson, who has been in light training the past two weeks, had indicated strongly he planned no further title action this year for income tax reasons.

Giardello was operated upon last Wednesday for removal of torn cartilege from a left knee injured in a car crash. He now is in St. Agnes Hospital at Philadelphia but his surgeons said Giardello should be able to start road work in a month.

The fight, to be nationally televised over the CBS Network, will be staged at San Francisco's huge Cow Palace where Olson decisioned Rocky Castellani Aug. 22.

If you drive for the sheer zest of it you owe yourself this hour!

If your hands rejoice in the precise balance of a fine gun or the sweet response of a racing sloop . . . then you owe yourself an hour with the Chevrolet Corvette.

You'll find it is, quite literally, like no other car in the world—a heart-lifting blend of the true sports car with all that is best in American engineering.

There is the velvet smoothness of a Powerglide automatic transmission (but with the classic floor selector-lever).

The trouble-free durability of a Chevrolet "Blue-Flame" engine (but with three side draft carburetors to unleash its flashing 150 horsepower).

The ruggedness of an X-braced box girder frame (but with the astonishing impact resistance of a glass-fiber-and-plastic body).

Luxurious seating for driver and passenger in deep foam rubber (but cradled in the traditional security of bucket seats).

Generous luggage room, the panoramic sweep of a deeply curved windshield, the flair of tomorrow's styling (but within the polo-pony compactness of a real road car).

The Corvette blends all this and more. For it is a driver's car . . . a low-slung torpedo with a center of gravity only 18 inches above the concrete . . . with outrigger rear springs that make it hold to the road like a stripe of paint . . . with a 16 to 1 steering ratio that puts needle-threading accuracy at your finger tips.

Frankly, the Corvette is a "limited edition," made only in small numbers. It is intended only for the man or woman to whom driving is not just transportation but an exhilarating adventure, a sparkling challenge to skill and judgment. If you are one of these, then you owe yourself an hour with a Chevrolet Corvette.

Call us now and let us set up a demonstration run . . . for in a short 60 minutes you can discover that motoring has a whole new dimension of delight.

IWC Picnic Today

The first activity of the year for the Independent Women's Council is a picnic today on the side lawn of McIver.

All independent women are invited to attend and tickets for admission have been issued.

The Interdormitory Council is also cooperating with the IWC and has issued about 150 tickets to men.

Ron Levin will help to entertain the group along with a male barbershop quartet, a skit by the girls group, a girls trio, and a male soloist.

The IWC is composed of representatives from all the women's dorms and Town Girls Association.

Seniors Have Three Days

Seniors have three more days—today, tomorrow and Thursday—to have their photographs made for the 1955 Yackety Yack.

The pictures are taken in the basement of Graham Memorial from 1 to 8 p. m. No one will be photographed who is not in line by 6:30 p. m. of the last two days,editors said.

Seniors were urged to come early to avoid late crowds by the editors. Coats and ties are necessary for men; girls will be draped.

problem and the Morehead sundial. In reference to the former, he advises students to "Get 'em a keg of beer and just go out in the woods somewhere and drink it all. Just be sure you have enough trees to lean on when you get sick!"

The sundial, he thinks, is very nice. "Maybe when they get the place all dolled up, with the bell tower at the back of the campus and this new thing at the front, they'll put a clock on the Old Well or somewhere, where the students can see it."

As for the future of the University, Jeffress believes it had better get busy and re-win the support of the people of the state. Since the budget obviously isn't balancing, tuition will undoubtedly be raised, he thinks. But the most important thing UNC can do right now is "Go to winning some football games, or we're going to be in mighty poor esteem with the Legislature!"

The Salzburg Marionette Theatre, directer by Hermann Aicher, will play here Feb 15, 1955. The group has toured the United States three times in recent years and has been received warmly each time.

Said Secretary Wallace, "The Marionette Theatre is not to be confused with a Punch and Judy show. If it were, we would certainly not be asking people to come and see it." Wallace said the Marionette are "beautifully made," stand three-and one-half feet tall and there are approximately 100 of them, with 10 puppeteers, in each performance.

Gieseking

Pianist Walter Gieseking, described by Wallace as "alone worth the total price of the ticket," will perform here in Memorial Hall March 31, 1955.

Billed as "one of the greatest pianists of all time," Gieseking has performed in almost every country in the world, traveling a distance nearly equalling three times around the world.

Peerce

Jan Peerce, whose son, Larry, attended school here and sang upstairs in Danziger's, will return to the campus on April 15, 1955.

National Broadcasting Company singer, Metropolitan Opera star and the man who sang "Bluebird of Happiness" (It's on the juke box at the Rathskeller), Peerce appeared here under the auspices of the Student Entertainment Committee when his son was a student, and was enthusiastically received.

WALTER GIESEKING

Walter Gieseking Will Play Here Next March

Tickets for the Chapel Hill Concert Series, which will feature famed pianist Walter Gieseking and other artists, went on sale yesterday.

Gieseking, billed as "one of the greatest pianists of all time" will appear on March 31, 1955. Also on the concert bill are The American Chamber Orchestra (next Wednesday), The Salzburg Marionette Theatre (Feb. 15, 1955) and Jan Peerce, famous tenor, April 15.

When the ticket drive opened yesterday, 500 student tickets were put on sale. Tickets are $5.00.

"Probably no pianist in the world could have bettered him," says Time Magazine of Gieseking. He is described by Graham Memorial Director Jim Wallace, as "alone worth the price of the ticket."

Born in Lyons, France, he rose to receive France's highest decoration, the Legion of Honor. He was the first European pianist invited to perform in England after World War II. Having an ability to play, at moment's notice and without score, 24 concertos for orchestra, several hundred sonatas and perhaps 1,000 shorter pieces, Gieseking has traveled a distance equal to three circles of the globe.

CUSC Meets Here Today

The executive committee of the Consolidated University Student Council will meet with President Gordon Gray this afternoon at 5 o'clock to discuss various issues and problems facing the organization.

Members include student body presidents from N. C. State, WC and UNC, along with the chairmen of the three delegations.

Complete Text Of Bill To Recommend Cheating Leniency

Following is complete text of the "leniency bill" introduced recently in the student Legislature by Dave Reid, Student Party legislator.

The bill is being printed in its entirety because this newspaper feels all students should have an understanding of the measure as it was presented to the lawmakers of this student body.

A BILL TO LIBERALIZE PUNISHMENT IN FIRST OFFENSE CHEATING CASES

Whereas: There has long been a need for rehabilitation and correction instead of mere punishment in first offense cheating cases brought before the Honor Council, and

Whereas: Reform in this area would encourage more widespread participation in the operation of the Honor System since reporting an individual would not necessarily mean automatic suspension, and

To Convene Nov. 18:

State Student Legislature Will Interview Aspirant Delegates

The next session of the North Carolina State Student Legislature will be held in Raleigh Nov. 18, 19 and 20, according to the Legislature's Interim Council.

All colleges and universities of North Carolina have been invited to send delegations, depending in size on the enrollment. The delegates gather in Raleigh to debate issues of educational, state, national and international importance.

The two members of the Interim Council, governing body between legislature sessions, from the University of North Carolina are Joel Fleishman and Susan Fink.

The delegates to the legislature will be chosen next week by the traditional method of having interviews with the selection board. The meetings of the board will be held on the following days: Monday night from 9 until 10:30, Wednesday afternoon from 2 until 4:30, Thursday night from 9 until 10:30 and Friday afternoon from 2 until 4:30. All of these meetings will be held in the Woodhouse Conference Room.

All students of the University are eligible for membership in Carolina's delegation to the State Student Legislature. The applicants will be asked various questions on primarily political topics when they appear before the selection board. The criteria used in determining the delegates will be their interest, the presentation of their information and the factuality of their information.

The first assembly of the North Carolina State Student Legislature was sponsored in 1936 by Pi Kappa Delta forensic fraternity at State College. This group was more an oratorical society which convened annually for debate than a legislative assembly.

The Ninth Annual Assembly, meeting in December, 1945, passed the Glenn Resolution to admit Negro delegates after much discussion.

In the fall of 1947 the State College Pi Kappa Delta announced that it had dissolved itself and the Student Legislative Assembly. This act on the part of the State College students resulted in action on the part of the Debate Council at Chapel Hill to make an all-out effort to revive the group.

After thrashing through the problem, representatives from State, Meredith, WCUNC and UNC decided to continue the Assembly. In November the nucleus group formed a council and elected Earl Fitzgerald of UNC, president, and James Cranford of State, secretary-treasurer.

Hill Hall Slates Wilk Concert Tuesday Night

A concert featuring Bach, Beethoven and Schumann selections will be presented by Maurice Wilk, American violinist, in Hill Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m. Dr. Wilton Mason of the University's Music Department will accompany.

Wilk will be the second guest artist to be presented at the Evening Concert Series this year under sponsorship of the UNC Department of Music.

The young violinist's entire musical education and training was undergone in New York, with the exception of a tour in Europe last summer when he was the distinguished pupil of Pablo Casals.

His first professional appearance was made at 14 when he played a Bach concerto with the Mutual Broadcasting System orchestra; at 15 he gave a recital in Steinway Hall, and at 18 he was chosen by Toscanini for the NBC Symphony, becoming the youngest member of hte group.

In the last few years, Wilk has had three Carnegie Hall recitals, some 15 Town Hall appearances as both recitalist and guest artist and a six-month tour of Europe, in addition to frequent recitals in colleges and universities throughout the United States.

Dr. Mason, who will accompany the guest artist, is a charter member of Accompanists Unlimited, which furnishes accompanists to traveling artists. Mason, who is Associate Professor of music at UNC, has played throughout the Southeast, accompanying many of the country's outstanding artists.

Last year, besides playing for Leslie Chabay in Chapel Hill, he went on tour with Britain's leading violinist, Alfredo Campoli, performing in universities and colleges in the South.

He has appeared as soloist with the North Carolina Symphony and has been both piano and harpsichord soloist with the Raleigh Chamber Music Guild.

Both Wilk and Dr. Mason were identified with musical organizations while serving with the armed services during World War II.

Scenes From 'The Crucible,' Which Opens Tonight

'Crucible' To Open At 8:30

Last week a cow was running errant through the streets of Chapel Hill. This week, in the world created on the stage of the Playmakers Theatre, a lot of cows are wandering through the streets of old Salem, Mass., because their masters are in jail.

The charge for jailing most of the population of Salem is witchcraft and the punishment is death by hanging. Only one man dares to face the truth about the witching panic, and Arthur Miller's play, "The Crucible," opening tonight at 8:30, in the Playmakers Theatre, is his story.

"The Crucible," an exciting and electrifying play which promises to keep the audience on the edge of their seats, will play through Monday night.

Friday and Saturday evening performances are completely sold out, and the play is being held over because of the heavy demand for tickets.

A few seats and limited standing room will be available at the box office for other performances.

However, tickets should be bought immediately either at the Playmakers business office, 214 Abernethy Hall, or Ledbetter-Pickard's.

Director of "The Crucible" is Foster Fitz-Simmons, Playmaker staff member. Costumes are by Suzanne Kramer with lighting by Charles Jeffers.

Pat Hunter Chairman:

Group Appointed To Explain Honor System To High Schools

UNC Student Government President Tom Creasy recently appointed a committee to disseminate information regarding student council and honor system functions to all AAA and AA high schools throughout the state.

The committee, consisting of Chairman Pat Hunter, Herb Browne, Nancy Whisnant, Joan Metz, Bob Eberle, Sonia Bergan, Ed McCurrey, Rollie Tillman, Lu Ann Thornton, Kendrick Townsend and Carol Webster, will visit each of the high schools at some time during the 1954-55 academic year.

According to Creasy the program, which received counsel and advice from Assistant Director of Admissions Charlie Brenard, was begun early last spring but, due to limited time, was not carried through in the desired manner.

The primary aim of the program was expressed by Creasy: "I feel that too many students come to the University each year with no idea of the workings of our honor system. I hope that by the talks in various schools, we will not only enlighten the students as to the workings of the honor system at Carolina but, I hope also that we may influence the adoption of such a system in the schools concerned."

Part Of The Story Of Gordon Gray:

The President Of The University And His Students

*(Taking note of the most often-heard criticism of President Gray among students—that he's too far away from students and their problems—*The Daily Tar Heel sent Reporter Childs to try to find an answer. He talked with Mr. Gray, and came up with this report.—Editor.

By CHARLES CHILDS

He leaned back in his swivel chair, lit a Cavalier and said, "Well, what would you like to know?" So began an interview and investigation of a man few people really know—Gordon Gray.

The first thing discussed was his undergraduate days at Carolina. He took undergraduate life very seriously and participated in many student affairs. One of these activities was the formation by Kay Kyser of a new student organization called "Cheerios," and its purpose was to "get school spirit" for athletic contests. Gray seriously explained that he did not consider it immature to have "organized vocal effort at sports." And he felt that things which build school spirit are "not a waste of time."

As a sophomore, Gray was initiated into DKE and lived in its house until his senior year. He then rented an apartment with two friends, David Craig now a lawyer in Charlotte, and W. R. Huger, now with the Champion Paper and Fiber Corporation in Asheville. When asked if noise was a factor in their getting the apartment, he smiled and said "I contributed as much noise as the others." Of course, from looking at his record (all A's except three grades), it looks as if neither wind, sleet nor hail had any influence on his studying.

Pres. Gray

Like several other men, Gray enjoys playing golf. But he confessed that of the Sunday foursome, "I'm the poorest player." Poor to him means a score of 80-95, but he had no other comment on the quality of his golf. Later, one of his weekly golf partners said that Gray had said he was going to give up golf for paddle tennis; each time his score improves, he changes his mind. But in any event, there's a new paddle tennis court being built behind the President's house. Gray is paying for the court, but if he gets many more 37's on the first nine holes, he might turn pro.

He hesitates to call himself a liberal because of the myriad of definitions which have come to be attached to the term. Gray prefers being known as a fair and just man.

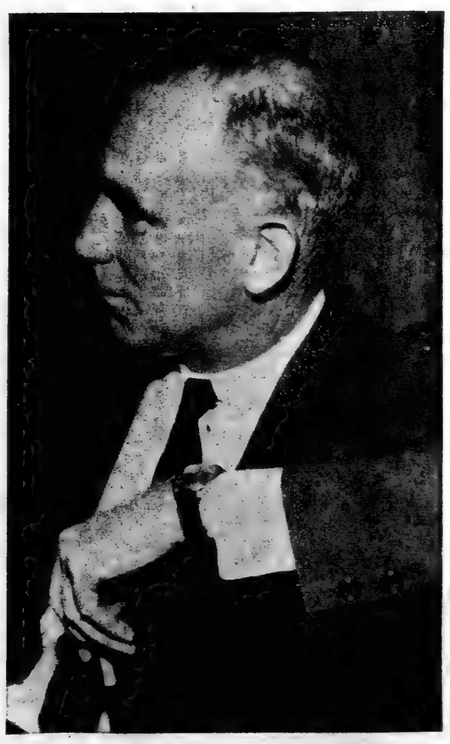
As far as his life outside of his office is concerned, it is full of "homework," TV and a 7-year-old son, one of three. Gray lives a very quiet life with negligible social life.

Suggestions

In reference to his call for suggestions as to how he could get closer to the students, The Daily Tar Heel interviewed more than 60 students and asked for their suggestions. These suggestions were then summarized and separated into four main divisions, which were presented to Gray.

The first suggestion was that he meet with groups of about 300 students and let them ask him questions. Gray's reply to this was that it was a "very interesting suggestion" and that he "will be willing to try to work out such an arrangement." His question about the plan was "would a great number of students be interested or would the meetings be re-attended by the same students?"

The second suggestion was to have his office open to students. "I don't think a student fails to get in if he wants to see me." He explained that this was a "complicated problem since there are 6,000 students here, 2,400 in Greensboro and 4,000 in Raleigh." He does things by appointment, and he said "I do not want to discourage students, and I am sorry that they feel that they aren't welcome."



The third suggestion was that he could attend pep rallies. "I have done that—not this year," Gray said, and continued that he could not have attended the State-Carolina pep rally, because the game was between two branches of the Consolidated University. He has not been invited to a State College pep rally. However, it appeared as if he would accept invitations to such student gatherings.

The last suggestion was that he should hold open house and let the students feel welcome. This would lead to complications, he said, because there are three institutions.

Personality

Gray has an easy-going manner which makes people feel that they are not being rushed. But underneath he has a constant drive which is visible only in his work habits.

He stays in his office for about eight hours each day and even before he leaves his office, he packs a brief-case with homework. Of his work habits, Chancellor Robert B. House had this to say: "Gray drives himself. . . . He is a late sitter and an early riser . . . and he keeps longer hours than anyone in the University." Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver provided some interesting observations which agree with those of other people. Gray has a "fairness and respect for facts which is remarkable," said Weaver. His "work habits are disciplined and yet deliberate, but I have never felt hurried" in talking with him.

PRESIDENT OF THE CONSOLIDATED UNIVERSITY

. . . do the students know him well enough?

To pople who have had the occasion to either attend school with him, work with him or speak with him, Gray is a very reserved but cordial man.

This quiet nature of Gray was evident while he was an undergraduate. Prof. English Bagby, who taught Gray several undergraduate courses, gave some informing reflections of Gray. He was an "extremely quiet student, talked only when asked questions in seminars. and was very reserve," according to Bagby. Even Gray's desire for facts was very pronounced: "he was always evaluating . . . so many students try to get answers for examinations—he didn't." Bagby never "knew a man who knew so much and said so little."

Bagby said that Gray reminded him of a little 11-year-old girl who wrote an essay. In the essay she said that "one of her brothers wanted to see the queen's palace, another wanted to see some other great thing, but that she wanted to see everything. To me, Gray is like that little girl."

When told that the students did not know the type person Gray is, Bagby said that i was no surprise, because "our contact with him lacks intimacy, so that it is extremely difficult to know what manner of man he is." Since "our behavior towards a person depends upon our definition," we cannot know him because we cannot define him. Bagby continued to say it is unfortunate that more students do not know Gray. He felt that "if it were easier to get access to him, they would find him pleasant, charming but reserved."

The whole question of Gray's relation with the students is tied up in his personality and his job.

His Job And His Students

There are two views of the influence of Gray's job on his relations with students.

The first view is that Gray's job of being president of three institutions requires considerable time and that it leaves little time for him to meet with students. If he took time to see each student he would have no time to run the University. "Gray is trying to get the administration of the university back on the track," say some.

Student contact with the president is desirable, "but is the idea of students seeing the president outdated?" ask others. Running a multi-million dollar institution on a business-like basis requires meetings and records. Gray has done a lot for the University . . . he has for

The Concert Series

We are astonished, as the radio commercials say, at the big, big value, for the low, low price. In case you've been missing the stories on our news pages, you have an opportunity to sign up to enjoy the American Chamber Orchestra, the Salzburg Marionette Theatre, the greatest American pianist, Walter Gieseking, and tenor Jan Peerce — and for $1.25 each.

There are only 500 student tickets left, at $5 a throw. We can't remember as appealing an arrangement for culture hungry and penny-pinching students in a long time. Programs such as the one the Chapel Hill Concert Series is bringing here make Dr. Skipper Coffin's description of our town—"the Athens of Orange County"—more than an empty phrase.

What's Good For Charlie: The Boot

If Defense Secretary, maladroit Charles E. Wilson departs Washington hunting-grounds with no other feathers in his hat than his unreckoned number of witless remarks, he will have something to remember.

The latest feather he installed Monday at a press conference as he commented on the ascending unemployment in labor. He had "a lot of sympathy," he said, for the jobless, but he always "liked bird dogs better than kennel-fed dogs." He explained that "the bird dogs like to get out and hunt around for their food, but the kennel dogs just sit on their haunches and yelp."

WILSON

This confirms, to our minds, that Mr. Wilson lacks not only taste but social conscience. We can recall two other remarks by Mr. Wilson that rival the bird dog comment for sheer gall. One was the now famous opinion that "what is good for General Motors is good for the country;" another was in answer to a request for an opinion on Ernest Hemingway's poignant novel, The Old Man And The Sea. He said he couldn't see why anyone would get excited about an old man who was a failure.

We wish that Mr. Wilson could descend from his gilded Washington world and observe the employment situation. He might start on this campus, which we are sure differs little in present economic situation from scores of other campuses in the country. Money has tightened and there actually are not enough part time jobs to tide many budgets over. We wonder whether, in Mr. Wilson's unbelievably callous opinion, those who can't get part-time jobs fall under the bird dog or the kennel dog category?

CIO and United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther was quick to make what we think is a well chosen statement. "I had believed," he said, "we were decades past the day when allegedly civilized men thought such things, let alone expressed them aloud in public."

We think Wilson has quite over-stepped himself this time. We call upon the President to remove him from the ranks of his cabinet (the dignity of which he doesn't seem to merit) and restore him to the brain-trust of General Motors where he belongs, after all.

Caroline Coed, Just Who Are You, Anyhow?

Louis Kraar

AN INTERESTING letter arrived recently from a young lady who signs her name "Caroline Coed."

Miss "Coed" has comments and criticisms on the Dior look and drinking—or, to be more accurate, this reporter's views on them. If "Caroline," who says she lives on Raleigh Street, will let me know who she is, I'll be glad to print her views.

Who knows, girls, she might even be your roommate.

AT LAST a solution has turned up for those Graham Memorial television fans who watch one game, discuss another, and listen to a third on the radio at the same time.

One of the bigger radio firms must have had this age of divided attention in mind. It has produced a three-speaker television set.

Now all the world needs is three-eared listeners.

MONDAY NIGHT the Student Party will begin nominations for junior and freshman class officers.

While usually being nice honors without political future, this year's class officer choices may reveal something of a political trend. Talk among the SP these days has been centered strongly around the class officers.

Perhaps the nominations for class officers will be a preview of spring election. SP attention on the selections has given them this preview importance.

"OUR BEST To You," the melodious sound that sweeps your dorm as every room radio is in unison and tuned to the same station, will be broadcast from Campus November 5.

Jimmy Capps, who handles the platters with a minimum of chatter, will set up shop in Lower Quad that night. It will be the first direct broadcast of the show from this campus. Capps' other two appearances here in the past have been simulated broadcasts.

Capps will also bring a live show with him to entertain the Lower Quad blanket sitters. The Inter-Dormitory Council has arranged the affair and will also provide the refreshments.

JULIAN SCHEER reported in his Charlotte News column that this really happened on a college campus near the Queen City.

A dormitory housemother heard some noise one night on an upper floor. She dispatched someone to break up the gathering. The student did, then found that he had broken up a prayer meeting.

THE CONSOLIDATED University is no more—in name, that is.

President Gray, worried about whether "Consolidated University" was inappropriately suggestive of factories, mills, etc., looked up the law which created the three-branch University.

It referred simply to the fact that the Woman's College, State and Carolina would henceforth be consolidated as one university—to be known as the University of North Carolina.

South Building letterheads have been appropriately changed.

'Care To Step In Here To Study The Problem'

Capitol Merry-Go-Round

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — One of the mysteries of Washington is why the Eisenhower administration has tried to win November votes with one hand and nonchalantly lost November votes with the other.

The following illustrate the paradox:

A. In Denver last week, Vice President Nixon was admitting to newsmen that the election was going to be touch and go; while majority leader Halleck mournfully felt it was as good as lost.

B. Simultaneously, in Washington the Atomic Energy Commission, dominated by Admiral Strauss, former partner of the Wall Street banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb, was demanding that the dynamiteladen Dixon-Yates contract be signed—right away—without the 30 day scrutiny of Congress required by law.

This headlong rush to sign a contract which Congress debated for weeks had the effect of losing votes for the very same senators whom Ike and Nixon and Charley Halleck want to elect.

Naturally it hurt Senator Guy Cordon, who faces a tough re-election in Oregon. It was bound to help Democratic Senator Jim Murray in water power conscious Montana, whom the White House does not want to elect. It was bound to hurt GOP Senator Mundt in South Dakota, a state where rural electrification is strong. And it was certain to handicap Senator Dworshak and help his Democratic opponent, ex Senator Glen Taylor in Idaho, where public power has lots of friends.

The Mystery Deepens

Perhaps Admiral Strauss and the military men who now run the AEC didn't know this. Anyway they insisted on pushing the Dixon-Yates contract for an immediate signature—until wiser Senator Bourke Hickenlooper of Iowa came back from South America and postponed congressional hearings.

Hickenlooper realized what the impetuous gentlemen of the AEC and White House apparently didn't, that the public has become extremely suspicious of a power contract that was OK'd by the President despite the disapproval of the Tennessee Valley Authority, despite a majority vote against it inside the AEC, and despite the fact that Dixon-Yates got the contract without any real competitive bidding.

What a lot of people want to know is why? Why was the Dixon-Yates contract let in the first place? Why was it made a life or death matter during the closing days of Congress when Ike was itching to leave for Denver? And why the hurry about signing the contract despite a law which Langer of North Dakota and Senator Kefauver of Tennessee may have the answers. They have ben doing some interesting digging of late, and here are some of the things they have come up with:

1. Eugene Yates, chairman of the Southern Company and a partner in the Dixon-Yates combine, was a late comer in the deal. He did not get into the negotiations until two months after Mr. Dixon of Middle South Utilities began talking to the AEC. After he got in, however, Yates made amazing progress. He seemed to have powerful pull in high places.

2. The Budget Bureau, when ordered to make public the Dixon-Yates correspondence, waited two days trying to figure out some reason to explain why Yates was belatedly brought into the negotiations.

3. One friend of Mr. Yates with high up connections is John C. Persons of Birmingham, Ala., a top director of Yates' Southern Company. Persons is a cousin of General Wilton Persons of the White House staff who has been close to Ike for years.

4. Another director of Mr. Yates' power combine is Bobby Jones, the President's golfing friend.

5. A third potent friend of Mr. Yates was Ed Falck, shrewd Washington power lobbyist. The minutes of the Budget Bureau, as finally made public, show that Falck took Yates down to the Atomic Energy Commission and first introduced him to officials for a discussion of the AEC private power contract.

Falck once worked at the AEC and the War Mobilization Board, is a close friend of certain Federal power commissioners, has entertained FPC Chairman Jerome Kuykendall, Commissioner Seaborn Digby and Commissioner Nelson Lee Smith. He's considered one of the ablest power lobbyists in Washington.

These were som eof the backstage influences behind the Dixon-Yates contract that would have come out during any pre-election hearings on the subject. They were one reason why wise Senator Hickenlooper stepped in and postponed the hearings until right after election.

Note—Another answer as to why the speed in signing the Dixon-Yates contract is fear that if the Democrats take over Congress in November it will never be signed at all.

Winchell

The Securities and Exchange Commission, charged with the job of policing Wall Street, has a problem when it comes to policing commentators—especially Walter Winchell. It's a problem they don't quite know what to do about.

Winchell has made it a practice to give tips on the stock market, which on at least one occasion got him into a head-on clash with the Sec. Winchell blithely recommended Wyoming Gulf Sulphur as a good buy, apparenlty not knowing that the SEC had just initiated injunction proceedings against Wyoming Gulf Sulphur to prevent the sale of the very same stock that Walter recommended. When called on this by the SEC, he broadcast a correction.

However, the SEC is still in a quandary. They can't make Winchell take out a license as a broker, since he does not actually sell stock, though he does recommend it. And he can't be made to take out a license as a stock adviser since he gives information in the form of a news-item.

The most obvious conclusion is that Winchell is a stock manipulator, since every time he puts out a tip, the stock in question jumps up. But this can be considered manipulating only if it benefits Winchell, and he has consistently said that he doesn't own a share of stock.

Is there any reason in this world why Al Long can't play halfback and spell Gravitte and or Keller.? Remember I am asking a question and I DO want an answer. Drama Group Holds Director Meet Saturday

The Carolina Dramatic Association will hold its fall directors conference in the Playmakers Theater this Saturday with Josephina Niggli, professor of dramatic art the Woman's College as luncheon speaker.

Her topic will be "A Theatre for Women." The public is invited to attend the sessions.

The conference will begin at 10 a. m., with coffee and doughnuts served in the Green Room of the Playmakers Theatre. Following refreshments there will be a business meeting at which plans will be made for a state-wide drama program for the year. Under special consideration will be the organization of a number of district festivals to be held in the state. Productions from the festivals will be screened and the best ones invited to the Annual Dramatic Festival in Chapel Hill in April.

Speaker for the conference, in addition to Miss Niggli, will be Dr. P. N. DeVere, president and director, the Morganton Recreation Players, Morganton; Louise Lamont, The Pulpit Players, director, Chapel Hill; Julian C. Burroughs, Jr., director of speech and drama, Walter Williams High School, Burlington; Robert F. Schenkkan, director of television, Consolidated University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, and Samuel Selden, Department of Dramatic Art, Chapel Hill.

The Carolina Dramatic Association was founded in 1922 for the purpose of encouraging dramatic art in the schools and communities of North Carolina. Its aims include meeting the need for constructive recreation, promoting the production of plays, pageants and festivals, and stimulating interest in the making of a native drama. The association cordially invites all dramatic groups and individuals who are interested in any phase of dramatic art to become members. The Annual Dramatic Festival for the Association will be held April 13, 14, 15 and 16 in Chapel Hill.

Officers of the association are Lazell W. Northrop, Winston-Salem, president; Doug. W. Swink, Albemarle, vice president, and John W. Parker, Chapel Hill, executive secretary-treasurer. The executive committee consists of Samuel Belden, Chapel Hill; P. N. DeVere, Morganton; Russell M. Grumman, Chapel Hill; Iona S. Henry, Misenheimer, and Winkie Harris, Rocky Mount.

Girl Scout Council To Be Formed

The formation of an area Council of Girl Scouts in this section has been announced by Mrs. E. B. Hamshar, of Durham, chairman of a group which has been studying this project for some time. This council will comprise the counties of Orange, Durham, Granville Warren and Vance.

This decision was reached after more than a year's intensive study of the advantages of a larger organization over the small units now set up in each community. The primary factor in the decision is, of course, that it will benefit girls of scout age throughout this area greatly. The organization of such a council will be large enough to employ additional professional aid, making it possible to offer scouting to more girls.

Of special interest is the possibility of acquiring a camp site on Kerr Reservoir. An investigation of property on the lake has already been made and negotiations have been started to secure this property. A camp on Kerr Reservoir will be able to accommodate about 400 girls each summer.

An interim committee to organize this council, write a constitution and apply for a charter will be set up immediately. It is hoped that the organization of the Area Council will be completed early in 1955.

Those taking part in the study included Mrs. A. G. Sadler, Mrs. N. J. Demerath, Mrs. Sam B. Joyner, and Miss Lucille Caldwell, of Chapel Hill.

Behind The Smile: A Closer Look

From The Michigan Daily

With more university men than ever expected to experience the two, week succession of broad smiles and handshakes that is popularly termed social fraternity rushing it is certainly appropriate at this time to take an editorial look at the various aspects of the fraternity system.

The primary concern of a prospective rushee is to find the house whose men best personify his own principles and interests. If he fails in this endeavor it would probably be better if he tried elsewhere for the satisfaction of his gregarious nature during his remaining college days. The finding of a satisfactory fraternity is sometimes difficult but if it is once found, the close associations of affiliated life can make a person's undergraduate years more pleasant ones.

The word pleasant is vague but many of the benefits of fraternity life are intangible. The friendships gained, the mutual sharing of individual accomplishment and the satisfaction of sacrificing sometimes for group gain are a trio of intangible advantages that are part of fraternity life.

Although cynics, pseudo intellectuals and extreme individualists may deny that these points are advantageous to rushees, social fraternities also give men more party opportunities (usually a fraternity will hold registered parties at least once every three weeks) and the chance to meet more of the women who managed to survive a sorority rushing season.

A semi loss of individualism, occasional nights when house conditions are more conducive to library study and pressure to take part in house activities whether they are interesting or not can be listed in this category.

It is because there are disadvantages that a man's choice in the matter is so important. For many who have made the wrong choice the fraternity experience has been a sour one with disadvantages waxing very prominent in his memory. Often this person never had an opportunity to savor the good points of fraternity life because he was associating with men far removed from his individual principles and interests.

Because the choice is so important first semester freshmen are not urged to pledge. Unlike the sororities which hold rushing only once a year, the fraternity system opens its doors to rushees at the beginning of each semester. Consequently if a man pledges during his second semester on campus he can still be eligible to move into the fraternity house when his dormitory contract expires.

A first semester freshman is not actually ready to make a selection from the 42 houses existing on campus. Generally he knows very little about other phases of the University let alone the fraternities. A first semester freshman should orientate himself before he gets himself tied permanently to an organization.

To help the orientation process it is suggested that an interested freshman rush casually his first semester. He should go to the open houses today and tomorrow and acquaint himself slightly with the different houses. These first impressions should not be conclusive but instead should be introductory in nature so that when he takes part in serious rushing next February he will have some background on which to base one of the most important decisions of his collegiate life.

Quote, Unquote

The American Negro, says Zoologist Curt Stern of the University of California in Scientific American, is doomed to disappear through racial diffusion. As a group of mankind, American Negroes are relatively new. They have existed for only 300 years, and are already notably mixed. Dr. Stern figures from their blood-group makeup that about two-thirds of their genetic material (heredity) comes from Africa, about one third from Europe. More than 78 per cent of American Negroes have some non-African genes; by 1980 there will be hardly a single U. S. Negro of pure African descent.

There will be plenty of dark skinned Negroes, but skin color, Dr. Stern points out, is a superficial characteristic rather than a dependable indiccator of racial origin. The workings of heredity produce many dark skinned Negroes with thin lips and many light skinned ones with thick lips. One type is as mixed as the other, though the white population, which judges chiefly by skin color, usually considers the dark type more authentically Negro. A light-skinned Negro can pass as white, although in other respects than skin color he may be strongly Negro.

Over the generations, Dr. Stern predicts, more light skinned Negroes will be born, and they will tend, even at the present rate of interracial mating, to diffuse into the white population. The loss by "passing" of light-skinned individuals may leave the rest of the Negroes darker, on the average, than they are at present. On the other hand, an inflow of European genes may balance the loss and further dilute the Negro population.

After centuries, says Dr. Stern, most of the original African genes will be widely dispersed in the numerically dominant white population. Their incorporation will make no change except a slight darkening of the national skin. Eventually there will be a few thousand black people in each generation, and they will probably have straight hair, thick lips and thin noses.

"If some person now living," says Dr. Stern, "could return at that distant time, he would ask in wonder: 'What became of the Negro?'"

Oklahoma Reigns Alone At Top Of AP Grid Poll

Over The Hill

By FRED BABSON

James Moore (Jim) Tatum, (UNC '35), probably derives more personal satisfaction from beating the University of North Carolina than any other team in the country. Tatum's affection for his alma mater is well known, but on the gridiron this affection is transmuted into a burning desire to outdo his old school. He has succeeded rather well at this in the last couple of meetings. Big Jim effervesced into gleeful periods of jig-dancing in front of the Maryland bench in Kenan Stadium last year as his Terps rolled over the Tar Heels, 26-0. There was no game in 1952, but in '51 Tatum was forced to sweat out a close 14-7 win.

A native of McColl, S. C., Tatum played high school sports there and then entered UNC. He was an All-Southern tackle under Coach Carl Snavely. Graduating in June, 1935, he followed his coach to Cornell as an assistant. He returned to North Carolina as director of freshman athletics and became head football coach in 1942. The team had a 5-2-2 record. He entered the Navy and was assistant to Don Faurot (the originator of the split-T) at Iowa Pre-Flight. In 1945 Tatum was head coach at Jacksonville (Fla.) Naval Air Station. He coached the University of Oklahoma in 1946, winning the post-season Gator Bowl. He went to Maryland in 1947 and began building a football factory. The year before Tatum graced the Maryland campus, 1946, the Terps won three games and lost six. That was the last losing season they have had. Prior to this season, Tatum's seven-year record was 56 wins, 12 losses, and 3 ties. His teams have played in the Orange Bowl, Sugar Bowl, and Gator Bowl. The 1953 team was mythical national champion. Tatum was "Coach of the Year." Aside from being head football coach, Tatum is Maryland Athletic Director.

It is slightly ironic that Carolina's head coach, George Barclay, and Tatum should be cast as gridiron enemies. It is also a quirk of fate that Tatum should draw the leading role; and it is generally conceded that Big Jim does have top billing, at least at the present. Back in the old days the situation was reversed. When Tatum was a hustling tackle on the 1934 Tar Heel eleven, the captain of the team was George Barclay, a guard. That year Barclay inscribed his name indelibly on the Carolina scroll of all-time greats when he became the first Tar Heel ever chosen All-American.

That was not the last time Tatum and Barclay were on the same team, however. Barclay was Tatum's assistant at Jacksonville Naval Air Station in 1945. When Tatum went to Maryland in '47, he took Barclay along as his assistant. Their working association ended when Barclay was named head coach at Washington and Lee in 1949. His three-year record there was a respectable 18-10-2. He returned to Carolina as an assistant in 1952, taking over in '53 when Snavely resigned. His team's record last year was four wins against six losses.

Tatum has a six-year head start on Barclay. In his seventh year at Maryland, Tatum coached the Terps to the top of the heap, No. 1 in the nation. Barclay, only in his second year at Carolina, is still very much in the process of building.

Carolina and Maryland carry identical records into the battle at College Park, Md., Saturday. Both teams have won one, lost one, and tied one. Tatum will undoubtedly follow his usual pattern of singing the blues all week, raving about the Tar Heels' potential and citing the Terps' weaknesses. Meanwhile, Barclay will be juggling players in an effort to produce a winning combination. Maryland will still take the field a healthy 10-point favorite.

Halfback Sutton Named "Athlete Of The Week"

By BERNIE WEISS

Ed Sutton, speedy Carolina halfback, has been chosen by The Daily Tar Heel sports staff as "Athlete of the Week" for his outstanding performance Saturday against Georgia.

Sutton just barely beat out quarterback Len Bullock and guard Jimmy "Hoot" Neville for the honor. Ed was also chosen as the outstanding Carolina player by reporters covering the contest, played in Kenan Stadium.

Although UNC lost, 21-7, Sutton threw a ray of light on the dark picture and added his name to the growing list of sophomores bidding for varsity starting berths.

Sutton, a 19 year old from Cullowhee, was the Tar Heels' leading ground gainer, amassing 67 yards on six carries. This averages 11.1 yards per cary, but most of his total was picked up on a 43 yard jaunt, longest run by either team during the game. Sutton did not start the game. He played second strong to Connie Gravitte, who won "Athlete of the Week" last week.

A pre-med student here on a Morehead Scholarship, he is one of the fastest men in the Tar Heel backfield. This was demonstrated Saturday when he broke away from the Bulldog secondary and was about to plant his feet in scoring territroy when he was caught from behind on a brilliant tackle by Georgia's Clayton Gubbs.

The run initiated what could have been a touchdown drive but Carolina ran out of steam six plays later on the Georgia 13. Soon after, the game ended.

Sutton is a top basketball prospect.

Badgers Surge To Second Spot

Purdue, Duke Remain In 5th & 6th Despite Tie

Oklahoma was all by itself at the top of the Associated Press' football poll today and appears due for a long tenancy following its road victory over Texas. But some of the other members of the elite top ten may run into trouble and demotion this weekend.

In rubbing out Texas 14-7 Bud Wilkinson's Sooners just about overcame their last formidable hurdle en route to an unbeaten season. This Saturday they journey to Lawrence, Kas., to take on winless Kansas (0-4) and it should be a romp for the Oklahomans.

As a result of its victory over Texas, Oklahoma (3-0) received landslide support from the nation's sports writers and sportscasters in the weekly ranking poll. Of the 201 ballots cast, the Sooners were named first 118 times and collected 1,797 points on the usual 10 for first, nine for second, etc., basis.

Wisconsin, 13-7 winner over Rice in the nationally televised game of the week, surged into second with 21 first placers and 1,555 points. Behind the Badgers came:

3. UCLA, 1,223 points; 4. Ohio State, 1,180; 5. Purdue, 929; 6. Duke, 889; 7. Mississippi, 730; 8. Notre Dame, 729, and tied for 9th, Penn State and Navy, 380 each.

While Oklahoma has a breeze ahead, Wisconsin (3-0) faces Purdue (2-0-1); Ohio State (3-0) meets dangerous Iowa (2-1); Duke (3-0-1), which tied Purdue (13-13, take on rising Army (2-1), 60-6 conquerors of Dartmouth; Notre Dame (2-1) has a toughie in Michigan State (1-2), and Penn State (3-0) has a tartar in undefeated West Virginia (2-0).

The other members of the upper crust shouldn't have any difficulty—on paper—over the weekend. UCLA's Bruins (4-0), who just squeezed by Washington 21-20, oppose Stanford, which was shellacked by Navy 25-0. Mississippi (4-0) meets winless Tulane (0-2-2), while Navy (3-0) travels to Pittsburgh to engage the all-losing Panthers (0-3).

Frosh Profiles:

Sasser, Freshman Grid Star, Being Compared With Justice

Carolina has a football player who is being likened to Charlie Justice.

The gridder is Buddy Sasser, now playing for the Tar Heel freshmen, and to all who have seen him perform come pleasant memories of a few years back when Justice was setting the football world on fire.

Sasser, an 18 year old out of Conway, S. C., scored two of the Tar Babies' touchdowns recently when the team defeated the University of South Carolina frosh, 25-12. Buddy scored on runs of 60 and 23 yards and otherwise proved himself by calling an excellent game from his quarterback position.

Sasser bears little resemblance to the usual footballer. He weighs only 153 pounds and stands five-feet, 10 inches.

While in high school, Sasser was named All State, All Southern and All American. He was selected as the outstanding football player in AA ball in South Carolina.

Sasser also plays basketball and baseball. On the dimond he carried a batting average of .392.

"Choo Choo" Justice Day Set For Sunday, Oct. 17

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12. (AP)—Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice will be honored during halftime ceremonies when his Washington Redskin teammates take on the Philadelphia Eagles in a National Professional Football League game Sunday.

The Redskins have designated Oct. 17 as "Charlie Justice Day" in honor of their halfback who was a University of North Carolina all-time great several years back.

Newman Shifted To Fullback; McMullen Runs First String

When Carolina's Tar Heels take the field against the University of Maryland Saturday afternoon there may be some unfamiliar faces in the starting line up for Coach George Barclay's eleven.

Although Barclay says he has not yet decided to change the line up he used in the Georgia game, the Tar Heel coach has been shaking up the entire starting combine. Marshall Newman has been shifted to fullback on the first team and Larry McMullen, second string fullback; is running at left half. "Teedee" Bullock and Connie Gravitte round out the first string backfield.

Barclay, still looking for a winning combination, has moved Jimmy Neville, and Ed Patterson into the top guard spots, replacing Bill Koman and George Foti. The remainder of the line will probably remain the same.

None of the changes are definite at the present time, but it is becoming more evident that Barclay will continue to change his line up in an effort to defeat Maryland and his former teammate at Carolina, Jim Tatum, the Terp's coach.

Trainer Doc White had sad news for Tar Heel fans when he said that tackle Jack Maultsby would probably not be ready for Saturday's contest. "His leg is improving rapidly, but I don't think he will be ready," White said.

Yesterday the Barclaymen worked on pass defense at Navy Field before going behind the closed doors of Kenan Stadium to spend more time on defensive patterns to be used against Maryland.

Cobb-1 Dumps Everett By 6-0

Cobb—1 nosed Everett—1 6-0 yesterday afternoon by virtue of a second period score. Dave Kelley sprinted down the right sideline and over for the only touchdown of the game. A long pass play, moving the ball from Cobb territory to deep in the shadow of the Everett goal set up the score.

Neither team could make headway during the first half. Each sustained penalties which thwarted every attempt to advance.

Cobb—1	0	6—6
Everett—1	0	0—0

Scoring: Cobb—1, Touchdowns—Dave Kelley.

Everett—2 took a forfeit decision from Joyner, and Cobb—4 and Grimes double forfeited ot round out the 4:00 Intramural schedule.

Lineman Of Week: Oklahoma Line

By HUGH FULLERTON JR.
Associated Press Sports Writer

Virtually the entire Oklahoma line came in for some sort of consideration for "Lineman of the Week" honors after the Sooners' smashing victory over Texas, but on the word of the Texas players who opposed him, center Kurt Burris gets the call.

Burris, a 6-foot-1, 205 pound senior from Muskogee, Okla., developed into an outstanding linebacker last season and it was that part of his performance that particularly impressed Texans Herb Gray, Ben Woodson and George Robinson.

On offense Kurt, whose older brother, Buddy, starred at guard for Oklahoma and whose younger brother, Bobby, is the Sooner fullback, was just about as effective.

"He's awfully hard to block," said Woodson. Added halfback Robinson: "That No. 51 (Burris) was really good. I had to block him a lot when they were in a 5-4 defense."

Kurt, who thinks its fun to chase down runners who think he's big and slow, also shone on pass defense, knocking down one pass that was labeled touchdown.

Other Oklahoma linemen who drew special praise from the sports writers and broadcasters who saw the game were the two big ends, Max Boydston and Carl Allison, who turned in fine all-round performanees.

Bob Bartholomew, Wake Forest tackle, turned in a standout performance as the Demon Deacons fought to a 13-13 standoff with favored Maryland. He was the leader in offensive blocking, recovered a fumble that led to the first Wake Forest touchdown and was impassable on defense. Maryland ran a couple of plays at him in the early minutes of the game, then gave it up as a bad job and went the other way for the rest of the contest.

Two Michigan linemen also came in for considerable mention. Ron Kramer, a 19-year-old end, caught a pass for Michigan's second touchdown against Iowa, then calmly kicked the extra point for a 14-13 victory. Center Jim Bates was outstanding on defense.

Others nominated for Lineman of the Week included Dick DeSimone, Clemson guard of whom Coach Frank Howard said: "He just keeps on playing big league ball for us;" Navy end Ron Beagle, for the second straight week; Verle Oray, 216-pound guard who kicked a winning field goal for Houston against Texas A&M; Jesse Arnelle, Penn State end; Larry Hartshorne, Kansas State tackle, and Chuck Beemis, Colgate center.

Maurice had a little shirt

A pome by Ogden Gnash

Maurice had a little shirt
A sport-shirt, don't you know?
And everywhere that Maurice went
The shirt was sure to go.
(He was crazy about it.)

He'd wear it first to English class
From thence to Physics Lab
He found himself, like most young men
Quite fond of his VAN GAB.
(Van Heusen's famous rayon gabardine.
A real darb!)

He'd wear it when he went to bed
Because he liked nice things.
And Van Gab's special "finish"
Makes it soft as angel's wings.
(Mrs. DiMaggio's)

He'd wear it in the shower
And his roommates thought him daft
But he knew that it was washable
And so he merely laft.
(Certified completely washable, even for commercial laundries, by American Institute of Laundering. No bull.)

He loved its Sportown collar,
Fine with tie and fine without.
He was made for Van Gab's colors,
Each one's virile—have no doubt!
(Maury bought Van Gab in all 15 shades)

Note: It also has new Vanafit sizing, which means sportshirt comfort with dress-shirt fit. A great idea in a $4.95 shirt but not easily rhymable.

GREENSBORO — A "dime a day" 15-day drive is underway at Woman's College, sponsored by the student Service League, to raise $4,000 for scholarship, emergency and charitable purposes.

Main contributions from the fund will go to the Foeign Students Scholarship and the Polio Fund, but also sharing will be the Red Cross, the Heart Association, the Cancer Fund, the Community Chest, the American Friends Service Organization, the World University Service and the National Scholastic Fund for Negroes.

Helen Malis, Charlotte, is drive chairman. Betty Hobbs is the Service League chairman.

The campus drive's goal is for an average of $1.50 from each of 2,334 students.

University Day Pageant Held

The University celebrated its 161st birthday yesterday with anniversary ceremonies held on the steps of South Building.

The laying of the cornerstone of Old East by Gen William R. Davie and his associates was re-enacted in pantomime, following a responsive reading led by Chancellor R. B. House. Narrator during the ceremonies was William Trotman and Harvey Whetstone played the part of General Davie. Other masons in the pageant were Carl Williams and Lorry Braverman.

Carolina Grad Honored At Building Dedication

Dr. Zebulon Judd, graduate of the University in the Class of 1903, will be honored at a recognition dinner concluding conferences and the dedication of a new building for the School of Education at Auburn, Ala., on Friday, October 15.

Dr. Judd, a native of Wake County, has been Dean of the School of Education at Alabama Polytechnic Institute since 1920.

Musical Programs Coming

Two outstanding musical programs have been scheduled for University students in the next two weeks by the Student Entertainment Committee, headed by John Page of Rocky Mount.

Alec Templeton, noted pianist, will appear tomorrow at 8 p. m., in Memorial Hall in a program free of charge to University students. Townspeople and other non-students will be admitted after 7:40 p. m., with a $1 admission charge.

Templeton, often described as "An artist who treats music as a human thing," has capitalized upon his blindness rather than allowing it to be a handicap. His unusual ability to judge musical tones enables him to play a musical selection after hearing it only once.

His program is expected to include both serious and light music, such as he has included in his published works.

The second Student Entertainment program will be given by the Sauter-Finegan Orchestra, which will play here next Monday. Two concerts, from 4 to 6, p. m., and from 8:30 to 11 p. m., will be given in Memorial Hall, with an admission charge of $1 for each performance.

The orchestra's organizers, Ed Sauter and Bill Finnegan, were formerly arrangers for such orchestras as Benny Goodman's Tommy Dorsey's and the late Glenn Miller's.

Purpose of the Student Entertainment Committee is to bring top level talent to the campus throughout the year, including drama, music, ballet and humor.

—Dave Reid's Leniency Bill—

Whereas: Additional flexibility in the distribution of penalties of this nature would elevate the Honor Councils from their present positions closely akin to juries, to aposition of true judicial bodies; and

Whereas: The primary function of the educational institution is to teach, not punish;

Therefore Be it enacted by the student Legislature of the University of North Carolina, that:

Article I Convictions of persons for cheating where it is the first offense, shall carry with it maximum penalty of suspension for a period of one semester. The maximum for first offense cheating shall only be imposed on such offenders as are judged by the council involved to be flagrant and premeditated violators. The usual punishment for first offense cheating convictions will be probation for a period of not less than one semester nor more than two semesters.

Article II Individuals who have been placed on a probation status for cheating will be assigned by the Dean of Students Office to a faculty counselor to whom the probationer shall report bi-weekly and at other times when needed to report progress and/or problems of adjustment.

Article III No portion of this bill is to be interpreted as prohibiting or discouraging the imposition of more moderate penalties in cases where the council involved feels that the circumstances warrant a more lenient penalty.

—Gordon Gray & His Students—

the first time established a definite line of authority in the University.

Naturally there must be some compensation to the students for their loss of personal contact with Gray. The compensation is that the time which he would have spent in talking with them is used to benefit them by strengthening the faculty and trying to acquire new facilities.

The other view is that the president should set aside time for students to see him. Such things as new facilities are needed and would definitely contribute to the students. However, "is there to be a tendency for the university to take on all the 'airs' of a bank?" people ask.

Facilities are important, but no relation between brick and mortar can be disguised as a relation between president and student.

The question should not be placed on a basis of either student contact or new facilities. Both can become realities. The supporters of the second view proclaim that "we must not sacrifice human relations on the altar of administration."

Who Is Right?

Both sides of the question of Gray-student relations admit that good administration and new facilities benefit the students and that contact between Gray and the students is also highly beneficial and desireable. The only disagreement seems to be in the degree of contact.

President Gray has told many people that he wants to see students and faculty members, and their reaction to his remark is that he is very sincere in expressing his desire. They also believe, however, that it is more difficult to see him than he possibly realizes.

Gray has expressed his hope that students will make suggestions as to how he can get closer to them. In the mentioned interview Gray was sincere when he made his comments on those particular suggestions. From all indications, Gray will try to accept invitations to various student socials if he is invited. Such invitations shsould not be made with the purpose of attempting to influence him, because it would only tend to question the good will of other students. He is influenced only by facts, not petty rumors or projects.

If there are attempts on the part of the students to become acquainted with Gray, they will find him a most interesting person who delights in talking with them.

Panhel Council Slates Picnic

The Panhellenic Council will hold a picnic this afternoon on the side lawn of McIver in honor of pledges to the six sororities on the campus.

All actives and new pledge members of the sororities are invited, and the Stray Greeks will be special guests.

The picnic will be held from 5 to 7 p. m., and each pledge class will offer a skit as part of the evening's entertainment. Group singing will follow.

Future Teachers Group Schedules Wiener Roast

Members and persons interested in joining the Future Teachers' Assn. have been invited to attend a wenier roast, sponsored by the local FTA chapter, according to association officials.

The roast will be held in Battle Park picnic area (behind Forest Theatre; path leads from the theatre dressing room to the picnic spot) at 6 p. m. Monday.

Alum Rosalyn Gardner Promoted At Gallaudet

Dr. Rosalyn H. Gardner, who holds two degrees from the University, has been promoted to an associate professorship in Romance Languages at Gallaudet College, Washington, D. C.

Dr. Leonrd M. Elstad, president of Gallaudet, which is said to be the world's only college for the deaf, announced Dr. Gardner's advancement from assistant professor. She has been on the faculty there since 1950.

Tickets for the picnic will cost 50 cents, and can be purchased today through Friday from representatives in each education class, Dr. Talbet in Peabody or at the ticket table in Peabody tomorrow from 9 to 10 a. m., from 10 a. m. Friday until noon.

'No Recommendation' Made On Cheating Leniency Bill

Will Be Given To Legislature Next Thursday

The Ways and Means Committee reported out of yesterday afternoon's meeting with no recommendation on the "leniency bill."

Discussion on the bill to recommend cheating leniency was continued from the meeting held last week.

The measure in its original form will be presented to student Legislature at its next meeting next Thursday.

David Reid, (SP), author of the bill, expressed belief that the probationary punishment would impress the seriousness of the viblation upon the offender, since he would remain here where the Honor System prevails. He said he felt that this is the fundamental disagreement between those who favor and those who oppose the bill. Other members of the committee felt that the violator would receive greater realization of his offense by being severed from the University for a period of time.

Strengthen?

Also discussed at the meeting was the question of whether the bill would strengthen the Honor System or not. Rollie Tillman pointed out that students assume the responsibilities of the Honor System when they enter the University.

Ried brought out in connection with the question the fact that people do not want it on their conscience that someone has left school as a result of their reporting them. These people would be more likely to cooperate with the Honor System with the more lenient punishment, said Reid.

Reid said that under the present system, the secrecy connected with suspension causes the violator to commit another breech of his honor by fabricating reasons for his leaving school.

Roy Holsten of the Student Affairs Office expressed the belief that the problem of what the suspended student tells people in connection with his suspension is part of the rehabilitation and education which the present punishment provides.

He said there is secrecy because there is no need to publicize a suspension. He feels that by leaving this problem up to the suspended student, he greater realizes that he has violated his own integrity.

Gray Asks CUSC To Study Traffic Problems

President Gordon Gray told an executive meeting of the Consolidated University Student Council yesterday that it should do some "serious thinking" about the traffic situation here and at State College, according to a report given to The Daily Tar Heel after the meeting by a CUSC delegate.

Gray reportedly requested that the CUSC "recognize the problem and get the students to look into it."

Several state papers have commented in the past on the congestion here and at State college because of the number of student-owned cars. One editorial said in essence that if students can afford to drive cars on campus, they can afford to pay more tuition.

Doc Cheek, president of the student body at State College and a delegate to the meeting here, told The Daily Tar Heel that State has a student Traffic Committee which handles the student automobile situation there. He said that the committee arranged parking facilities.

The meeting yesterday was held in Gray's office in South Building.

It's Not Too Late To Reserve Tickets For Saturday's Game

It's not too late.

Train tickets for the Carolina-Maryland football game will be on sale up to the last minute, Head Cheerleader Jim Fountain said yesterday. Graham Memorial Travel Agency will be open Friday morning from 10 a. m. up until the busses leave at 3 p. m. sharp from the GM parking lot.

Fountain also said hotel reservations can be made all day today, and all reservations will be confirmed before the busses leave. The train will leave Raleigh at 4 o'clock, and two special trains will return; one will leave Sunday at 12:50 a. m., and the other at 5:50 Sunday afternoon. There are still plenty of tickets to the football game left on sale at the gym, and Bob and Monk still have tickets for sale to the Redskins-Eagles game.

The president of the University Club left today for Washington to check on the final arrangements for the pep rally, which will begin as soon as the students arrive in Washington. The band, going on the same train, will lead the pep rally parade which will either be on the Capitol steps or on the corner of 14th and F Sts., and all students who are going up in cars were asked to decorate their cars for the pep rally.

Cheerleaders will notify the students of the exact place for the pep rally on the train, and information sheets and "Beat Maryland" buttons will be handed out on the train also.

The headquarters for the week end will be at the Shoreham Hotel, and most students will stay either there or at the Ambassador or Statler Hotels. Students wishing information may also call Jim Fountain at the Harrington Hotel.

"Win or lose," Jim Fountain said, "It will be a tremendous week end."

'Crucible' Is Sold Out Until Sunday

Blind Pianist's Appearance Is Offered Free

Alec Templeton, noted pianist, will appear tomorrow at 8 p.m., in Memorial Hall in a student entertainment committee-sponsored program free of charge to University students.

Student wives or husbands will be admitted with spouses at a cost of $1. Townspeople and faculty will be admitted if seats are available at 7:40 p.m. for a fee of $1.

The doors will open at 7 p.m. A reception will be held in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial by the Graham Memorial Activities Board in honor of Templeton immediately following the concert.

The blind pianist began studying the piano at the age of 4 with Margaret Humphrey. At 16, he won a scholarship to the Royal College of Music in London. A familiar figure on the American scene since 1935, his real concert debut was held in Chicago's Orchestra Hall in 1936. Since then, he has concertized with phenomenal success in practically every state of the Union, province of Canada, in the Hawaiian Islands, Australia and New Zealand.

The program for tomorrow evening will include the Bach-Templeton Chorus, from the "St. Matthew Passion," the Chopin "Nocturne in F Major," Debussy's "Ballade and several of Templeton's famous compositions.

Versatility is the word so often used to describe Templeton—versatility tempered with a thorough musical knowledge and training in all aspects of the field, coupled with a singularly acute ear, producing an incomporable and sincere artist.

Templeton's recitals combine the noblest music with lighter fun, illustrating his complete sincerity in touching both the classic and popular elements of music.

Peerce Sings In April

Jan Peerce, famous tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, will appear in concert here April 15, 1955, according to Jimmy Wallace, Chapel Hill Concert Series secretary, said yesterday.

The Peerce concert will be the last in the series for which $5 student tickets are on sale. Don Geiger is in charge of student ticket sales.

JAN PEERCE
. . . in concert series

One of the most popular and versatile of American singers, Peerce heads his schedule of non-operatic activities with a series of appearances with the Bach Aria Group in New York's Town and Carnegie Halls, in Philadelphia, Boston, and Washington, D. C.

His roles at the Metropolitan and with the San Francisco Opera this season include Cavardossi in "Tosca," Rodolfo in "La Boheme," Riccardo in "The Masked Ball," Edgardo in "Lucia di Lammermoor," Alfredo in 'La Traviata" and the Duke in "Rigoletto." He will also be heard for the first time at the Met in a new role, "'Faust."

Heard recently in the world's motion picture theatres in 20th-Century Fox's film-biography of S. Hurok, "Tonight We Sing," Peerce has also starred in four other Hollywood movies including "Of Men and Music" and "Something in the Wind." He is a frequent performer on radio and television and his RCA Victor recordings are among the nation's all-time best-sellers.

Tickets Still Available For Later Shows

The Carolina Playmaker's first production of the season, "The Crucible" will move into its second night tonight, playing to another excited audience.

Arthur Miller's play, directed by Foster Fitz-Simmons, is already sold out for both tomorrow and Saturday nights.

The play will be held over because of the heavy demand for tickets. It will run through Monday night.

"The Crucible," which has been described as "an exciting and electrifying play which will keep the audience on the edge of their seats," stars Robert Sondowsky and Leslie Casey.

Costumes are by Suzanne Kramer and lighting is by Charles Jeffers.

A few seats and limited standing room will be available at the box office for other performances. Tickets should be bought immediately either at the Playmaker business office, 214 Abernethy Hall, or at Ledbetter-Pickard.

Wilk Concert Set Tuesday

A concert featuring Bach, Beethoven and Schumann selections will be presented by Maurice Wilk, American violinist, in Hill Hall Tuesday at 8 p. m. Dr. Wilton Mason of the University's music department will accompany.

Wilk will be the second guest artist to be presented at the Evening Concert Series this year under sponsorship of the UNC Department of Music.

The young violinist's entire musical education and training was undergone in New York, with the exception of a tour in Europe last summer when he was the distinguished pupil of Pablo Casals.

His first professional appearance was made at 14 when he played a Bach concerto with the Mutual Broadcasting System orchestra; at 15 he gave a recital in Steinway Hall, and at 18 he was chosen by Toscanini for the NBC Symphony, becoming the youngest member of the group.

In the last few years, Wilk has had three Carnegie Hall recitals, some 15 Town Hall appearances as both recitalist and guest artist and a six-month tour of Europe in addition to frequent recitals in colleges and universities thruout the United States.

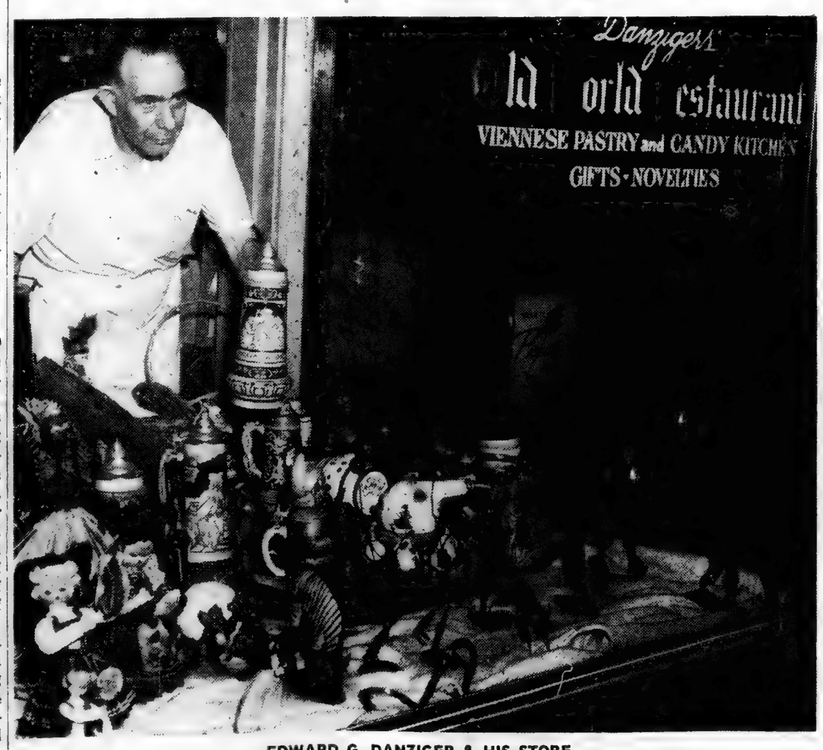
Dr. Mason, who will accompany the guest artist, is a charter member of Accompanists Unlimited, which furnishes accompanists to traveling artists. Mason, who is associate professor of music at UNC, has played throughout the Southeast, accompanying many of the country's outstanding artists.

Last year, besides playing for Leslie Chabay in Chapel Hill, he went on tour with Britain's leading violinist, Alfredo Campoli, performing in universities and colleges n the South.

N. C. State's Enrollment Totals 4,282

RALEIGH—North Carolina State College's fall semester enrollment stands at 4,282 students, the college's Registration Office reported yesterday.

The current enrollment figure is 214 larger than last fall's enrollment. The freshman class included 1,306 new students and is the largest first year class in the 65-year history of State College. There were 1,116 new freshmen last year.



Among the students enrolled this term are 53 women and 4,229 men. There are 846 veterans of the Korean fighting and 118 other veterans of military service.

The School of Engineering leads the five other degree-granting schools in enrollment, with a total of 2,168—slightly more than half the college's total enrollment. The enrollment in the other schools includes 743 in the School of Agriculture, 239 in the School of Design, 383 in the School of Education, 204 in the School of Forestry and 453 in the School of Textiles.

Chapel Hill Personalities:

'Mister D' Used To Take His Dates To The Rhine

EDWARD G. DANZIGER & HIS STORE
'. . . to make money without pleasure—it's no use!'

By SUSAN QUINN

Most people visit Danziger's Old World Restaurant to eat, to see their friends, or to show out of town guests that Chapel Hill does offer something a little out of the ordinary in the way of eating places. If they even notice the pictures and mottos which cover the high walls, they think of them only as additions to the "atmosphere" for which the establishment is noted.

These decorations, which include photos of everyone from European royalty to editors of The Daily Tar Heel, deserve more than such passing interest. They and the two guest books which have been filled since the store opened are positive proof of Edward G. Danziger's statement, "I like people. I like to talk to people. I like for people to talk to me."

A few of the pictures have been sent in by prominent men and women. Others are of celebrities who merely spoke or passed through here. But most of the faces which cover the walls are those which have been seen in the restaurant itself—some, day in and day out, others, such as Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Jan Peerce and Marian Anderson, only once or twice.

The honor of having one's picture hung in this gallery must be earned by outstanding work in some field—it is not accorded indiscriminately to those who habitually visit the shop.

To a lesser extent, this is also the policy follow with the guest books, which, the owner proudly asserts, contain bits of philosophy and praises of his restaurant in over 50 languages. In these democratic volumes, the words of such personages as the Pretender to the Austrian Throne, the Trapp Family Singers, Senator Glen Taylor and Archduke Otto of Austria may be found only a page away from clippings, crude sketches, poems and locks of hair put there by students and tourists from all over the world. Typical is the Dixiecrat who writes, "It's plain to see that Danziger's doesn't belong to a 'damyankee', because it certainly has a sense of hospitality," and the Duke rooter who admits, "We don't feel hostile to Chapel Hill when we can come to Danziger's."

Danziger believes that "The most important thing you can learn in life is language." Therefore, scattered among the photos are mottos in 14 tongues, consisting mostly of the first lines of well-known songs and sayings from the respective countries. Through the years, there has been a standing offer of 10 pounds of candy for anyone who could translate all 14, but only one man, a Carolina professor, has ever succeeded. Among those which stump even the most ambitious are the Russian, "The beauty of your home is not represented by the walls, but by the cooking," the Turkish, "He who doesn't appreciate coffee doesn't know how to live," and the Greek, "Recognize yourself!"

Driven from his home in Vienna by the Hitler regime, Danziger was brought to this country by the Quakers in 1936. After he had worked for a time in New York City, Carolina's Dean Carroll, a Quaker himself, convinced a group of Chapel Hill citizens that the "Candy King" deserved a chance to start a business of his own, and he was given his choice of Durham or Chapel Hill as places to establish a restaurant. As Danziger himself puts it, "I could have made more money in a big city, but only to make money without pleasure—it's no use!"

Using as his model a tavern at Gudesberg on the Rhine, where he used to take youthful girl friends to drink white wine, Danziger then set up his restaurant on Franklin St., specializing in good food and making friends. He is especially interested in the couples who frequent his shop. "We like," he says, "to see their romance blooming—sometimes ending, sometime reaching to the goal every coed has—matrimony." Girls are his favorite customers. He is firmly convinced that they are at least half again as good as men, and that no male ever, in the history of the world, did anything worthwhile unless there was a woman behind him.

Columbia Grad Frarey Named To Library Office

Carlyle James Frarey, a candidate for the Doctor of Library Science degree at Columbia University, has been appointed associate professor in the School of Library Science.

Prof. Frarey will teach courses chiefly in cataloging and classification.

The new staff member received his A B. degree at Oberlin College in Ohio, and his M. S. from the Columbia University School of Library Service.

He has also written several articles in professional books and journals.

On Liberalizing The Honor System

The bill to liberalize the Honor System comes before the student Legislature in an atmosphere that is not altogether conducive to logical debate and voting by the legislators.

In the two weeks since David Reid introduced his "leniency bill' the air has been charged with half-baked criticisms and defenses of the measure, springing largely from a lack of information about the workings of the Honor Councils. The Councils' deliberations have been, quite properly, secret, and apparently their practices have varied from year to year.

The protagonists of liberalizing the Honor System have had to face the Council members themselves and the South Building administration who insist that any change in the system will cause a break-down of it. The Councils plus the administration present pretty formidable odds; most student leaders have been unwilling to come to the bill's defense.

And so, soon there will be a vote. The Daily Tar Heel hopes the Legislature will pass the bill into law.

We urge the legislators to pass it because we agree with the premises, two of which read this way: "There has long been a need for rehabilitation and correction instead of mere punishment in first offense cheating cases . . ." and "The primary function of the educational institution is to teach, not punish."

Out of all the discussion of the Reid bill, those two premises emerge as basic and valid. Though some Honor Councils appear to have been, in years past, "tougher" than others, the general rule seems to have been "If you cheat, you get kicked out," without too much regard for extenuating circumstances, the age or intentions of the accused, or the flagrancy of his violation.

And that, we think, is no foundation on which to build a just edifice of student honor.

Gracious Living—XI

A stride toward Gracious Living in Chapel Hill is the newly laid black-top leading up to the student gate at Kenan Stadium. It is kind to the feet and kind as well to the figure on the bottom of the laundry bill.

In our evolving arid climate, though, we wonder if the next step isn't an extension of the asphalt up through the gate and under the stands. Plodding through billows of choking, yellow dust under the bleachers along toward two o'clock on Saturday afternoon, we tend to lose sight of friends and control of our tempers.

So a bow to whoever is responsible for the hard-surfacing that has already been done, and a request, in the name of Gracious Living, for a little bit more.

Carolina Front

Pep Rally On Capitol Steps Termed Odd

Louis Kraar

A SPECIAL group connected with Congress is considering what they term "a rather unusual request," according to UNC Cheermaster Jim Fountain.

The unusual request" is from Carolina. It's a request for a pep rally this Friday night on the steps of the nation's capitol building. Fountain told me yesterday that he expects word from the group at any moment.

WASHINGTON'S Hotel Harrington will be the scene of Carolina away from Chapel Hill this weekend during the Maryland festivities. Alumni in the area are staking Carolina students and their dates to a dance at the Hotel Shoreham Saturday night. And Fountain is even considering a UNC cheering section for Charlie Justice at the Redskin-Eagles game.

Last time the school hit the capitol city was back in '51. The old timers who were there tell me they took over the town.

This year's cheerers will have most of the conveniences of their Hill homes—including The Daily Tar Heel, which is to be flown up for Saturday morning.

RUEBEN LEONARD tells this one about Defense Secretary Charles Wilson: "He's the one that worked so hard on the automatic transmission so that he'd have one foot free to stick in his mouth."

Actually, Rueben says, Dr. Parrish of the BA School told that gimp to his class yesterday.

SOMEBODY'S RADIO up on Steele Dorm's top floor almost gave the band some competition during Tuesday's University Day ceremony. Just as the dignified ceremony got underway, the blare of the radio cut thru.

Later, when the group moved to Davie Poplar for "Hark The Sound," a squirrel in the top of the old tree attracted more attention than the ceremony.

It seems that many things compete for one's attention on a sunny, fall morning when they let classes out. I was glad to see so many professors out in the sun and under the trees near South Building. For awhile I though those fine spots were reserved for students between classes—or during them.

ENGLAND, always a proper country in manners, is now a state of controversy over a burning topic. The citizens of the Mother Country are disturbed over the number of "hips" that should precede "hurrah."

A quick (and quite unscientific) campus survey showed that most Carolina students think two "hips" are quite enough.

Their view was summed up by a Florida paper which said, "Besides making the cheer easier to shout, the use of two hips saves a second or so on each hurrah, promising an appreciable conservation of time when one looks at one's cheers by centuries as the British undoubtedly do."

IN SPORTS Illustrated this week Robert M. Hutchins, under whose presidency the University of Chicago abandoned football in 1939, has an article called "College Football Is An Infernal Nuisance."

This article is certain to start ripples of controversy from the Ivy League to Miami. In it, Hutchins declares that Chicago dropped football because the game "hampered the university's efforts to become the kind of institution it aspired to be, one devoted to education, research, and scholarship."

'This Could Be Very Interesting'

Twice Near The Top

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — The only man who was definitely promised the Presidency of the United States by Franklin Roosevelt, died in the apartment of his secretary the other day. He died a somewhat embittered man.

If the promise made to Justice Robert H. Jackson had been carried out, the history of the United States might have been far different. In the first place, Roosevelt would have run for only two terms, not four. Second, our conduct of the war might have been different. Finally, Thomas E. Dewey would not have been Governor of New York today.

And it will be a paradoxical twist of fate if Dewey now takes the Supreme Court seat of the man who would have been Governor of New York in his stead.

It was in May, 1937 that FDR called in Bob Jackson, than a crusading young Assistant Attorney General, and said: "Bob, I want you to sit in this chair."

The plan to put him in that chair was carefully worked out. Jackson, whose home was in Jamestown, N. Y., was to become Governor of New York in 1938. From this springboard and with New York's strong delegation behind him, plus the personal backing of FDR, he was to be elected President in 1940.

Jackson vs. Mellon

Jackson at that time was the most lustrous legal star in the New Deal crown. Also he was the least controversial. Chosen for the inconspicuous post of Counsel of Internal Revenue, he had picked up the Andrew W. Mellon income - tax case where a pittsburgh grand jury dropped it and waged a court battle against the former Secretary of the Treasury that ended with Mellon donating his paintings, plus the National Gallerys of art to the nation's capital. After that, Jackson turned round and brought an antitrust action against Mellon's aluminum corporation.

Paradoxically, the Mellons became more liberal in later years, while Jackson became more conservative. And as Bob Jackson died, the Mellon's aluminum company was sponsoring liberal commentator Edward R. Murrow while Dick Mellon was building the famed golden triangle for the city of Pittsburgh.

Bob Jackson was in on some of Roosevelt's most important economic strategy, such as the Holding Corporation Act, though he never felt the fusillade of big business opposition as did brain-trusters Ben Cohen and Tom Corcoran. Without opposition, he stepped from the Justice Department's tax division to the antitrust division to be Solicitor General.

But when Roosevelt proposed him as Governor of New York, he ran into his first road block—in the person of likable and at that time loyal Jim Farley. But Barley too wanted to be Governor of New York. And when Ernest Cuneo, who was doing Jackson's New York City scouting, talked to Farley, Jim replied:

"I've just come from the President and he tells me he wants me to be Governor."

Jackson's Opposition

Behind Jim Farley and against Bob Jackson was the full weight of Tammany; also Ed Flynn, boss of the Bronx, who, after Jackson's speech attacking monopolies, emitted a proverbial Bronx cheer. Exploded Flynn: "It's the worst amateur hour I've ever listened to."

And crustly old Cactus Jack Garner, then Vice President of the United States had this to say when he heard about plans for grooming Jackson: "We don't want any New Dealers heading the Democratic ticket in 1940."

So, as a compromise, Herbert Lehman ran again for Governor of New York. to be succeeded later by an up-and-coming young for the presidency . . .

Republican named Dewey, then under 40. And Roosevelt, with war engulfing Europe in 1939, decided to break all American historical precedents and run for a third term.

Bob Jackson, then not embittered, became Attorney General, and, in 1941, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. Before taking the court appointment, however, he asked Roosevelt specifically if it would interfere with another pledge FDR had made him, that he would become Chief Justice of the United States. FDR reaffirmed that pledge.

Roosevelt had promised Jackson the Chief Justiceship when plans to make him President fizzled; though later, when Charles Evans Hughes retired, Roosevelt yielded to friends and decided it was wiser to appoint Harlan Fiske Stone, Republican, an older man, as Chief Justice.

The understanding was, however, that Jackson would succeed Stone.

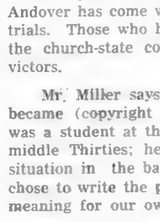
Second Disappointment

Jackson was at Nuremburg, Germany, in charge of the American prosecution of Nazi war criminals when when Chief Justice Stone died, and it was then that he began to get bitter. For Truman, not bound by FDR's pledges, appointed his old friend, Fred Vinson, not Jackson, as Chief Justice of the United States.

To Bob Jackson, who had taken the Nuremburg job not because he wanted to, but because he thought it his duty, this was the last straw. And being human, he appeared to become slightly off balance. Other men in high places in wartime have done the same.

It was at this time that he fired the uncalled for denunciation at his colleague, Justice Hugo Black, for sitting on a case in which Black partner of 20 years ago, Crampton Harris, was attorney.

The fact that Jackson criticized his colleague from across the Atlantic when he was in no position to follow Supreme Court proceedings, indicated to friends that something had happened. Some, of course, blamed Justice Felix Frankfurter, an enemy of Black's, for needling Jackson.



But, from that time on, Justice Jackson was never quite the same Bob Jackson his friends had known before. He was nervous and not in good health.

But what most people didn't realize is that twice Bob Jackson had been taken up on the mountain top and shown the two most important political awards possible to give a man; and each time those awards were snatched away. Considering the frailty of all human beings, it is understandable that Bob Jackson at times was human.

'The Crucible': Our Time's Most Important Theme

Ed Yoder

The Playmakers pepned last night Arthur Miller's epic of ghouls, gallows and hysteria in old Salem, Mass., "The Crucible."

Mr. Miller's play, based on historical events as they happened in the first decade of the 18th century, catches the theocratic Puritan colony in transition from a state when everybody saw the Devil in everyone else's closet to a saner state when those who questioned the existence of demons had prevailed. But unfortunately, the time of Mr. Miller's play came when fear and trembling were at a crucial point. Someone had to go on the rack for individualism; someone had to be hanged because he laughter at the children who had seen mystical visions of the Devil and had gone dancing naked through the forest at night.

The author of the play is concerned as much with the significance of the story as it treats a cosmic theme as he is in producing an effective work of art. He succeeds admirably in both. Mr. Miller calls the issue in his play "Diabolism." 'When tensions exist," he explains, 'fear is organized.. In Salem these people regarded themselves as holders of a light. If this light were extinguished, they believed, the world would end. When you have an ideology which feels itself so pure, it implies an extreme view of the world. Because they are white, opposition is completely black."

Obviously, the tension in Salem was caused by an insane fear on almost all parts of witchcraft, conjuring and voodoo. These machinations of the Devil threatened to rip stability away from the established religion. "Theology is a fortress," Deputy Governor Danforth (played excellently by Bill Trotman) tells the Salemites. "No crack in a fortress may be accounted small."

An honest farmer, John Proctor, is the individual who dares to say that something is amiss with Salem theology and to stand honestly for his conviction that the "witchcraft" is fraudulent. "He hardly ever mentioned God any more," Proctor says of the debased and confused preacher, Samuel Parris. People have become conerned more with the power of hell than of God, he holds, and 'I'm sick of hell." Proctor has a few allies in his cause, most of them coming from among the poor people of the outlying farms. But to a man, they become martyrs for their cause. They have a compensation. When Proctor goes out to be hanged, the dawn is an obvious symbol of a new awakening in Salem. From Andover has come word of revolt against the witch-trials. Those who have defied the "infallibility" of the church-state collaboration are the real moral victors.

Mr. Miller says he first got the idea for what became (copyright 1952) "Ths Crucible" when he was a student at the University of Michigan in the middle Thirties; he has always had the historical situation in the back of his mind, perhaps, but he chose to write the play when its theme had electric meaning for our own generation.

All of the characteristics of the Communist witchhunt are there: Ungrounded accusation, guilt by association and smear, the holiness of the accuser rather than the accused, (Proctor asks at one point, 'Is the accuser always holy now?"); the idea that the majority is always right and the minority must be made a scapegoat; "puppets" that turn up to haunt the accused 15 years after they have any significance.

To me, the most striking parallel of the Salem affair in our times is to the Chambers-Hiss case. Chambers, a ruthless Communist in the Thirties, now has sanctimoniously swung with the pendulum of the times all of the way to the extreme right. So his sins have been "forgiven" and he is assured that he is just as right now as he was wrong in the Thirties. For people like Chambers, there can be no middle and stable ground. I thought of this when Danforth told Proctor, "a person is either with this court or he is against it. There is no road between. This is no longer the dusty afternoon."

In Salem, if one confessed to having been influenced by the Devil, he was forgiven in much the same way. After this purgation of guilt, most of the 'confessors" became murderous informers on those who didn't believe in witches—certainly comparable to the "reformed" Communists who have become unscrupulous accusers in congressional hearings. Someone has called this genus "wandering minstrels"—and they are described in 'The Crucible' as 'little crazy children (who) are jangling keys to the kingdom."

The Playmakers do a wonderful job of interpretation in "The Crucible." The play's theme is perhaps the most important theme of our time. I hope enough persons are concerned to pack the theatre for a row of nights.

YOU Said It

On Mr. Yoder And 'Slicking Down'

Editor:

In a well written and properly nostalgic article on the editorial page of DTH, Oct. 12, '54, Mr. Yoder has bemoaned the supposed trend toward inflexibility in the overall form of design of the compus. In view of the unearthed remarks of on Thomas Wolfe, and the remarks of the "strong band" of those who feel that asphalt, bricks and grass on dusty fields is a "new trend" that has as its end a "piecemeal effort to slick down the campus", I can only conclude that every addition or improvement to the landscaping or the buildings since 1793 has been guilty of "slicking down" the campus, and incroaching further on its rustic simplictiy. After the first building expanded into many, what was more natural than for students to walk from building to building? This continuous procession finally produced a dust free method of traversing the campus, the ribbons of brick also slick down the campus, than we will have to bear with fortitude such undeniably "Dukish" consequences.

Rustic expanses of sand and oaks indeed! I too am a great lover of nature, and enjoy tramping the hinterland, savoring the tang of high mountain air or the gentle fragrance of a quiet valley, complete with oaks and sand; but I do not yearn for the days when the wilderness blew in your front door, and portions of it had to be poured from your shoes. Has Mr. Yoder visited Washington, D.C.? No doubt he walks with sadness along The Mall, yearning for the sand and oaks or whatever it was that existed in its primitive beauty before its degeneration into foppishness. Stroll along the basin, while the cherry trees are in bloom, and tell me that they should be sent back to Japan because they are out of place. I can imagine Mr. Yoder and Company in the fifth century B.C., walking through the Acropolis in Athens, gazing with dismay at the formal elegance of the Parthenon, rising to corrupt the rustic beauty of the rugged countryside.

If we seriously consider his conclusion, that the virtue our campus has is enough; can you imagine returning to Chapel Hill 50 years from today? We could imagine we are in school again, because nothing would have changed. A few dormitories added (we hope!) but nothing like Old Wells or sundials or grass flowers or bushes; no new brick walks, or ugly asphalt parking lots. I much prefer to imagine the University expanding in every way. Perhaps daringly modern buildings will contrast and blend with the existing architectural forms. I wouldn't want the campus to look like a formal garden, but grass and a few flowers and a statue here and there don't exactly deface the campus. I will expect the University to mirror the improvements of the next 50 years as it has reflected the progress of the past. The addition of the electric light and the automobile and asphalt and brick walks has not altered the enigmatic charm of the campus. It possessed its virtue of unity within variety in Wolfe's day, and it still posses it in ours.

I wonder if Hinton James would exchange the many improvements the campus has undergone for a chance to tread the same dusty paths he did 160 years ago. I perfer to think that the progress and advance of the future would please him greatly. One does hope that greater additions and evidence of our generations presence will develop than sundials and TV aerials, but to say that our campus has attained the zenith of its physical virtue, and to label every change as a "new trend" is to silence the voice and shackle the hand of the students and builders of the future.

And Our Mistakes

Editor:

Just a line to correct two inaccuracies in today's paper: The otherwise very fine editorial, "University Day" stated that Robert E. Lee was born on this day in 1807. As most Southerners know, he was born on January 19, now a legal holiday throughout the South . . .

In another field, the story on the garbage houses referred to Brevitt Hook as the district health officer. Unless there has been a recent change. Dr. O. D. Garvin holds that post; presumably Mr. Hook is one of the district sanitarians.

C. F. McRae

(We bow to Mr. McRae's facts. In the case of the editor, a Tar Heel born and bred, it's an embarrassed bow for missing General Lee's birth date by almost eight months.—Editor.)

Carolina Seeks First Win Over Terps Since Justice Era

Over The Hill

By FRED BABSON

It was another warm day. You knew the weather man would say the humidity was high, because your shirt had lost its starchy look and clung damply to your shoulders.

A young man sauntered lazily across Navy Field. It was nearing four o'clock, and the football team would arrive shortly for their daily practice. Four men, dressed in knicker-type athletic pants, jackets, and wearing baseball caps, stood on the opposite side of the field from where the young man had entered. He strolled toward them.

The four men were casually chatting as he approached: They took no special note of the newcomer, acknowledging his presence with cursory glances.

"Hello, coach," the young man said, addressing the shorter of the foursome, a powerfully-built man who was obviously an ex-athlete. The coach returned the greeting.

The young man was a sports writer whose assignment was to cover football practice. He went through this routine every day. Eventually it became boring—same questions to ask the coaches, same answers from them.

Striving for a better technique, the reporter injected what he intended to be a moderate amount of enthusiasm into his question. "Have you decided on any definite line up for Saturday, coach?"

"Not yet. Know better by Thursday," replied the coach.

"Will Maultsby be ready to go Saturday?" the lad inquired.

"Don't know for sure. Sure could use him though," the coach answered, watching the cloud formations.

The conversation lagged, except for occasional remarks among the four coaches. "Did you see 'Gone With the Wind?', the coach asked the young man, not wanting to leave him out of the discussion.

"I saw it last Summer," was the reply. "But I don't think it's worth paying another 75 cents to see."

The coach grunted, still watching the cloud formations as if analyzing the answer.

Conversation lagged again. Players were beginning to trickle onto the field in small groups or one at a time, attired in their full football regalia.

"Planning on scrimmaging today?" the sports writer asked.

"No."

"What are you going to work on today, coach?" querried the young man.

"Offense and defense."

All of the players had arrived, and the coaches moved off to take direction of their charges. The interview had ended. The young man lingered for a moment, scrutinizing the players as if they were horses, and he, a good judge of horse flesh. Then he turned and left the same way he had come, wondering what he was going to write a story on.

Maryland fever is still climbing. The ticket office announces that 2,000 tickets have been sold for the UNC-Maryland game Saturday. Five hundred students have made reservations for the special train leaving Friday afternoon, but seats are still available. The Carolina request for permission to hold a pep rally on the Capitol steps is being studied by a Congressional Committee. Most of the students will be housed in the Harrington and Shoreham Hotels. The team will stay at the Dupont Plaza more removed from the din and roar of the city.

Maryland Coach Jim Tatum says that both the Tar Heels and the Terps have been playing "in tough luck" this season. About Carolina, he says, "If they start clicking they might beat any team in the country." Tatum blames his boys' poor showing thus far on a lack of confidence. "They're playing too tight," he explains.

Meanwhile, things are looking up in the Tar Heel camp. The locals were put through a heavy scrimmage Tuesday, and people are still talking about it. Coach Barclay led the boys into Kenan Stadium and closed the gates to outsiders. The varsity then took the field against the freshman team, and proceeded to push the highly-touted frosh all over the field. The blocking and tackling was termed "vicious." Marshall Newman is said to have blocked like a wild man for Len Bullock on passing plays. Star freshman end Buddy Payne was put out of commission for two weeks.

It is reported that Barclay has never been so pleased as he was after the Tuesday practice session. He continues to hold secret practices all week. There may be a surprise or two in store for Maryland Saturday.

Tar Babies Tackle Wake Forest Friday

Carolina frosh will be after their second victory in as many starts when they meet the Wake Forest Deaclets in Wilson, Friday night.

Led by Gerge "Buddy" Sasser, sensational quarterback, the locals are slight favorites. Sasser stole the show in the season opener against the University of South Carolina with touchdown romps of 60 and 23 yards. In addition, Sasser called, what has been termed a perfect game.

The forward wall will be minus Buddy Payne, right end, who was injured in practice against the varsity Tuesday.

Another star, though a less publicized one, of the South Carolina affray was Guard Jack Lineberger. Lineberger has been labeled by Line Coach Bill Kuhn as a potential All-America.

After the Wake Forest tilt, the frosh will have three remaining games: Virginia at Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 22; Maryland here on Nov. 5, and Duke at Durham, Nov. 25.

Bud Payne Frosh Mainstay At End

By BOB DILLIARD

Buddy Payne, a pre-med student, who plays defense like a wounded bear, is the second in the series of freshman profiles.

Buddy, who is 18 years old and stands 6'2", plays end for the Carolina Tar Babies. As rugged a competitor on offense as he is on defense, Buddy hails from Norfolk, Virginia. His playing weight of 195 pounds makes him no one to be toyed with on the gridiron.

While in high school, he was named to the Virginia All-State football team for two successive years, once named the the All-State basketball team. He was captain of both team sports. In addition to these outstanding accomplishments, Buddy played out field for the baseball team for three years.

He names all sports as his hobbies, and is strictly a classical and popular man when it comes to music. Hillbilly and mountain musis are on his list of dislikes.

Pack Preps For Florida State

RALEIGH, Oct. 13 (AP)—Coach Earle Edwards gave his North Carolina State Wolfpack another ong session today on defense.

He concentrated on stopping Florida State's highly-regarded aerial attack as work was stepped up for Saturday night's home opener in Riddick Stadium.

Edwards warned his defensive halfbacks that Florida State's two quarterbacks, Harry Massey and Len Swantic, are two of the best passers the Wolfpack will face this season. N. C. State's defensive line worked on rushing the passer while the halfbacks drilled on pass coverage.

Three players were on the sidelines today with injuries. Tackle John Bagonis and halfback Ted Kilyk will not be able to play Saturday night. Halfback John Zubaty is expected to see some action.

Fish & Hunt Business Booms

By DAN WALLACE

"More hunting and fishing licenses have been sold here this year than ever before," Bill Walston, license agent and sports department manager of Huggins Hardware company, said yesterday.

Large sales of licenses are expected this fall, and to date, Walston said, between 800-900 have already been sold this year. This amount already exceeds the total number of licenses sold last year.

The large upsurge in the fishermen's ranks this past year has probably been the biggest factor in the increased sales.

"The reason for this," Walston said, "is probably due to the advent of the spinning reel which has just caught on in the United States this past year. It has been used in Europe for about 30 years."

This type of reel is an ingenius device which allows a fishing lure to be snapped through the air for a great distance using but a slight motion of the wrist on the pole.

Grinning, Walston demonstrated by picking up a pole with a spinning reel attached, and by twitching it slightly sent a weighted cork sailing across the store to bang into some pots and pans.

Walston, a sportsman himself, said that the Chapel Hill area abounds with good fishing and small game hunting.

Large-mouth bass, on which there is no closed season, are most consistently caught in the University Lake. He said that many outsiders from a surrounding 100 mile area come here to fish. The size limit for bass is 12 inches and the creel limit is eight.

Dove hunting, which has been very good this year, has a split season from Sept. 10-Oct. 29 and from Dec. 10-29. The latter half is the better season here, he said.

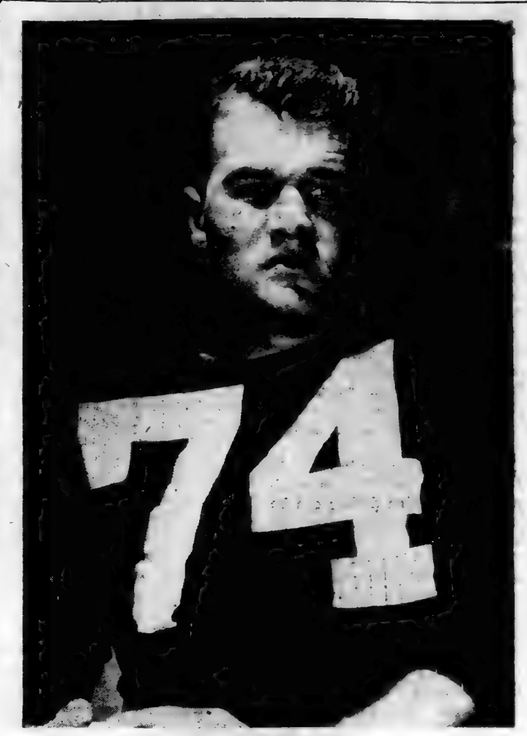
Team Spirit Up; First Since NCS

Barclay Still Shifting Lineup In Secret Drills



Saturday afternoon, when the Carolina football team takes the field at College Park against the University of Maryland, the Tar Heels will be looking for their first win over the Terps since 1948, when Charlie Justice and company wrecked the Maryland eleven, 49-20.

Since then the Tar Heels have been on the lower end of the score twice, losing in 1951 and 1953, after battling the Old Liners to a scoreless deadlock in 1950. In the entire series, dating back to 1899 when Carolina won a 6-0 decision, the Tar Heels have won 13 times, losing six and tying once.

For the first time since the N. C. State game the Tar Heels are in top spirit. Tuesday afternoon they looked exceptionally good in a rough scrimmage with the freshmen. It was during that scrimmage that frosh end Buddy Payne suffered an injury to his ankle which may keep him out of action for two weeks.

Yesterday Coach George Barclay continued to experiment with his defense, hoping to stop the offensive minded Maryland eleven. Behind closed gates of Kenan Stadium the gridders looked sharp and showed quite a bit of hustle and spirit.

Barclay continued to run Len Bullock at quarterback, Larry McMullen and Connie Gravitte at the halves and Marshall Newman at fullback on the first team. However, the Carolina mentor would not say that this combination would start the Maryland game. "I should know more about the starting line-up Thursday (today)" he said.

JIMMY "HOOT" NEVILLE, 5'9", 190-pound guard, who was outstanding on defense for the Tar Heels against Georgia last Saturday. Neville's sterling performance against the Bulldogs is expected to merit him a starting berth against Maryland.

Southwest Is Tops In Punts

NEW YORK, Oct. 13 (AP)—The five best punting teams in major college football are in the Southwest-Arkansas, Southern Methodist, New Mexico, Texas Christian and Kansas State-NCAA Service Bureau figures showed today.

These are the only teams in the country averaging 40 yards a kick or better, and for persons not especially close students of football statistics, the grouping of these teams may not seem unusual.

College TV Outline Is Made

Potential TV Audience Is 35-40 Million

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Twelve million people live in metropolitan areas where educational TV stations are now operating; 10 million more live in primary service areas of nine other stations now under construction; adding the population of areas soon to be served by 13 stations where construction will soon begin, a conservative estimate places the potential educational television audience within the near future at 35 to 40 million people.

Behind this progress in the field of educational television, a minimum of 25 million dollars can be accounted for in support for the movement.

These facts highlight a special report submitted this week to the Federal Communications Commission by the Joint Committee on Educational Television, summarizing progress during the slightly more than two years since the FCC reserved 242 television channels for non-commercial educational use. Subsequent to issuance of the Sixth Report and Order of June 2, 1952, the Commission has reserved an additional 10 channels for education.

Dr. David D. Henry, Executive Vice Chancellor of New York University and Chairman of JCET, in releasing details of the report, explained: "The Joint Committee seeks to represent the special needs of education in the newest and most powerful of the mass media, and encourages educators to meet theri responsibilities in regard to it.

"Ten communities now have educational television stations in operation: Houston; Los Angeles; East Lansing, Mich.; Pittsburgh; Madison, Wis.; San Francisco; Cincinnati; St. Louis; Ames, Ia.; and Columbia, Mo. Two of these, Ames and Columbia, operate on commercial licenses. KTHE in Los Angeles, licensed to the University of Southern California ... recenlty was granted special temporary authority to remain silent pending the securing of additional funds to operate the station. Nine other communities already have educational television stations under construction which will be in operation soon: Chapel Hill, N. C.; Boston; Columbus, Ohio; Champaign-Urbana, Ill.; Detroit; Seattle; Oklahoma City and Tulsa; and Munford. Ala.

"Twelve communities have made substantial progress in their plans to build stations ... indications are that these communities will be able to proceed with construction tn the near future: Memphis; Chicago; New Orleans; Athens, Ga.; Atlanta; Denver; Philadelphia; Cleveland; Miami; Toledo, Ohio; Nashville; Brimingham, Ala.; Educational forces in 32 communities have been working diligently to establish stations with local committees at work from San Diego to New York City and Minneapolis to Tallahassee."

Extensive Progress

In announcing the filing of the report, Ralph Steetle, JCET's Executive Director, emphasized the extensive degree of progress made in so short a time in light of the pressure of other educational needs throughout the country, as well as the challenge of arousing broad community support and financial backing for activation of the educational channels.

The report continues: "It is important to note that of the 252 channels reserved for education, almost ⅔ are in communities with population of less than 200,000. A considerable number of these are in communities having population of less than 50,000. It should also be kept in mind that of the 252 educational channels ... 168 are UHF. ... There is genuine concern in many communities as to the outlook for UHF and his has militated in no small way against the development of educational television in these communities. These same factors have affected the progress of commercial as well as educational television."

Highlights

Highlights of support given by educators to educational television include; appearance of 71 witnesses speaking for American education at hte 1949-50 television hearings; the filing of official statements in support of TV with the Commission in 1951 by 838 educational institutions, school systems and public service agencies; sponsorship by the Joint Committee along with the National Citizens Committee for Educational Television of the first National Conference on Educational Television in Washington, D. C. in May of 1953, attended by more than 200 delegates from all parts of the country; inclusion of sessions on ETV at the annual conventions of many important national educational organizations.

"Thirty-two states have appointed state commissions, committees or study gropus to secure information and make recommendations regarding the use of educational channels," the report notes. "... All these states plus Mississippi and West Virginia have held one or more state meetings to secure information and expert opinion on the problems of building stations. Fourteen of these conferences have been called by governors.

Financial Support

"Educational television has received financial support from a variety of sources during the past two years. It is impossible to give a complete account herein of all money contributed and pledged, but documentary evidence at hand tells a partial story which is impressive. Legislatures and other governmental agencies have provided around five million to finance studies and help build educational television stations. School budgets account for more than two million. Commercial broadcasters in a large number of communities have contributed cash and made offers of equipment representing a total value of more than three and a half million. Numerous foundations, large and small, have pledged by business interests in general excluding the broadcasting industry and we get a total figure of about 25 million. This does not take into account many of the contributions made by religious, charitable and public welfare organizations as well as individual donations."

"In light of the extensive support and progress thus indicated," Dr. Henry said, "the Joint Committee on Educational Television, representing the interest of educators through out the country in educational television before the Federal Communications Commissions, submits this testimony as substantial evidence to justify the position the Commission took in 1952 by reserving television channels for non-commercial, educational use."

The report concludes: "It is not unreasonable to predict that by early 1955 we will have 17 educational stations on the air with their programs regularly available to about 25 million people; and by the end of 1955, about 30 such stations will be beaming signals to areas with a population of around 40 million residing in 18 states. We believe this will be no small achievement in a period of only three or possibly four years from the time of the adoption of the Sixth Report and Order by the Federal Communications Commission."

Hunter Traces Drama History

Kermit Hunter traced the development of the outdoor drama for the Lazy Literates Committee of the YWCA on Tuesday.

He reviewed the work done by McKye and Paul Green, emphasizing the part that Virginia and North Carolina have played in reviving the outdoor dramas by state support.

Hunter pointed out the economic attractions of the outdoor drama as a boost to the tourist trade and also as a perpetuating link in the local history of the state.

He also spoke of the importance of considering the drama as an art rather than solely as a means for entertainment and profit.

Eisenhower May Speak Tonight To Carolina Pep Rally In Washington

Head Cheerleader Jim Fountain Slates Rally At Foot Of Washington Monument

According to Head Cheerleader Jim Fountain, Ike "will try" to attend the rally, staged on the eve of the Carolina-Maryland football game tomorrow.

Fountain has slated the pep rally for the ampitheater at the base of the Washington Monument. Time is 10:30 p.m.

A special Seaboard train will arrive at Washington's Union Station at 9:30, and students will follow the UNC band and cheerleaders to the Monument.

Director of Athletics Chuck Erickson and Carolina football great Charlie "Choo-Choo" Justice will speak at the rally.

Fountain said yesterday that he had invited Life and Time magazine photographers to attend the rally, and that Consolidated University President Gordon Gray, who is presently in Washington to address the District of Columbia alumni group, may speak.

Yesterday, Washington radio stations were broadcasting on-the-hour announcements of the rally, urging Capital citizens to attend.

All of Carolina's requested 2,000 tickets to the Maryland tilt were sold out yesterday. However, Fountain said students may purchase tickets at the gate in College Park. "There's plenty left for the game," he said.

Train tickets will be sold up until time for busses to leave Graham Memorial this afternoon. The round-trip tickets, selling for $11.75 (price includes bus fare from Chapel Hill to Raleigh's train station and back, and tax), are good for a ride to Washington at 4 o'clock this afternoon, and a ride back at 12:45 a.m. Sunday.

Fountain said he wanted students who were traveling to Washington in automobiles to "be sure to be at the rally."

The head cheerleader said he was investigating possibilities of UNC's having a cheering section at the Redskins game Sunday afternoon.

"We want to get UNC cheerleaders to lead 'All the way, Choo-Choo just one more time," Fountain said.

Manning Hall Schedules Nov. 6 As UNC Law Day

By HAL HENDERSON

November 6 is named Law Day at the University by recent announcement of Bob Byrd, president of the Law School Association at Manning Hall.

Principally a student enterprise, November 6 and 7 will be a time of celebration and participation in legal discussion and activities by members of the Law School Association and the Law Alumni Association.

Bob Byrd, as president of the Law School Association, will sponsor Law Day. Dick Thigpen Jr., head of the Social Committee of the Association, will act as Byrd's appointed chairman in directing the Law Day activities.

Bob Byrd, the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Byrd of Morganton, received his A.B. degree in history at Berea College, Berea, Ky., in 1952. He is now a third year law student here; he is a member of Phi Alpha Delta Law Fraternity, the Young Democrats Club, the North Carolina Law Review, and member ex officio of the Board of Directors of the Law Alumni Association.

Dick Thigpen Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Thigpen Sr, of Charlotte, received his A.B. degree in prelaw at Duke University in 1951. At this time he is a second year University law student and a member of Delta Theta Phi Law Fraternity.

Byrd's announcement of Law Day comprises the following events:

On Friday, November 5, at 7 p. m. the North Carolina Law Review Committee, of the Law Alumni Association, will hold the Law Review Editors' Dinner. Paul A. Johnston, staff member of the University Institute of Government, is chairman of the Law Review Committee. Five hundred alumni, some of 33 years membership, are invited.

The third annual meeting of the Law Alumni Association will be held on Saturday morning, November 6, at 10 o'clock in the courtroom of Manning Hall. At the same time there will be a regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association.

At the football game in which UNC will vie with USC at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, November 6, members of the Law School Association attired with Hamburg hats and canes will sit with the alumni in a reserved block of seats in Kenan Stadium. The student card stunt section will salute the law students and alumni.

Following the game a reception with refreshments will be held in the main library of Manning Hall for all law students and alumni.

The Barrister's Ball will be held in the Washington-Duke Crystal Ballroom in Durham on Saturday night, November 6. All law students and alumni are invited. Either stag or couple tickets can be obtained at $.75 per ticket.

The Law School Association is comprised of the entire student body of the Law School. Its activities are carried on through a legislature composed of elected representatives, various committees appointed by the president of the Association and an elected Law School Honor Court. Besides its main function of student government, the Law School Association promotes faculty-student relationships, guest speakers, Court competition and training, law school socials, an annual orientation program for incoming students and various other services.

Members of the Law School Association who maintain a "B" academic average may have their legal research writing published in the North Carolina Law Review, the quarterly publication of the University Press, currently edited by Peter Kalogridis. John V. Hunter, Naomi Morris, and Joseph G. Dail Jr., are associate editors.

Other administrative heads of the Association are Louis Bledsoe Jr., chief justice of the honor council; J. Albert House Jr., vice-president; Robert G. Windsor, secretary; and Jule A. Rousseau, treasurer.

The general aim of the Law Alumni Association is to assist contacts and interest among faculty, students and alumni and to implement their mutual desire for the best possible legal education at the University.

The Association endeavors to sustain among the alumni high ethical principles in the practice of law, and otherwise to benefit the profession. The person is eligible for membership who is of good moral character and who is either an alumnus of the University Law School or a lawyer who is an alumnus of the University. Membership is not confined to those currently practicing law.

Among the Alumni Association's specific objectives are the provision of scholarships to law students, assistance to the North Carolina Law Review through suggestions and recommendations, guidance and placement of students, advice on relationships between the School, its students and the organized Bar, recognition of outstanding achievement among students and alumni and financial support of the Tar Heel Barrister.

Officers of the Alumni Association who are serving during the calendar year of 1954 are: T. A. Uzzell Jr., of the Asheville Bar, president; Isaac D. Thorp, of the Rocky Mount Bar, first vice-president; Luther T. Hartsell Jr., of the Concord Bar, second vice-president; and William B. Aycock, of the University law faculty, secretary-treasurer.

The following directors were elected for three-year terms effective January 1, 1954: Junius G. Adams Jr., William A. Dees Jr., Julian R. Allsbrook, George C. Hampton Jr., Thomas H. Leath, Howard E. Manning, H. L. Riddle Jr, Judge Susie Sharp, Marshall T. Spears Jr., J. Kenyon and J. Kenyon Wilson Jr.

Templeton & Piano Make Hit

By RUTH DALTON

The cheers of the audience describe better than words the excellent performance last night of Alec Templeton before a packed Memorial Hall crowd.

Templeton had complete control not only of his keyboard but of the audience as well throughout his entire varied program which ranged from Bach to bop.

By the end of his concert, he had the entire hall shaking as students and townspeople applauded, cheered and stomped their feet for more of the magnificient rhythm and melody which he had been giving them during the entire evening.

The high spot of the first classical portion of his program was the "Ballade" by Debussy. This was performed with exceptional brilliance and feeling. Closely rivaling it was Beethoven's "Sonata in F sharp major, Opus 78."

As Templeton moved into his own improvisiations and compositions, however, the audience really came alive and lived each number with him. By the end of the program, when he was singing and playing, it was hard to tell who was having the better time, the audience or Templeton.

The audience was definitely not satisfied even after five encores which were such numbers as "Marie," "Name, Age, Height and Size" and "Mary Had A Little Lamb."

After the concert, Templeton was entertained with a reception in Graham Memorial where he enjoyed his favorite drink—soda water and lemon—strictly non-alcoholic.

Biologists Meet Today

The Southeastern Section of the Society for Experimental Biology and Medicine will meet here today.

Meeting for the first time in Chapel Hill, the southeastern section includes members from the 2 Carolinas, Virginia, the Oak Ridge and Knoxville areas of Tennessee and portions of Georgia and Florida .

Some 25 scientific papers will be given in sectional meetings of the day-long meeting.

Dr. John H. Ferguson and Dr. F. W. Ellis of the UNC School of Medicine are in charge of arrangements for the sessions which will be open to all interested persons.

A short business meeting will open the program at 3:90 a. m. The participants will be separated into two scientific session groups for the remainder of the morning. The two groups will be "Biochemistry and Physiology," led by Dr. Cyril L. Comar, Oak Ridge, and "Experimental Clinical Medicine," led by Dr. H. D. Bruner, professor of physiology, Emory University.

A dinner meeting will be held at 6:30 p. m., as the final event of the day.

Marionettes Here In Feb.

The Salzburg Marionette Theatre, described by Chapel Hill Concert Series Secretary Jim Wallace as "undoubtedly the world's best," will perform here Feb. 15, 1955.

The theatre is one of four productions coming here in the Concert Series. The season will start next Wednesday night, when the American Chamber Orchestra will perform in Memorial Hall.

Student tickets, now on sale, cost $5, and will admit music lovers to the Chamber Orchestra and marionette shows, as well as performances by famed tenor Jan Peerce (April 15, 1955) and pianist Walter Gieseking (March 31, 1955).

Secretary Wallace said dorms and Greek letter societies are taking part in ticket-selling contests. Men's dorm selling most tickets will receive a ping-pong table or of theater tickets; womens' dorm, two card tables, and sorority, block of theater tickets.

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" is the title for the marionettes' presentation here.

Student Life Program Set For Women

An in-service training program for dormitory hostesses, sorority housemothers, graduate counselors and the staff of the Dean of Women's Office is being sponsored again this year by the Office of the Dean of Women.

Also invited are advisors to the sororities, the staff of the YWCA and other interested persons who work in the general area of student life.

The program, which began on Oct. 12, and will run through Dec. 2, consists of five addresses by authorities on such fields of student counseling as psychiatric, academic and religious guidance.

The meetings will be held in the small auditorium in Carroll Hall at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, with the exception of the Dec. 2 meeting, which will be held in room 106 of Hanes Hall.

Young Demos Slate Rally

Some 800 persons are expected to attend the Young Democrats Sixth District rally to be held at the Carrboro High School on Oct. 29.

The rally will feature an old-fashioned barbecue and brunswick stew supper at a $1 a plate with square dancing after the speakers. Prominent Democrats attending will be Congressional Representative Carl Durham and John Jordan, state YDC president. All the Sixth District county candidates will be invited as well as other party representatives.

Northwestern Man Expected To Recover

EVANSTON, ILL. — Northwestern University officials said yesterday that they look forward to the rapid and complete recovery of a Charlotte, N. C., youth accidentally wounded here on Thursday, Oct. 7.

The condition of Crayton E. Rowe Jr., 22, of 1827 Club Road, was described by Evanston Hospital physicians as satisfactory.

Rowe was wounded, Evanston police said, by an officer who mistook him for a fleeing bandit. The policeman was suspended following the shooting.

Rowe was graduated from the University of Georgia, Athens, Ga., in 1953, a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He received a Northwestern scholarship to do graduate study in the University's speech school, which he entered in September.

At Chapel Hill Baptist Church:

Religious Drama Organized

A community religious drama group, believed to be the first of its kind on the East Coast, will open its season here on October 24 in the Chapel Hill Baptist Church.

The plan is to produce religious plays to be presented in the Baptist Church and in other churches in this region.

Under the sponsorship of the Chapel Hill Baptist Church and with the enthusiastic support of its pastor, Dr. Samuel T. Habel, a company of experienced actors is now in rehearsals and is to be known as the Pulpit Players.

It is directed by Mrs. Louise Lamont, who is well known to theater goers in North Carolina.

John W. Parker of the Playmaker staff is chairman of the Religious Drama Committee and heads the entire project.

The Pulpit Players open the season with Christopher Fry's religious festival drama, "The Boy With A Cart."

Requests have been received from churches in other communities of the state for performances as soon as they can be arranged. Although sponsored by the Chapel Hill Baptist Church, the players are chosen without regard to church affiliation and the movement is wholly non-denominational.

The employment of drama as a medium of religious teaching and worship "is not new," Director Lamont pointed out. "Man has always recognized art as a strong ally of religion. He expresses his religious feelings in music, his aspirations in the architecture of his churches and his devotion in painting and sculpture.

"Among primitive peoples the drama, though crude in form, has been effectively used to communicate spiritual truths beyond the power of words to express, and in Europe from the 10th to the 16th century the stories of the worshippers for the instruction Bible were presented to Christian worshipers for this instruction of those who could not read and for the greater enlightenment of all. From time to time during the intervening centuries the drama has been used in the churches, but its appearance there has been sporadic rather than sustained.

"The Boy With A Cart" was first produced at village festivals in England in 1937 and was published in 1939. It is perhaps not the best of Fry's work in this genre, being one of his earliest, but it is fresh and vibrant with poetic imagination and is in many ways suitable for the initial performance of the Pulpit Players. The setting is 10th-century England, and the characters are simple village people.

Main Theme

The main theme, the providence of God working through nature and through men of faith, is presented formally through a chorus of the people of South England.

Mrs. Lamont plans to use a narrator for these lines rather than the chorus, since touring a larger cast is impossible. Passages of a humorous character and those that seem antagonistic to the main theme are written in prose, but most of the play is verse.

The mood is reverent, with something more than touch of fantasy and wonder. The humor is enough to leaven the moral and theological elements, but not enough to clash with the religious mood. Fry's religion is not solemn but cheerful, and even almost gay in the quality of the words by which it is expressed. The mean- is conveyed more through the quality of the language than through the plot, and the language is richly poetic. It may be said to be a modern version of the medieval miracle play, but it is in no sense an imitation.

The dominant verse form is loose blank verse, interspersed with lines ending, as if by accident, with rhyme or assonance. The influence of T. S. Eliot is apparent in this play, particularly in the initial scene, where the chorus of the people of south England corresponds to Eliot's chorus of the Women of Canterbury.

The fame of Christopher Fry would seem to be enough to attract many to the performance of "The Boy With A Cart." Three of his comedies have been successful: "A Phoenix Too Frequent," "The Lady's Not For Burning" and "Venus Observed." Some have thought, however, that his finest play is "The Firstborn," a tragedy based on the early life Moses.

UNC Is Among Sponsors:

First Science Fair Starts Off Today

The first Science Fair Work Conference to be held in the North Carolina - South Carolina-Vriginia region will get underway here this morning.

Around 150 conferees, including high school and college teachers of science and mathematics, as well as educational administrators and industrial representatives, are expected to register for the two-day event.

Registration will begin at 8:30 a.m. in Venable aHll, followed by a general assembly at 10 o'clock when the conference co-chairmen, Dr. Arthur Roe, head of the UNC Chemistry Department, and Dewey E. Large, Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies, will explain objective of the meeting.

After a welcome by Chancellor Robert B. House, the conferees will hear Dr. Ralph T. Overman, chairman, Oak Ridge Special Training Division, on "Opportunities in Science."

Other main morning speakers will be Keith C. Johnson, Washington, D. C., Science Supervisor in the Public Schools, District of Columbia, on "The Educational Implications of Science Fairs," Department of Public Instruction, and Henry A. Shannon, State Department of Public Instruction.

The afternoon will be given over to panel discussions and work committees on various phases of science fair operation. Panel members will include Charles G. Wilder, chairman, Oak Ridge Exhibits Division; Dr. Wilmer M. Jenkins, UNC School of Education; H Felix Sanders, Martinsville, Va., teacher; Donald B. Anderson, N. C. State College, and John A. Yarbrough, Raleigh, secretary, N. C. Academy of Science.

Featured speaker at tonight's dinner session will be Dr. Edward R. Kane, director of research, Du Pont Laboratories, Kinston, who will discuss "Industry Looks at the Teaching of Science." He will be introduced by Chancellor House.

The Saturday program will continue the work groups with a breakdown into regional groups, by states, in order to begin plans for district science fairs to be held next spring.

The conference was arranged jointly by the University, the North Carolina Academy of Science and the Oak Ridge Institute for Nuclear Studies. The latter group is underwriting a substantial portion of the conference expenses by furnishing speakers from distant parts of the country.

'No Comment' In The Classroom

We felt disappointment, but not surprise, as we withdrew from classes yesterday without hearing a single professor mention the recurrence of the Owen Lattimore case to the newspaper headlines this morning. Not that we claim ubiquity; comments may have come forth in a class we missed.

But somehow even that seems a slender chance. From both what we might call an idealistic and a practical standpoint, college professors should have deep concern in the case. In the person of Owen Lattimore of Johns Hopkins, the academic profession is being mocked, burned in effigy, and subjected to double jeopardy.

Surely teachers have feelings. Why do they hesitate to speak them? Why are their voices so often silent on vital issues?

Kennel Dogs & Air Force Wings

With barely more than two weeks remaining before the November 2 accounting at the polls, no one can blame Secretary of Defense Wilson for scurrying about to make amends for comparing kennel dogs to unemployed workers. There must have been black pictures in GOP minds for the past couple of days, pictures of union members stepping up to the voting machines, mumbling "kennel dog, huh?" and yanking the Democratic lever.

Mr. Wilson, we suppose, may succeed in convincing some voters that his remark was "distorted by left wing opponents." But how is he going to explain the "stop-and-start" defense program that has evolved under his administration of the Department of Defense? His indiscreet political utterances quite aside, The Daily Tar Heel believes this is the real basis for a critique of Charles E. Wilson.

With disregard for the warnings of our military experts, America's defense has been lowered in these two ways under Mr. Wilson:

1. A lowering of Air Force goals from 143 to 137 wings, including 1,000 planes, some of them combat aircraft, a cut-back in Air Force development of two years.

2. A slice in the Army from 19 to 17 divisions, over the objections of Army Chief of Staff Ridgeway, Naval Chief Admiral Carney and NATO Chief General Gruenther.

And both of these cuts were made in the name of a balanced budget and with the express recommendation of Mr. Wilson.

So whether or not what's good for General Motors is good for the country and unemployed workers are kennel dogs sitting on their haunches and yelping, the voting public has here an assessment of Charles E. Wilson as a Secretary of Defense.

If the simple facts of his term in office are known and examined, there emerges a record more injurious to the Republicans this November than his side comments to reporters, and certainly much more dangerous to the country.

A Word To The Wise

We would have a word with those of you who are tossing in your beds these nights, rassling with the problem of which fraternity to join. Our advice: Don't join any. That is, not right away.

If you've already found a home, of course, if the bonds of fraternal love are even now welded, why read no further. But if, after five nights of rushing, you can't make up your mind, we suggest a rapid withdrawal from the confusion of punch and handshakes and some quiet reflection on what sort of fraternity you want to belong to for four years in Chapel Hill—or indeed, if you want to belong to one at all.

Remember three things: That (1) fraternities which send you bids are usually more eager to have you than you know; they'll be just as glad to see you next semester as they are now. Moreover, (2) a hasty pledging can result in an unhappy mismatch: ask anyone who made the mistake. And (3) the same chapters urging you to make a quick decision this week would much prefer, themselves, that you be sure before you take the step.

Fraternity life at Carolina can offer the most civilized living conditions and the highest comradeship on the campus. But not if you choose the wrong fraternity.

A Guide To Maryland & Its Customs

Louis Kraar

IF YOU'RE one of the lucky 500 or so on campus, you'll be sitting on a train bound for Washington in a few hours.

And as the clack of the rails bring you closer to the capitol city, you may remember that there's a game with some College Park fellows to be played.

But what is this campus and its people like?

REPORTS FROM the Terps' home grounds say they've got a football team. But spectators of the sport there are a little snobbish about the way they view the home team, as indicated by a recent headline in the Maryland student paper.

"ID Cards and Books Required at Games," the headline said.

Just how those Maryland students study and watch the game at the same time should be as interesting as the activity on the field.

MARYLAND COEDS, I am told, have taken to smoking those little pipes. The petite jobs with bright-colored stems and rhinestones (for the upper crust) may look nice hanging from the female lips. But if you're dating a Terp coed, make sure she smokes your brand.

The gals at Maryland are quite an excitable lot. Recently, a group of the coeds spotted a fire on the parking lot. (It was during the day.) They called the fire department but by the time the engines arrived, the blaze was out. So be careful where you throw your cigarettes. You might excite a Terp coed.

FIVE FRATERNITY and five sorority houses are on the Maryland campus. And tonight, after the pep rally on the capitol steps, you might want to go over for a visit with the Maryland folks.

I'm not sure whether rush week has already been held on the College Park campus, so if you look friendly enough they might take you for a prospective pledge. This would help with expenses.

WHEN YOU tire of the Maryland Campus (which shouldn't take too long), don't miss some of the high spots in Washington.

Last spring when exams began to bear down, a friend and I hopped over to Washington. We drove all night, and after a morning tour, ended up at the Veranda of the Hotel Statler for lunch.

The Veranda seems to be one of the hangouts for diplomats, journalists, military people, and elderly women. Lunch will cost you over two dollars, depending on how many cocktails you imbibe, but it's worth it.

There's something enchanting about sititng in the midst of government people and military officers and looking out the big picture window at bustling Washington.

OUR MAN Jerry Reece, this paper's news editor, has agreed to postpone his partying long enough to file a story from the Carolina train bound for Washington.

Reece tells us he wants to get the big-picture view of the train ride, what ever that means. Jerry is one of the few real epicureans left around these parts, so I doubt if he'll postpone his party too long.

If you have anything that you don't want Jerry to include in his story, I suggest inviting him to your party. Then chances are he won't ever write a story.

'Yoo Hoo — Charlie'

Envoy To India?

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower has been so anxious to patch up our sagging relations with India that he has tried to persuade Paul Hoffman, former Administrator for the Marshall Plan, to take the post as U. S. Ambassador to India.

It will probably be denied, but the State Department has even considered the idea of asking Chester Bowles, the Democrat who was removed as envoy to India, to go back again.

Unfortunately, it has been impossible to persuade Hoffman to accept. His problems with the Studebaker Motor Company which he heads, plus his negotiations with Nash-Hudson aimed at keeping small auto companies from being swallowed by the big three, make any foreign assignment impossible.

Also, State Department advisers are doubtful that Bowles would be palatable to the hard core of GOP advisers round Eisenhower even though acceptable to Ike himself.

Bowles, a former Democratic Governor of Connecticut and head of the Price Control Agency during the war, was a sensational success in India. He became a close personal friend of Prime Minister Nehru and was hailed by the Indian masses as their champion. Following Eisenhower's inauguration, however, he was pulled out of India and replaced by career diplomat George Allen.

Allen has now been recalled to Washington and will not return to India. He is expected to place Henry Byroade as Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern affairs.

Note—Allen was an excellent envoy to Yogoslavia, put our relations with Tito on an even keel. But handling dictator Tito and aesthete Nehru are two different things, and Allen was not a success in India.

Sudden Silence In Jersey

If you want to know why a sudden hush has settled down over squabbling Republicans in New Jersey wou won't have far to go.

The answer is the Republic Steel Corporation, which, in cooperation with the White House, pulled one of the neatest bits of pressure politics witnesses in the current campaign.

For over a month Jim Selvage, public relations counsel and former vice president of the National Association of Manufacturers, had been bombarding New Jersey voters with a steady stream of denunciation against GOP Sentorial candidate Clifford Case, all because Case was opposed to Senator McCarthy.

Also snapping at Case's heels were ex-Congressman Fred Hartley, the man who coauthored the Taft-Hartley Act and who is extremely close to the National Retail Dry Goods Association; together with ex-Sen. Alber Hawkes, former president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

The rift they caused in the Republican Party made it almost certain that a Democrat, Congressman Charles Howell, would win.

However. Jim Selvage has now suddenly clammed up. Simultaneously, Fred Hartley, who talked about jumping into the race against Case, has departed to fill some speaking engagements. And ex-Senator Hawkes has gone on a vacation.

Reason: Republic Steel, which is strong in the councils of big business and which feeds public relations business into the firm of Selvage, Lee and Chase, did a little quiet talking to the New Jersey rebels.

PAUL G. HOFFMAN

. . . ambassador?

The astute maneuver was engineered primarily by Bernard Stanley of the White House staff, who checked with Mark Trice, Secretary of the Senate, and with ex-Gov. Walter Edge of New Jersey to see who were the chief clients of the Selvage public relations firms. The next moves were made by James Black, a vice president of Republic Steel, who goes in and out of the White House side door as one of Ike's best anonymous friends; and by Charley White, head of Republic Steel.

Selvage immediately took the hint, decided that Republic Steel business was more important than Jersey politics.

And that is why everything is so quiet along the Jersey banks of the Delaware.

Note—The idea of using the steel companies to pressure key politicians was developed by Governor Dewey during Ike's nominating race. When Gov. John Fine of Pennsylvania suddenly switched from Taft to Eisenhower there was just one reason: The influence of U.S. Steel and Bethlehem Steel, which pack powerful weight in Pennsylvania.

Political Pipeline

Vice President Nixon got quite irked the other day when he couldn't even half fill the hall for his major speech in Bergen County, New Jersey, normally the showpiece of GOP strength in that state . . . Less than 600 people were sprinkled through Teaneck High School Auditorium—capacity 1,200—to hear the Vice President of the United States . . . Nixon was boiling mad, upbraided GOP leaders for loafing. What really got his goat was that about 200 of the crowd were children . . . Republicans are planning to dump a lot of money into Montana during the closing days of the campaign in an all-out effort to defeat Sen. Jim Murray, a liberal Democrat who would head up the Labor Committee, if the Democrats control hte next Senate. Congressman D'Ewart, Murray's opponent, introduced the notorious "giveaway" grazing bill which would have turned a large part of the national forests over to cattlemen. They have raised a reputed $100,000 kitty to help him . . . Out in Minnesota Sen. Hubert Humphrey is publishing the "Barbershop News Letter." "Once the towel is tucked around your neck," says Humphrey, "The barber is the great equalizer of all classes. Futhermore, the barber is one man to whom we all take off our hats." So he's sending a political news letter to all barbershops.

Washington Pipeline

The Justice Department has put one of its best crime-busters, Max Goldschein, in charge of prosecuting Federal housing scandals. Goldschein was the man assigned by Attorney General Tom Clark to crack down on Frankie Costello . . . The Brookhaven Atomic Laboratory on Long Island got a scare recently. Employees going into the laboratory were found to be highly radioactive even before they came in contact with the atomic pile. For a few minutes, the scientists feared something drastic had gone wrong. They soon figured out, however, that a high-altitude windstream had carried atomic radiation all the way from the Nevada tests and deposited the radioactive fallout—of all places—on the Brookhaven Laboratory in New York.

Playmakers Hit Nears B'way Performance

Ted Rosenthal

Material as difficult to handle as Arthur Miller's "The Crucible" poses a stern challenge to any dramatic group; to attempt this play is ambitious, but to capture it effectively demands more than willingness—there must be hard work, understanding of its dramatic significance, and above all ability. The production which now graces the stage of the Playmakers' Theatre combines these qualities, and emerges in the finest tradition of the living theatre, college or otherwise!

As a totality, the play is powerfully wrought. Director Foster Fitz-Simons has fused its complex structure into cohesive poignant life, and has sucessfully avoided the twin dangers inherent in developing this drama, which could easily have been fragmented or mistimed into anti-climax, or because of its weighty nature, calcified into over-earnest didacticism. What does result is the human tragedy of individuals caught in a wave of hysterical ear and suspicion, struggling to find their way, when the only alternatives are moral surrender and death.

Reaching into the grab-bag of speculation, at the time of "The Crucible's" original run in New York a year ago, there was much comment regarding its implications on contemporary events, since the play is concerned with the Salem witchtrials, and that was the palmy period of the McCarthy Committee's activities. But today, with that political furor mainly subsided, it still posesses great intrinsic impact, and as such must be judged, whatever was or was not in the author's mind at the time of its writing.

In places during the course of the play, some soft-spots appeared; there were a few instances when speeches were inaudible, or when the effect of several characters speaking simultaneously was to disturb the continuity, and probably some of the moments of comic-relief were over-accentuated. But this would be picking at straws, except how little was lacking in the presentation. Having seen both, I would say that the Playmankers' effort compares very favorably with the Broadway production, and definately surpassed it in achieving all-over unity, because it avoided the moment to monent atomization, to which the latter attempt succumbed.

Lois Garren was sparkling in the role of Abigail Williams; she conveyed extremes of romantic passion, bitter malice, and frenzied pretense, with equal capability. Robert Sonkowsky, as the protagonist, John Proctor, gave an excellent, sensitive performance—while he did stumble over an occasional line in the course of his long and demanding part, this was more than compensated for by the consistent power of his interpretation. Donnell Stoneman too, delivered a fine characterization as the Reverend Hale, capturing the picture of a man trying desperately to stop the veil he has helped set in motion. Leslie Casey did a thoroughly capable job with her understanding portrayal of Elizabeth Procter.

Yet while space - considerations permit only a listing of the major supporting players, the acting of the entire cast was in every case completely adequate. Featured were Baxter Sasser as th Reverend Parris, William Trotman as Deputy-Governor Danforth, Peter Sinclair as Thomas Putnam, Martha Dew as Mary Warren, William O'Sullivan as Giles Corey, and Gene Williams as Ezekiel Cheever.

No less effective were the technical aspects of the production: James Riley's settings, Suzanne Kramer's costumes, and Charles Jeffers' lighting

Normally Playmaker productions are scheduled for five day runs, but The Crucible will be presented through Monday, and possibly if there is great enough demand the engagement might be extended. This is not only a show worth seeing, but well worth travelling far to see. It seems axiomatic for people to ignore what it conveniently at hand, but to pass up this play would be analagous to snubbing the prophet in his own backyard. Don't miss it!

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . "—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.

THE HORSE was prowling the purlieus of Gardner Hall when I saw him. I wondered was he a B.A.?

"I'll thank you not to call me no names, Roger," The Horse chittered. "After all I've done for you, this is ingratitood."

I meant, was he a Business Administration student, was all.

"I accept your apology," The Horse condescended. "No, I am waiting for Doctor-Professor Earl "Boss" Wynn, voice-teacher extraordinary, and teaching chief of the R., T.V. & M. P."

Was this a new railroad, the R., T.V. & M.P.?

"Nope, but you sure can get run over, not to mention derailed and/or wrecked, if'n you don't know your way through the myriad switches, double-switches, crosses—and such—that bear-trap that new and populous department," The Horse specified. "I refer to Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, at Swain Hall. I got an idee how Boss Wynn can make lotsa money."

I didn't think that anybody earning the fantastic emoluments which were commonplace on our campus would be interested in money!

"Just as a hobby, a few are," The Horse stated. "They like the pictoors of Geo. Washington on the obverse sides of dollar bills. I am anxious to trade some of my Geo. Washingtons for a like number of Hamiltons, Jacksons or Grants. I would even take a Chase, if it was not to beat up. I could even be induced to part with five Washingtons for, say, one Wilson."

I knew Hamiltons were Tens, Jacksons were Twenties, and Grants were Fifties; but—Chases, and Wilsons?

"Chase pictoors are on Ten Thousand Dollar bill and Wilsons are on Hunnerd Thousand dittoes." The Horse affirmed. "But to get back to my original subject, I am here to suggest to Boss Wynn that he apply to Our Peerless Leader for the job of teaching His Cabinet to speak. Or, better yet, how and when to keep their faces shut. Chillin' Chollie Wilson has been running off at the radiator-cap again: and I read where Dickie-Boy Nixon, Dook, ugh, Honorary Law Gradocate and quondam Dishonorary Campaign-Fund Racketeer, has been accused of giving with lankwich on the T-V that would bring blushes to the case-hardened cheeks of no less a master of foul invective than deceptively Rover-boy-appearing Tom Dewey, of Noo Yawk by way of Michigan."

Yes; I'd heard that Southern Republicans paled unto homogenous integration at Republican National Conventions, when New York's unpopular hair-lipped orator and governor dropped into familiar, if unfriendly, vernacular.

"I can quite understand Chillin' Chollie's mistake in thinking The Dog is the new emblem of the, erp, GOP," The Horse allowed, "and thus making free use of dog-talk in Detroit. Didn't Dickie-Boy Nixon get elected by his pooch, Checkers, and stand doggedly by his spiked guns, which same were manned by Our Peerless Leader, in that phony TV election-pictoor? Remember, when Ike had his arm around Dickie-Boy's shoulder striving to get a half-Nelson on him, and everybody took it to be a friendly gesture?"

I remember when Dickie-Boy had cried and then had besought St. Paddy's aid, even, by claiming Mrs. Dixon had been born on The Seventeenth of Oireland. Incidentally, that claim had come closest to truth, as I recalled it, of any Repub campaign claims or promises.

"Now, that's where you are wrong," The Horse contradicted me. "and that is just where the nation has been hurt: Ike not only made campaign promises, but what is infinitely worse and never expected of him, he has kept them. Texass, Louseyanna and Callyphonia get paid for their votes, and pronto. The Power-Laddies have things so cozy they are rumored to be bottling Niagara Falls to sell the excess not required for their power, in five-gallon jugs. And if'fn you don't think that What Is Goods From The Mint Is Good For General Motors, then take another gander at the golden-goose eggs the Defense Department is laying into G. M.'s octopustular manufacturis. Yup; the Repubs pay off."

Well, what did The Horse think of Chillin' Chollie's bit of blubbermouthing anent bird-dawgs and kennel-dawgs?

"Chillin' Chollie, like many of our monied tycoons, is a wizard at one thing—making money," The Horse stated. "He is an organizational genius and an adept executive. But he should take himself a Frosh course in Economics, or Sociology. In effect, what Chollie does not seem to know, is that his very success itself—the mass production of automobiles and their by-products—has set up, by bringing about tremendous concentrations of potential workers near his factories, and Industrial Society in place of our old Patriarchal Society. If he understood this Frosh profundity, he would not have rubberlipped the rubric quip on pooches that 'sit on their fannies and yell (sic)."

Some said Chollie wanted his dogs—pardon, workers—to take off and eat partridge and hare and possum someplace until Chollie, or someone like him, wanted them again.

'That about states his ideal," The Horse agreed. "But what is more likely to happen is, factory employees will be put on yearly salaries to take up the slack periods' slack beltlines, and to level off the overtime-periods' bumps of truly fat living. Rent, mortgages, installment purchases, insurance, taxes, school-bills—in short, the big-money items a worker has to contract for so that he can stick around and work for Chollie—are usually by-the-year. So why should not workers' paychecks be ditto? Like Chollie's own is?"

And like The Horse's own work was paid, by the DTH?

"Heck, they don't just ignore me and misprint me by the year, they do it by tri-annual arrangement. But the misprinting is going to change, soon. We are getting a proofreader!"

"Wump!" Mr. Wump, the Frog, stated his low-level view of that.

Gridmen Leave For Maryland Today

Booters To Meet Terps Tomorrow

By DICK ARMSTRONG

Carolina's soccer squad begins its 1954 conference schedule by battling Maryland at 10 a.m. Saturday. Maryland, though undefeated in two practice tilts, will be only slightly favored over the improved Tar Heels.

The game will be played on the campus soccer field, which is adjacent to the football stadium. A large number of Carolina students are expected for the match.

Maryland defeated Loyola in its first game by a 2-0 score. The Terrapins also defeated a strong Duke team last week, 2-1. The conference championship, which is decided on a percentage basis from the play of the five participating teams, was won by Maryland last year. Carolina, State, Duke, and Virginia are the other four members.

The Tar Heels will have several new men in the lineup this week due to injuries. Left-winger Pete Cothran is not expected to start because of an injured ankle. Tommy Kirkland will replace Cothran if he is unable to play. Frank Butler is expected to see a lot of action as a sub for the ailing Bill McGinn. Jim Bunting, who has been bothered all season by an injured leg, will be replaced by Joe Mavretic.

Chip Bryant, who has scored the only Tar Heel goals in their two losses to Ft. Bragg, is again expected to lead the attack. Coach Marvin Allen believes the Carolina attack will be vastly improved this week, due to an emphasis on offensive work during this weeks practice sessions.

The Tar Heels will go out of state again next week to play Washington and Lee at Lexington on the 20th and Roanoke College at Roanoke on the next day. The next home game is scheduled for Oct. 27, with Duke's Blue Devils furnishing the opposition.

Marshall Newman Slated For Fullback; McMullen, Left-Half

Changes In Line Also Plentiful As Neville And Patterson Gain First-String Berths

By LARRY SAUNDERS

The Carolina football team and nearly 2,000 students depart this afternoon at 4 o'clock for College Park, Maryland, where Coach George Barclay's gridmen meet a favored University of Maryland team tomorrow afternoon.

Marshall Newman, Tar Heel quarterback for over two years, will be Carolina's starting fullback when the team takes the field. Barclay has also lined up several other changes for his former teammate at Carolina and the present Maryland coach, Jim Tatum. Larry McMullen, the sophomore fullback, may start at left halfback. Ken Keller, in top shape for the first time this season, is the other left half possibility. Connie Gravitte and Len "Teedee" Bullock round-out the starting backfield.

Changes in the forward wall are also plentiful as the Carolina coaching staff continues to look for the best possible combination. Jimmy Neville and Ed Patterson are the top choices at the guard posts for the first time this year. They replace George Poti and Bill Koman, who has a bad ankle. Doug Malone and Will Frye are holdovers from last week at the end post and Roland Purdue and John Jones will get the nod at the tackle position. George Stavnitski will start at center.

Barclay plans to use two first teams, alternating between his two combines as often as necessary. Either Al Long or Doug Farmer will call signals for the second "first" team. aFrmer was the regular freshman quarterback last season, but started his first varsity year as a reserve halfback. Ed Sutton who turned in his finest game of the season against Georgia, will be at right half with McMullen or Keller at the other half. Big Don Klochak will be at fullback.

The ends for Barclay's other first team will be Larry Muschamp and Norman Lane. Foti and Will Alexander will see action at the guard posts and John Bilich and Hudson Shoulars will be the tackles, with Bill Kirkman playing center.

"We're going after them," Barclay said yesterday. "I think the boys finally realize that they haven't been playing as well as they can. We're ready for them (Maryland)."

Although showing more optimism than at any other time, Barclay would not commit himself to predict the outcome of the contest. "I won't say we'll win or they will win, but I know its going to be a great game," he said.

Only tackle Jack Maultsby is on the doubtful list. The Carolina tackle, hurt in the Tulane game, may be able to see limited action. Koman will probably be ready by Saturday and Larry Parker, with a bruised side, is expected to be ready.

The gridmen went through their final workout yesterday before the Maryland game. Pass defense was once again stressed and quarterbacks Bullock, Farmer, and Long gave the ends a good chance to practice their pass cuts. Barclay sent his team through a 45 minute dummy scrimmage before returning to Kenan Stadium to spend more time on the defense to be used against Maryland.

The practice was wrapped up with kick-off and punt offense and defense patterns.

Duke Preps For Cadets

DURHAM, Oct. 13 (AP)—Duke's Blue Devils ran through another rough practice session here today in preparation for Saturday's homecoming clash with Army's nationally-rated Cadets.

Ticket sales continued brisk for the Army game and a crowd of 47,000 is expected, but tickets will be on sale at all gates the day of the game.

The Duke line received special attention in today's drill as the freshmen units ran Army plays against three different varsity combines. Pass defense also received a major portion of emphasis in the two-hour workout.

Offensively the three teams worked long and hard against a reserve combination. Most of the time was spent ironing minute details of offensive line play with only a brief period being spent in partial scrimmage.

Punt returns and the blocking of punts also were worked upon in the late stages of the practice. Three varsity units worked against the reserves in this phase of the drill also. Reserve Bill Hagie did the punting for the reserves, and the varsity teams reeled off some good runbacks and blocked a couple of the punts.

Tar Heel Frosh Favored Over Wake Forest In Contest Tonight

Winston, SAE-1 Top Opponents

The Intramural field rocked yesterday with the thunder of feet crossing the goal, as Winston—2 pulverized Mangum, 54-0, and SAE—1 ground Phi Kap Sig into the dust, 35-0.

Winston—2, an undefeated, unscored on team rolled to a 15-0 first half lead, then unleashed a powerful attack to score 39 points in the final half. Led by Bob Wilson, who scored four times, the Winston team was never in danger of ruining their perfect record.

Winston—2	39	54

SAE—1 combined a terrific offense, and a defense which intercepted every pass that came near it, to trample Phi Kappa Sig 35-0. Practically the entire game was played in Phi Kap territory, as the defense would not allow them to move the ball.

SAE—1	14	21—35
Phi Kappa Sig	0	0—0

Scoring: SAE—, Touchdowns — Williams, Hardison, Scholze, Patton —2. PAT—Abercrombie, Payne 3, Williams.

GRAND NAT'L RACE

MARTINSVILLE, Va. Oct. 15—Six drivers entered for Sunday's 100-mile Grand National Circuit race for late model cars at Martinsville Speedway are rated equal favorites as the speed demons tune up for their final Virginia appearance of the season.

The Carolina freshman gridders have been established as two-touchdown favorites for tonight's encounter with the Wake Forest frosh at Wilson.

The Tar Babies, undefeated and seeking their second victory, will be up against a team which lost its only game thus far to Duke's freshmen, 35-7.

Carolina won its opener against South Carolina two weeks ago thanks to the master-minding quarterbacking turned in by Buddy Sasser. Sasser will be in tonight's starting lineup.

The flash from Conway, S. C., ran 60 and 23 yards to score two touchdowns in the Tar Babies' opener.

UNC will be without the services of Buddy Payne tonight: Payne, a talented end from Norfolk, Va., sprained an ankle during drills this week and will be lost to the team for an indefinite period.

Deacs Already Pointing For Carolina Fracas

WAKE FOREST, Oct. 14 (AP)—Wake Forest worked on all phases of passing today in an attempt to strengthen its aerial game prior to the Oct. 23 football game with North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The Deacons are idle Saturday.

The first two teams brushed up on pass offense and pass defense and then scrimmaged against the reserves in a lengthly session. Quarterback Nick Consoles, the ACC's leading passer, did most of the throwing with end Ed Stowers and halfback John Parham on the receiving ends.

English Club To Hear Talk On French Writing

"Research in Old French Literature" will be the subject of Dr. Urban Tigner Holmes, Kenan Professor of Romance Philology, when he speaks to the English Club tonight at 8 o'clock.

Dr. Holmes is the author of "A History of Old French Literature, Daily Living in the 12th Century" and numerous articles.

The meeting will be held in the Assembly and Exhibition Room of the Library. Refreshments will be served from 7:30 until 8 and again following the talk. All faculty members, students and their wives or husbands are cordially invited to attend, said the club.

NCEA Hears Public Schools Discussion

LUMBERTON (AP)—Economic and social conditions now are unfavorable to increased public school appropriations, the Southeastern District of the North Carolina Education Assn. was told today.

This opinion was expressed here by A. B. Gibson, superintendent of Laurinburg City Schools and co-chairman of the NCEA Legislative Committee.

He told the approximately 2,000 NCEA members from 13 counties meeting at Lumberton High School that the public must be made more aware of school needs and problems.

"Segregation will overhang" all actions affecting schools in the coming year, he declared. The NCEA objective, Gibson added, is to "promote a better program for children.'"

Among specific goals he listed more attendance officers, clerical assistance for teaching principals, teachers for special subjects, a salary scale of $2,600 to $4,100 a year, and having teachers take on an additional two weeks' work annually in worshops or in-training activities.

Gibson called attention to the shortage of qualified teachers, reporting that the shortage is increasing.

Dr. Henry H. Hill, president of George Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville, Tnn., addressed a general session. He was introduced by Dr. Charles F. Carroll, state superintendent of public instruction.

Profs To Get Break

According to Dr. Robert M. Lester, many young professors and graduate students in Southern colleges and universities at long last are going to get the break they and their predecessors have been longing for so many years.

"For the last 35 years in Southern educational institutions amazingly large sums have been spent for buildings, endowments and equipment, some of it from the larger foundations and much of it from the taxpaying public," explained Dr. Lester.

"Lots of attention has been paid the students who in many instances have been coddled. But often young professors and graduate students who found it necessary to carry a teaching load while seeking advanced degrees have been neglected," he continued.

Dr. Lester will soon assume his new duties as executive secretary and director of th Southern Fellowships Fund which is to pass out to Southern scholars $3,000,000 in grants-in-aid during the next 10 years, at the rate of some $250,000 a year. He will retire on Nov. 16 from the secretaryship of the Carnegie Corporation of New York after 28 years of Carnegie service

The $3,000,000 fund, Dr. Lester explained, was made available by the General Educational Board in New York, a Rockefeller Agency, to the Council of Southern Universities which is to administer the grants through an agency to be known as the Southern Fellowship Fund.

The amounts of the grants will vary, depending on the type of work the applicant intends to do and his living costs, pointed out Dr. Lester. The applicants must be persons "of high intellectual quality and integrity regardless of race, who are eager to advance knowledge through teaching and research and who are equipped temperamentally to meet the demands of a tremendously expanding field of education."

Th awards will be made in the basic sciences, social sciences and humanities.

Candidates will be considered from Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

The recipients of grants may do their work in Southern universities or elsewhere in the United States where their qualifications are satisfactory.

Any young qualified person teaching in institutions of higher education in states named, is eligible to apply.

Since the organization of the administrative machinery to handle the Fund will require some time it is not probable that applications will be invited before mid-December, explained Dr. Lester. It is hoped that the first groups of awards can be made early in 1955.

Cardiovascular Diseases will be the topic of a new eight-week postgraduate course in medicine, which will open here Oct. 27 and continue each Wednesday afternoon through Dec. 15.

These sessions, which will begin promptly at 2:30 p.m. at the N. C. Memorial Hospital, he said, are designed for the general practitioner. "Emphasis will be placed on basic concepts and on the usefulness and limitations of newer diagnostic and therapeutic measures," he explained.

Hurricane Nearing Carolinas

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

Yesterday, the Army hurriedly cancelled an airborne demonstration scheduled for today at Ft. Bragg, when warning was received that Hurricane Hazel was heading for the Carolina area.

Defense Secretary Wilson, Gen. Matthew B. Ridgeway and other Pentagon officials had planned to fly to Ft. Bragg to witness the training demonstration.

No new date for the demonstration was set.

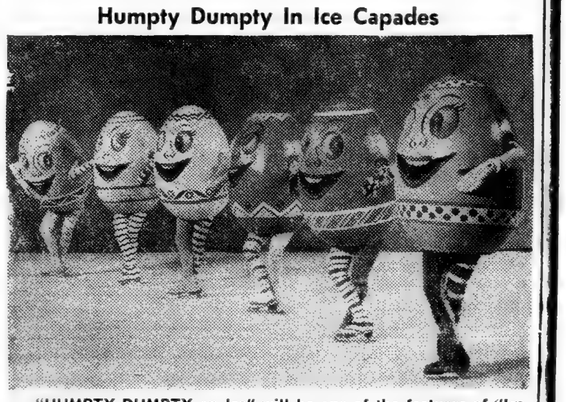
Hurricane warnings have been sent out to the North Carolina capes about Hurricane Hazel, and storm warnings have been issued elsewhere along the coast line.

Increasing and perhaps dangerous winds were predicted for the Atlantic coast last night. Heavy rains and squalls were expected last night and early this morning, especially on the outer banks. These rains are due to end late today with diminishing winds, according to the weather bureau.

For the rest of the state the weather bureau predicted a let-up today from the warm weather. The let-up is supposed to come in the form of showers and scattered thunderstorms followed by weather which should be clear, windy and cooler.

Empire State Building Sold To Col. Crown

NEW YORK (AP) — The Empire State Building, tallest skyscraper in the world, today became the property of one man—Col. Henry Crown, Chicago industrialist.



It was the second time in the building's 23-year history that one man has owned it. John J. Raskob, industrialist and General Motors executive, built the structure and held it in personal ownership until his death in 1950.

Crown, who already held 61 per cent control, bought out several estates and investors to make his ownership 100 per cent. Among them were the Raskob and Alfred E. Smith estates, Roger L. Stevens of Ann Arbor, Mich., Alfred Glancy Jr. of Detroit and Charles Noyes, New York real estate man.

Altogether, the property cost Crown 49½ million dollars, he told a press conference. The property was sold by the Raskob estate in 1951 for 51 millions to a group in which Crown was the largest individual stockholder. He said, however, that the sellers today realized a gain due to operating profit and depreciation over the last three years.

Crown, who began his business career as a $4 a week office boy 44 years ago, is the owner of Material Service Corp. of Chicago, large producer and distributor of building materials. He holds interests in the Hilton Hotels Corp., the Rock Island Railroad and other firms.

College Park Is The Place For A Die-Hard Tar Heel

By NEAL DURGIN
Editor, Maryland Diamondback

COLLEGE PARK, Md.—There isn't any doubt in the minds of loyal Terrapins that College Park is definitely the place for a weekend, even if you happen to be a die-hard Tar Heel recuperating from a resounding defeat on the gridiron.

Right after this afternoon's activities that horrible empty feeling is going to show up around the abdominal region—you're hungry. For Maryland students there's always the Dining Hall (ugh!) but for visitors there's plenty of good food within walking distance.

Probably the best spot would be the Hot Shoppe, located one block south of the University on Baltimore Blvd. (U. S. Rt. 1). If you can afford it you're in for a real treat in one of the finest air-conditioned dining rooms on the east coast.

Dinner For A Buck

If the expense of the trip and game tickets has added an extra burden on your wallet, stop halfway on that block south of the University and visit "Zal's" Varsity Grill, where a full-course dinner can be digested for a buck. (The beer is extra, of course—but they have it.)

Lighter means at less expense can be had up to 10 p.m. at Albrecht's Drugstore, opposite the South Gate of the University, or at People's Drugstore in the College Park Shopping Center.

The College Park Delicatessen, on the same block south of the University, specializes in submarine sandwiches and kosher hot dogs.

When that yearning for chow has subsided, it's time to go out and have a good time, especially if you had a dull afternoon. Now the visitor will realize how fortunate Maryland students are because of their proximity to Washington.

The Capital

Follow Baltimore Blvd. south for about five miles and the U. S. Capital will offer a night to remember. Special places to go can't be recommended — they're all great.

Some folks may be a bit hesitant about bucking Route 1 traffic and the chance of getting lost in D.C. Just remain in College Park, and you won't be sorry for the decision.

The aforementioned Varsity Grill is the gathering place for the Terps after the game: win, lose or draw. Indulging in national brands and local brew is available, but sadly lacking is dancing facilities. There is a juke box, though.

Dancing

Dancing at the "Starlight" about a mile north of the University on the left-hand side of Baltimore Blvd. will satisfy any gal. This place is just right — reasonable and the atmosphere is teriffic.

Getting back to the campus scene presents a problem. Just about all activities for the evening are scheduled for th new Student Union Building, where the Maryland Band has invited the Carolina Band to a friendly get-together. The Union is just a three-minute walk from the stadium, and can't be missed because of its enormous size. Give it a try . . . there might be something going on.

Kissing

A tunnel (for kissing) is located a few feet away from the new $1,000,000 all-faith Memorial Chapel (for praying).

Fraternity and Sorority Row, with five frat houses and five sorority houses, is just across the boulevard from the University. Other houses are scattered either on or off College Ave., just across from the University's South Gate.

To wrap up the evening, several parking lots are available for friendly conversations.

'Musicale' Tomorrow

A piano recital will be presented tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock in the main lounge of Graham Memorial by Miss Carol Sites, graduate student and assistant instructor in piano in the UNC Department of Music.

Her performance will be the second event in the Graham Memorial's "petite musicales" series, which are presented every other Sunday night by the Graham Memorial Student Union. Following the recital, a reception will be held in honor of Miss Sites.

Performances in the series are free of charge to the public and student body.

Hospital Was Ready For Hazel

By CHAL SCHLEY

Twenty student nurses, two Pi Lambda Phi's and a steady smiling hospital director and his staff had the UNC Memorial Hospital mobilized and ready for all comers during the hurricane which hit here yesterday afternoon.

About the middle of the morning, Dr. Robert R. Cadmus, Director of the Hospital, received word that Hurricane Hazel was due to hit this area about lunch-time. Immediately, he called the State Highway Department in Raleigh and offered the services of the Hospital in case of emergencies.

Next, he called a meeting of his department heads and told them to be ready for a power failure. The power lines linking the hospital with the plant are aerial wires running through woods.

There were 196 patients in the hospital yesterday. They had just finished lunch when the hurricane hit at 1:15 p.m.

Lights Flickered

Shortly thereafter, the lights began to flicker. The power went off completely at 1:40 — no lights, no phones, no power for the two iron lungs.

But the hospital was prepared. J. A. Branch, director of the University Purchasing Department, had sent two gross of candles to the hospital to furnish lights, and the emergency generator kept the iron lungs pumping life.

Shortly after the power failed, two thoroughly soaked students walked into the Director's office and offered their help. The students were Joe Raff, senior from Charlotte, and Dave Burrows, sophomore from Bay Shore, New York. They had walked all the way from the Pi Lam House in Fraternity Court. Dr. Cadmus had each stand by an iron lung, ready to pump it by hand if the emergency generator failed.

Nurses Help

Meanwhile, the student nurses were called in. Four of them, seniors, were on duty anyway. The rest, mostly juniors, donned uniforms as volunteers. They were stationed in the patient areas of the hospital to comfort and reassure the patients. Largely because of their efforts, the patients regarded th hurricane "as sort of a lark," according to Dr. Cadmus.

Several other student nurses were in the basement of the Nurses' Dorm caring for 25 children who had been moved there from the Victory Village Day Center for safety.

The hospital elevators were also halted by the power failure. At the time of this writing, four patients just out of surgery were in the recovery room, waiting to be moved back to their own beds on the floors below.

Police

In the middle of the storm, a police car arrived at the hospital. It was Lee Skinner, former Manager of Lenoir Dining Hall. Mr. Skinner has been in an iron lung for several years, and this afternoon the power failure hit his house, too. He was immediately taken care of, however, and he is now safe and comfortable.

Two cases came to the emergency ward, one during the storm, and one afterwards. The case during the storm was thought to be a heart attack, but it turned out that the prospective patient was just badly scared.

The other patient who came la-

UPROOTED TREES ON THE CAMPUS

Hazel Uproots Tradition And Creases Automobiles Here

By FRED POWLEDGE

A hurricane named Hazel, said to be the worst Chapel Hill has ever seen, ripped through town yesterday, uprooting ancient trees and making crinkled metal out of automobiles.

When Hazel was gone, around 4 p.m., no one was reported dead or seriously injured as a result of her rampage.

Campus Hit Hardest

The campus, between the Confederate Soldier and the Old Well, appeared to be hardest hit. Heavy rains and winds greeted students leaving 12-1 p.m. classes, and literally tore up McCorkle Place. Trees around Davie Poplar cracked and fell. One broke Carolina's "Cleopatra's Needle" — the Caldwell Memorial obelisk — off six feet above the ground. But Davie Poplar, scene of Tuesday's University Day convocation, survived the 65-miles-per-hour winds.

Leaves were scattered over the campus and town. Trees and branches fell on Rosemary, Franklin, Cameron and Raleigh Streets, in many cases blocking traffic until workmen could saw them up and cart them away.

Damage

One tree fell on Franklin St. in front of the ATO Fraternity house, nectssitating one-way traffic for several hours. Another, falling between Colonial House and Kappa Psi Fraternity on W. Rosemary, wrecked two cars. The owner of one of the cars said the autos were "total losses" and that he was planning to drive to Washington in "a few minutes" to attend the UNC-Maryland game today.

Wind And Rain

Meterologists at New East (the geology building) reported a total of 3.95 inches of rain yesterday.

Winds, they said, reached 68 miles per hour, and Chapel Hill experienced a 15-degree drop in temperature. The barometer dropped early yesterday morning to 28.85, the weatherman said. 30.0 is usually normal Barometer was "rising fast" at 5 p.m. yesterday.

Hams' Stand By

The ham radio station room at Naval ROTC Armory was a scene of intense activity yesterday from early morning until long after the storm had passed.

The Tar Heel amateur short-wave network was in action all day, relaying messages from North and South Carolina and Virginia emergency areas.

C. H. Russell, the Navy's Electronics Technician mate at the local unit, and Lewis F. Robertson, Jr., sophomore and licensed radio amateur, operated the network until late last night.

The Chapel Hill radio sent directives from Gov. William B. Umstead to national guard units on the eastern seaboard area of the state.

Barclay's Boys Meet Terrapins Today In Gala Caravan Weekend Contest

Although Tar Heels Are Rated 10-Point Underdogs, Carolina Coach Optimistic

COLLEGE PARK, Md.—Carolina's pass defense, rated best in the Atlantic Coast Conference, will get its toughest examination of the season this afternoon when the Maryland Terps clash with the Tar Heels here in Byrd Stadium.

The game, Maryland's homecoming, is scheduled for 2 o'clock.

The Maryland T-formation quarterback is Charlie Boxold, the No. 2 man in total offense in the ACC. He is an expert with the pigskin, having played behind two All-Americans (Bernie Faloney and Jack Scarbath), not only in the air but also in the execution of the "keep" play. Last season Boxold took over the Maryland reins for half the game and led the Terps to a 26-0 victory in Chapel Hill.

Similar Records

Both Maryland and Carolina have run into difficulty this season, having similar records of 1-1-1. Maryland was the top team in the country at the conclusion of last season but the Terps lost seven starters, including three All-Americans. The Terrapins won their first game a month ago from Kentucky, then lost to UCLA and were tied by Wake Forest last week. The UNC coaches who scouted Maryland say that the team has not found itself yet, however, and that the average weight is more than Carolina's.

Leading the Maryland attack behind Boxold is Dick Bielski, one of the best fullbacks in the Conference. The Terps are also proud of half back Joe Horning, end Bill Walker and center John Irvine.

Barclay Optimistic

Carolina coach George Barclay is very optimistic, although his charges have been established as 10-point underdogs. Barclay plans to work two teams into the game with the following as starters: Will Frye and Doug Malone at ends; John Jones and Roland Perdue at tackles; Jimmy Neville and Ed Patterson at guards; George Stavnitski at center; Len Bullock at quarterback; Larry McMullen and Connie Gravitte at halfbacks, and Marshall Newman at fullback.

Newman has been doing all of his playing to date at quarterback but this week he was moved to full to take advantage of his blocking ability while Bullock does the throwing.

Gravitte remains the top runner in the ACC with a 6.7 yards per carry average.

Barclay's other "first-string" backfield which he will alternate consists of either Al Long or Doug Farmer at quarterback; Ken Keller and Larry Sutton at halves; and Don Klichak at full.

Even Chance

Barclay feels that Carolina has almost an even chance against Maryland. "My boys have realized that we can play better ball," he said, "and we'll give Maryland a good game."

The team arrived in Washington last night on the same train wiht approximately 2,000 Carolina students and is making its headquarters at the Dupont Plaza. The students are spread all over the city, with the majority staying at the Shoreham, Harrington and the Ambassador hotels.

Last night the students threw a pep rally at the Washington Monument and tonight will make merry at the Shoreham, where D. C. alumni are sponsoring a dance. Many will stay over tomorrow for "Choo-Choo" Justice Day at Griffith Stadium.

For the Carolina stay-at-homes, the game will be broadcast over the Tobacco Sports Network, (WRAL) Raleigh, by Ray Reeve.

Throughout the 55-year rivalry between UNC and Maryland, Carolina has won 13 games, the Old Liners six and there has been one tie.

Today's officials are: Referee, M. B. Mattox (Washington and Lee); Umpire, Harwood T. Smith (Duke); Linesman, Robert M. Gantt (Duke); Judge, Tatum Gressette (South Carolina).

Hurricane Damage In Millions

WILMINGTON (AP) — Damage reports piled up last night from the eastern Carolinas, ravaged by Hurricane Hazel's 130 mile an hour winds.

No estimate of damage was made, but apparently it will run into the millions of dollars.

Martial law was declared along South Carolina beaches by Gov. James F. Byrnes after reports of extensive looting of wrecked and abandoned beach homes and resorts.

The Civil Air Patrol at Charlotte reported that martial law has been declared at Wrightsville Beach, N. C., although there were no reports of looting.

Gov. William B. Umstead ordered North Carolina National Guard units to Wilmington at the request of the city manager. The troops assisted in the evacuation from the stricken area.

Schools Closed

Schools were closed and public meetings were called off in areas in the path of the storm.

Early victims included fishing piers poking their long fingers out into the Atlantic. A pier at Spivey's Beach, south of Myrtle Beach, S. C., was swept away by the huge waves. An 800-foot pier at Tilghman's Beach was washed away.

At Myrtle Beach the Second Avenue pier was wrecked, as was the Ocean Plaza Pier.

Water flooded the USO building at Myrtle Beach and seeped into many houses. Breakers crashed over the Boulevard which runs along behind the front row of beach homes.

The medical company of the 118th Infantry of the South Carolina National Guard was ordered to Georgetown, S. C., to handle storm casualties from the Georgetown-Myrtle Beach areas.

At Charlotte, C. L. Lott, North Carolina manager of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co., said reports indicated hundreds of telephone lines were down in Wilmington. He said 80 per cent of the long distance circuits between here and the rest of the state were knocked out.

At Clinton, N. C., high winds blew down the main exhibit of the Sampson County Fair. Electric power was off and telephones

ONE KILLED, TWO STUDENTS INJURED

DURHAM —(AP)— One man was killed and two University of North Carolina students were injured on the Wake Forest Road yesterday afternoon when they were hit by a truck while taking pictures of a fallen tree for use in the state's Highway Safety program.

Malcolm Baxter Rawlins, 21, of Charlotte was knocked 44 feet through the air and landed against the pavement, meeting instant death, State Highway Patrolman B. D. Burge reported.

Hackney High of Oak City, a UNC student, sustained severe head injuries and is in serious condition at Duke Hospital.

Charles Bolton, the other Carolina student, received lacerations and bruises and was transferred from Duke Hospital to Memorial Hospital at Chapel Hill.

Standing on the road with Rawlins but away from the path of the truck were three University students: Albert House, Clayton Jackson, and George Britt, as well as William Edgerton Gulley of Chapel Hill.

Beat Maryland!

A colorful phantasmagoria of Carolinians with Hurricane Hazel screaming before them on her broom poured across the Virginia border last night. Pictorially speaking, all are bloodthirsty.

With or without Hazel's aid the Tar Heels, turned away from victory's door for two successive Saturday afternoons, will be out to demonstrate that the Terrapins aren't the Goliaths they're made out to be.

Somehow, we have a feeling that when the battle sounds die away in College Park this afternoon Maryland's football team, its students, and its crusty old alumni will wish the awful entourage from the Southland had not come.

A Critic's Critique Of The Government

We have a letter to the editor. The reason it is not printed in our letters column is that it is written, not to us, but to the editor of The New York Times. It came from the responsible typewriter of Brooks Atkinson, the Times' own drama critic. We reprint it here as a startling, but factual analysis of the present status of civil liberties in the country.

Editor:

We can vote in this country. This is doubtless the principal source of our liberty. There is freedom of speech for citizens willing to take the consequences.

In many respects, however, both the administrative and legislative branches of the government show a compulsion toward totalitarian practices:

The Government refuses passports to citizens it does not like.

It blocks the free exchange of ideas by denying visas to eminent European scientists and writers.

It has repudiated the scientist who led the world in the construction of the atom bomb because he is not a standardized man.

It maintains an organization of investigators who collect, among other items, facts concerning the newspaper reading habits of citizens and the mail that goes into their homes.

It employs political informers.

It blackmails citizens into informing on each other.

It summons citizens before government committees to answer for their personal ideas, associations, friends, and their relatives.

Government committees presume to give absolution to citizens who confess their political sins and promise not to violate the committees' party line in the future.

The government has permitted a senator to set himself up as public prosecutor.

It has accused the national foundations of underwriting revolution, threatened them with tax reprisals and denied them equal rights to defend themselves.

It sacks or rusticates foreign service officers who do not parrot the party line at home.

It tries to consolidate itself in power by denouncing its predecessors in office as traitors.

I wonder if Americans really want it this way.

Not Quite Any Port In A Storm

Of all the hurricane reports we heard on the office radio yesterday, the most dismaying had nothing to do with death or destruction. It was a story of the establishment of separate emergency shelters for white and Negro homeless in the storm's path, and came from South Carolina, where there is segregation, even in a hurricane.

Plenty Of Space To Park Here, But That's All

Louis Kraar

BY NOW you're probably tired.

If you're in Washington (reading the Air Mail edition), you've probably had a vigorous train ride. And if you're back home at the Hill, you're probably still worn out from rushing.

I've always wondered just what the hectic pace of some of Carolina life does to you. Every time a big weekend rolls around —like Germans next weekend— I begin to worry about how many healthy days of my old-age I've forfeited.

But word comes from one doctor that the fast pace of American living isn't killing. Matter of fact, some authorities seem to think our pace is too slow. The latter experts, I presume, never came to Carolina.

THE REMARK about Defense Secretary Wilson("He's the guy who worked so hard on the automatic transmission so he'd have a foot free to stick in his mouth.") originated with network radio commentator Martin Agronsky—not Rueben Leonard or Dr. Parrish of the BA School. Dr. Parrish merely told it to his class and Leonad repeated it.

MARYLAND'S PRESIDENT Wilson H. Elkins saw his campus recently from 15,000 feet above the ground. He was in a jet plane. I hope you get a better view from your seat in Byrd Stadium today.

LAST TIME the Tar Heels hit Washington, they took over the town with a mile-long motorcade that snarled traffic for several hours.

The Carolina rooters moved down 14th and K Streets bearing Confederate banners and singing "Hark The Sound." Police officials called the affair a mild rebel uprising, but no one seemed to mind.

A nine by twelve Confederate flag took the prize for the biggest rebel banner, and Maryland took the game for the first time in 25 years, 14-7.

LIKE GRANT, Carolina took Richmond last night during a brief stop on its way to Washington.

CHAPEL HILL is quiet today.

Aside from a few small parties in Big and Little Fraternity Court, it's almost like the ghost town of second session summer school.

For a change, townspeople have a place to park their cars along Franklin Street. And those of us that are here are reminded of the good days before Saturday classes.

A TINY herd of children just stampeded by from the Planetarium. They roam the campus with their little cameras snapping everything in sight from Davie Poplar to the new sundail.

It's almost as if they were in a foreign land. And, in a way, they are.

I ASKED our man Jerry Reece, who is in Washington handling color on the game, where the parties would be tonight. Told him I thought it would be nice to pass them on to Air Mail edition readers.

"The only one I'm sure of is in my hotel room," Reece said.

So if you're not doing anything after the Carolina dance at the Hotel Shoreham, drop in on Reece. Tell him I sent you, but be sure to knock.

An Old-Timer Remembers:

Carolina-Maryland In '48: We Grew 'Em Strong

By Barry Farber

(Barry Farber, a multi-lingual globetrotter who once served a little time as editor of The Daily Tar Heel, is now a Washington resident. He has turned in this account of a Capital weekend in days gone by, which we publish with fear and trembling, last latter-day Tar Heels us it as an example.—Editor.)

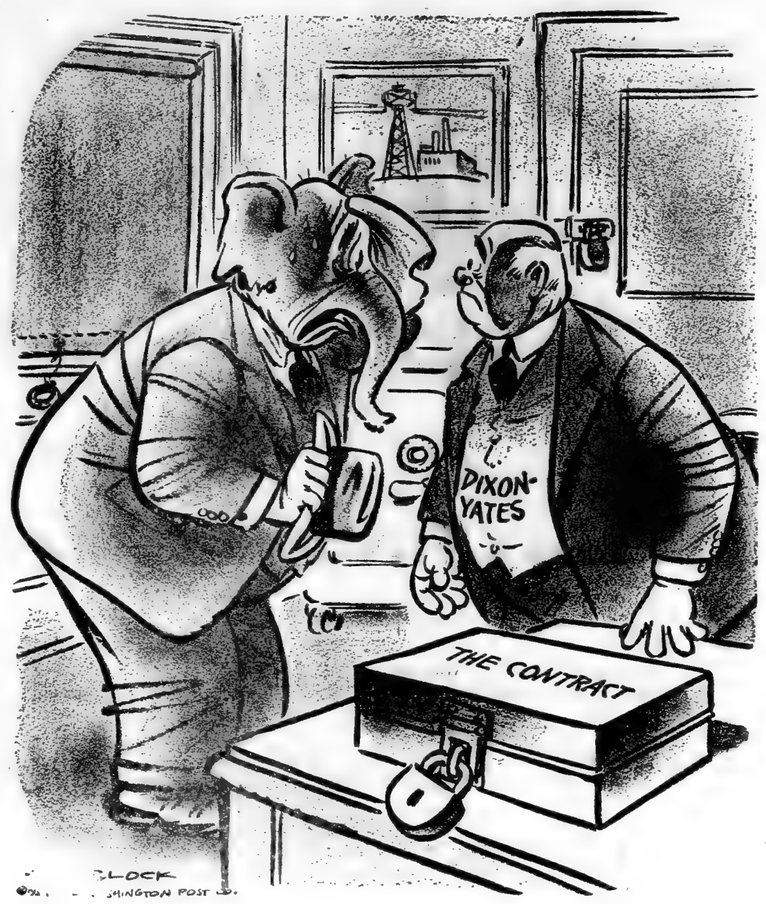
WASHINGTON—Carolina-Maryland in 1948 was more than just an out-of-town football game.

Say it was an epic, swashbuckling manifestation of Tar Hell moxie and you'd still be shortchanging the 40,000 Carolinians who came charging across the 14th Street bridge and forthwith ignited an open-air orgy of enthusiasm that still has staid Washingtonians recoiling in disbelief.

I was but a scared, cowering freshman in that "human sea" assault that overturned taxis, seized and annihilated the corner of 14th and K streets, denuded three hotel lobbies of furnishings and accessories, redecorated the Lincoln Memorial, shot roman candles at the Russian Embassy, and in general made the first battle of Bull Run look like a border incident. Sure it was inexcusable vandalism, rowdy, obscene, and eminently called for but even the most sanctimonious moralists on hand had to admit we had more fun than pigeons with Norden bombsights.

That was the year a letter from Oregon addressed simply "University of Choo Choo" was delivered at South Building without delay. It was the year Carolina, in the full flush of the Golden Era, could win any argument with little backtalk and enemy defenders, weary of the folly of trying to tackle Charlie Justice, learned just to step aside and wish him godspeed.

There were enough legends born that Washington weekend to stretch from here to Valhalla and I don't know whether most of them are history or hogwash but my favorite saga, honest—it happened, revolves around the Carolina Gentleman who endeavored to keep his date with a lady friend in a corner room on the fifth floor of the Ambassador Hotel at a quarter past two Saturday morning, yet.



He knocked. No answer. He shrugged; combed back his hair, and knocked a bit harder this time. Still the room remained black and silent. Rage welled up the spine of our friend and touched off his Tar Heel glands. Why, he figured, should I come three hundred miles to get stood up when I can get stood up just as easily in Chapel Hill? He lunged his frame, solid as one of the lesser Himalayas, against the door and neatly seperated it from its hinges on the eight try.

Now it seems our kid sort of sat down on the chewing gum. First of all, his date was waiting not in the corner room but in a room near the elevator. And it wasn't the fifth floor, it was the ninth. And it wasn't the Ambassador Hotel, it was the Statler. Worst of all, the room he had broke into was occupied by an eighty year old Mexican woman who came all unglued and called the manager.

When the night manager arrived on the scene a moment later he found a gregarious Tar Heel trying to explain to an hysterical Mexican in Murphy Hall Spanish that it was his error and he was sorry and would she care to have a drink and forget the whole thing. The manager first sought to mollify the Mexican woman who indicated she would try to secure accomodations elsewhere should she ever have to return to Washington, an eventuality she devoutly hoped would never materialize.

Then the manager turned on the gazooney from Carolina and offered to waive litigation if he would pay for the door and leave. How much did the manager think the unhinged door was worth? Twenty nine dollars was the estimate. Without a whimper the boy whipped out a wallet, pealed off a twenty and a ten, hoisted the broken door onto his shoulders, walked down the stairs, through the lobby, and disappeared heroically into the night muttering that the manager should keep the extra dollar for room service.

'Listen—I'm Getting Worried About My Own Power'

YOU Said It: A Defense Of Wilson

Editor:

Can anyone believe the ridiculous misrepresentation given in Wednesday's editorial concerning Charlie Wilson's remarks on unemployment? The author of that editorial is either unthinking and ignorant, or merely vicious in his criticism of everyone in the administration.

Ever since Wilson took over the tremendous job of Defense secretary, one of his most difficult jobs has been to allocate defense contracts not only to the companies most economical to government budgets, but also to areas in need of the business. Pressure groups of businessmen and labor leaders constantly try to acquire contracts advantageous to them under the disguise of employment promotion. This is a little unethical, this toying with the nation's finances, but is historical and to be expected. But to condemn a man for a perfectly reasonable statement in so horrible a manner is intolerable.

One particular labor pressure group had just informed Wilson of their need for defense contracts in their industry to take up the slack in employment caused by a slow-down in drafts! He promptly replied that he couldn't see why any young man old enough to go all the way to Korea to kill or be killed could not go a hundred miles to get a job. And then he came forth with his "kennel dog and bird dog" statement which is absolutely a good analogy and carries none of the implication of "unemployed dogs" as CIO President, Walter Reuther so stupidly said.

Any one of the readers of this paper should agree that government handouts are a poor substitute for going out and getting the jobs that are available. Since when does the government guarantee each man a job of his own particular choice? Who wants such a government? When it comes to that we should pity ourselves as a nation.

Plate Glass Exteriors For UNC?

Editor:

In general, Richard E. Albert's copious descant on "slicking down" the campus (Thursday, October 14) reflects sagacity and discretion. Paved parking lots, brick walks, and campus landscaping is definitely not foppish, and modified redundance such as the Bell Tower, Old Well and now the sundial is certainly in keeping with our tradition. But when Mr. Albert makes the astonishing statemeint, "perhaps daringly modern buildings will contrast and blend with the existing architectural forms." Can you visualize a ten story stone structure with three fourths plate glass exterior owering where timeless South Building now stands?

Th ultra-modern student union building at State is a lovely sight and not out of place in West Raleigh. But plop it down in Chapel Hill and the sleek lines become hideous deviations. There was some deliberation as to type of architecture before construction was begun on the University's Medical Center, but it was ascertained that basic structural design would in no way hamper the effectiveness of modern equipment. The three new Businss Administration buildings were constructed to conform with other campus buildings. The forthcoming museum and graduate men's dorm will follow the same pattern.

The new student union building soon to grace Emerson field will have every facility found in similar buildings at State and Woman's College and at the same time retain the traditional colonial design. No true Tar Heel would exchange the ineffable inspiration and ineffaceable warmth of Graham Memorial's main lounge for a cold, impersonal atmosphere with a circular fireplace or any other passing fancy in architecture.

W. Grant Stephenson

(Don't get excited about the "forthcoming" museum, dorm, and student union building mentioned in Mr. Stephenson's letter. All indications are that it will be many years before they materialize, with or without circular fireplaces.—Editor.)

Hot Words From Hotchkiss

Editor:

It's high time students at the University started rooting for the Tar Heels. I wouldn't say cheering at football games helps the football team to win, but it certainy doesn't hurt. Charlie Justice remarked one time that it always made him feel better to have a loud cheering section on his side.

This is just one student's opinion. But I hope that this big Maryland weekend turns out to be all that it has been ballyhooed, and that the Tar Heel supporters who go to the game Saturday make a little noise, even if the football team is losing from the start.

Leniency Bill Will Not Do Anything, Even If It Passes

Dick Creed

It's hard to see where the bill calling for leniency for first offenders in Honor Council cases will accomplish anything if it is passed.

Besides providing for a faculty counselors for each offender placed on probation (a mild term for probation officer) the bill does little more than tell the Council to do what it thinks best.

We thought that's what the Council was supposed to be doing already.

The bill says what the "usual punishment" for first offenders will be and what the maximum penalty should be. While it states that the maximum penalty shall be imposed only on offenders judged to be "flagrant and premeditated violators," the Councils will have free reign in their secret sessions to deal with each case in what it deems to be the appropriate manner, the bill notwithstanding.

This, we believe, is as it should be.

Students don't know what their rights are under the Honor System. They have some vague notion of what the Honor Code is and they think that if they cheat they will get kicked out of school.

Of course this is not true. The Honor Council knows it and a few interested students know it. If a student cheats, he may or may not get kicked out, depending on the circumstances of his offense. If this leniency bill passes, the bulk of the student body will continue in its unfortunate disregard for details and consider it a free chance for him to cheat and not suffer too much for it.

We believe that the average offender is no more out of adjustment than any of the rest of us who criticize or judge him. His lack of adjustment is manifested in a different way from ours, in cheating. To require him to report to a faculty counselor twice a week sounds like a good wholesome idea. But the atmosphere of the meetings of offender and counselor would be well-they-said-I-have-to-come-up-here-and-here-I-am.

Actual suspension provides time for the offender to answer honestly and quietly to himself the question of why he or anybody else cheats and why he and they must be disciplined.

This bill will not encourage more widespread participation in the operation of the Honor System, we believe. Most students would not consider the consequences of his turning someone in. Any pangs of conscience would begin and end in the initial act of turning in the offender.

Even now it is not certain that person will be suspended if he is turned in and found guilty. But there's a good chance that he will be.

And we believe that if the bill is passed, the chance of his being suspended will be just as good.

Because the Honor Council will continue to do what it thinks best.

Sounds

Tom Spain

Dave Brubeck and his great big imagination have graduated from the recording minors, and he's working for Columbia, turning out LP's of higher quality, both technically and musically. Most of them taken from live performances, Brubeck's sides are the Jazz fan's answer to the problem of stilted studio takes. JAZZ GOES TO COLLEGE is the first of a series of LP's, recorded last spring on his college tour through the midwest, where the progressive element is best received.

Brubeck, a happy musician, is backed up by Paul Desmond on alto, Bob Bates, bass, and Joe Dodge on drums. Desmond often rivals Brubeck on solo ability and improvisation, whereas the rhythm is held pretty much in a straight line by Bates and Dodge. As an ensemble, the quartet is seldom heard, but when all together, the sound is wonderfully smooth. The occasional duets by Brubeck and Desmond, especially in BALCONY ROCK are delightfully creative, the harmonies different and sometimes strange.

BALCONY ROCK is one of the most original and definitely the finest number the group has ever done. Having no predetermined melody, the quartet takes off at a slow shuffle beat with a plaintive intro by Brubeck which leads into a lengthy Desmond solo. Characteristically a blues mood tune, BALCONY ROCK allows for full-length improvising on all solos. Meditation seems to be the key word in describing Desmond's several choruses and Brubeck's piano work is something indescribable. His solo seems to be that of a song writer who couldn't tie all his melodies together in one song and therfor stretched them into a four-movement sonata. His chord series are beautiful, and his method of finding new ones and joining them is uncanny. There are few musicians who can improvise and experiment with such certainty. Brubeck can wander through a half-dozen melodies, creating his own, borrowing a few others, and wind it all up with astounding effect. He switches from syncopation to solid chords of Bach and back again without the slightest hint of uncertainty, achieving the sound of a plaintive Middle Eastern chant or the low-beat of a boogie-blues piano.

TAKE THE "A" TRAIN and OUT OF NOWHERE indicate the group's ability on rhythm numbers; their rendition of I WANT TO BE HAPPY shows that a good thing can be pushed. TAKE THE "A" TRAIN is easy and relaxing with a bounce beat. Joe Dodge's drumming is more pronounced on this side, and although he has no solos, his ability as a team musician speaks for itself. Brubeck's rambling solos are sometimes humorously reminiscent of the early works of Scarlatti, and the listener might well assume that Dave and his boys enjoyed the performance equally as much as those who attended and applauded so enthusiastically.

We were happy to notice that WCHL's new show, "Records From The Rec" featured the new album. Although released some time ago, the copies somehow didn't reach Chapel Hill until last week. JAZZ GOES TO COLLEGE has a successor which was recorded at the Oberlin College campus. It, too, warrants the same praise and the Dave Brubeck Quartet seems justly qualied in its rise to nation-wide acclaim.

Yehudi Menuhin is quoted as saying that jazz will not become a major in American composition until it contains a myriad of moods expressed in one piece usually requiring from 20 to 30 minutes. He claims that today's jazz including all that came before it has only one mood, usually expressed in one short form, which is customarily true. However, the works of Brubeck and Duke Ellington are showing a definite tendency towards the classic forms. An example can be readily seen in Brubeck's rendition of BALCONY ROCK. The moods included range from glee to gloom, and though its structure is a bit loose, careful listening will prove interesting and pleasurable.

Quote, Unquote

Senator Sam J. Ervin Jr., sounded a deep note when in a telegram to President Eisenhower, he criticized the practice of appointing politicians to the U. S. Supreme Court. He rightly contended that the result has been a lessening of respect for the court.

The senator's telegram was to urge upon the President the name of Judge John J. Parker of Charlotte to succeed Justice Jackson, recently dead.

If the President would listen to this advice, it would find strong approbation in these parts. Judge Parker has the experience, the sense of judgment, and the character that would well fit him for this high position.

In a region where party feeling is often blindly partisan, the fact that Judge Parker has been a life long and faithful Republican has neven been held against him. His friends know that he acts upon his reason and his convictions. And he is in no way a politician.

Southern California-Oregon Game On National Television

By WILL GRIMSLEY
Associated Press Sports Writer

Southern California and Oregon, two teams with Rose Bowl aspirations, meet today in college football's televised feature but they share national attention with Army, Navy, Duke and four unbeaten giants of the Big Ten Conference.

Southern Cal, defeated by Texas Christian a week ago, and Oregon, rebounding winner over California after a shaky start, collide at Portland, Ore. The game is to be beamed across the country by ABC, starting at 4:15 p.m. EST.

While this game and two others on the Pacific Coast lend an early but definite light to the possible Pasedena assignment Jan. 1, three important conference games in the Big Ten start deciding the other end of the Rose Bowl axis.

In these encounters, all involving top - ranked elevens, Purdue, the giant-killer which felled Notre Dame, plays at Wisconsin; Iowa, conqueror of Michigan State, is at Ohio State, and Illinois, the preseason conference favorite which has failed to start rolling invades Minnesota.

Wisconsin, Ohio State and Minnesota, are unbeaten and untied while Purdue has only a tie marring its record, a 13-13 standoff a week ago with Duke. Illinois has dropped three in a row.

The Wisconsin - Purdue tilt at Madison, Wis., matches the nation's second and fifth ranked teams and brings together two of the campaign's early backfield sensations. Alan, The Horse, Ameche provides most of the power for the No. 2 Badgers while Lenny Dawson's deadly passing arm has been the main means of locomotion for Purdue.

Ohio State is No. 4 in the latest standings while Minnesota is No. 11.

The game which before the season looked like the "natural" of the year — that between Notre Dame and Michigan State at South Bend — was dropped to secondary status when both teams suffered setbacks. Notre Dame bowed to Purdue, 27-14, two weeks ago while Michigan State lost to both Iowa and Wisconsin.

The two service teams, Army and Navy, whose meeting at Philadelphia brings the season to a colorful climax, both have rugged tests.

Army, resuming after an opening loss to South Carolina, plays Duke, the sixth - ranked team in the nation, at Durham, N. C., and undefeated Navy, buoyed by a victory over Stanford, tackles Pittsburgh at Pitt Stadium.

Pitt, off to a miserable start despite a wealth of material, is playing under the charge of Athletic Director Tom Hamilton, filling in for the ailing Coach Red Dawson. Hamilton is a former Navy star and coach.

Oklahoma, the country's No. 1 team after intersectional victories over California, TCU and Texas, moves into conference competition with Kansas as the first order of business. The Sooners are expected to handle this job easily enough, by about three touchdowns.

On the Pacific Coast, UCLA, No. 3 ranked but ineligible to return to the Rose Bowl, is host to Stanford at Los Angeles while California plays Washington State at Berkeley.

The best game in the East brings together Penn State and West Virginia, each unbeaten, but a lively schedule jabs interest in the Ivy League which has Princeton at Brown, Columbia at Harvard and Cornell at Yale. Maryland, last year's national champion but once beaten and tied, is host to North Carolina.

In the Southwest, Texas, although beaten twice, is favored over surprising Arkansas, winner over Tulsa, TCU and Baylor. Other league games have TCU at Texas A&M and SMU at Rice.

Mississippi, No. 7 nationally and rated the best in the deep South, should score its fifth straight victory at the expense of Tulane. Other leading games have Alabama at Tennessee, Auburn at Georgia Tech and Kentucky at Florida.

CONNIE GRAVITTE, Carolina halfback who leads the Atlantic Coast Conference in rushing with a 6.7-yard average, is expected to be the big offensive gun for the Tar Heels today in their battle with Maryland at College Park.

Duke Favored Over Army

DURHAM (AP)—Duke's sixth-ranked Blue Devils, who last week checked the passes of Purdue's Len Dawson to tie the favored Boilermakers, run into Army and pegging Pete Vann here today in a football game that will draw a near-capacity crowd of 42,500.

Unbeaten Duke is a shaky six-point favorite over an Army team that has smashed Michigan and Dartmouth since being upset by South Carolina in its opener. The resurgence of the Cadets has carried them to 18th place in the Associated Press weekly poll.

While Duke kas battling favored Purdue to a 13-13 standstill last week Army smothered Dartmouth, 60-6, eight men scoring its nine touchdowns. Vann, operating at quarterback, threw long touchdown passes, end Don Holleder gathering in two on scoring plays of 67 and 44 yards.

Duke, winner over Pennsylvania and Tennessee, lost a 14-13 decision to nuderdog Army in New York last fall.

Heavy rain last night and this morning tapered off by midday. Clear, cool weather was expected for the kicoff at 2:30 p.m.

Duke has stressed a defense for Army's high-powered attack in practice this week.

Coach Bill Murray has a fine crop of backs to send against the Cadets. Capt. Jerry Barger will be at quarterback at the start, with Sonny Jurgensen, the sophomore star who engineered and then saved the 7-6 victory over Tennessee, available for heavy duty. They have a crew of versatile backs at their command, but Duke feels the defense may well hold the key to victory.

Duke game may help determine the Atlantic Coast Conference representative against the Big Seven's team in the range Bowl game in Miami, Fla., next Jan. 1. The ACC determines its representative by a vote. With Duke and Maryland, the standouts of the ACC not playing each other, their play against strong outside rivals may be the deciding factor. A strong showing against Army would boost Duke's Bowl chances.

Oregon Guard Killed

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Ken Sweitzer, a guard on the 1953 University of Oregon football team, was killed in a hunting accident about 15 miles east of here Thursday.

Sweitzer, 22, was hunting with Jack Patera, 21, a guard on this year's team, in heavy fog along the McKenzie River. State Police Sgt. Vern Hill said Patera fired at a deer and that the bullet hit Sweitzer.

Sweitzer was a graduate student at the University and also had been serving as assistant football coach and practice teacher at Eugene High School.

It was the second aftality in Oregon football ranks within two months. Doyle Higdon, junior guard and javelin thrower on the track team, was killed in a logging accident near Cottage Grove in August.

Two weeks ago Sewitzer and his wife, whom he married last winter, became parents of a girl.

The tragedy threw the Oregon football camp into deep gloom on the eve of the team's nationally televised game with Southern California at Portland today. Most members of the team had played with Sweitzer and were his close friends.

Athletic Department sources reported that Patera, a second team All-Coast choice last year, was in a state of inconsolable grief.

The Oregon football team worked out a few hours after the star guard was killed.

Patera was not at the practice. He was at the state police office telling about the tragedy.

Patera said he was on one side of a draw with Sweitzer on the other slope when he fired his 30-06 rifle at what he thought was a deer.

Sweitzer cried out, and Patera rushed to his aid to find Sweiter had been wounded throzugh the abdomen. Sweitzer, who came to Oregon from Pasadena, J. C. in 1950, died within an hour.

Coach Len Casanova said he could not say at this time whether Patera would play in the game Saturday.

State Starts Home Play Tonight Against Tough Florida State 11

RALEIGH (AP)—North Carolina State opens its home football season here tonight against a Florida State team that has rolled up 99 points in its last two starts.

In four previous starts on the road, North Carolina State has compiled a 1-3 record. The Wolfpack gave new head coach Earle Edwards his first victory last week, a surprising 26-0 rout of William and Mary.

Florida State, meanwhile, after dropping two-touchdown decisions to Georgia and Abilene Christian, has gone on a scoring rampage, smothering Louisville, 47-6, and Villanova, 52-13.

The game will be the third in as many years between the schools, each having won a game.

The pass-minded visiting Seminoles have gained 726 yards thru the air, more yardage than North Carolina State has managed with both ground and air offense.

Both teams used various offensive formations which should lead to a wide-open game. A crowd of about 6,000 is expected. Kickoff time is 8 p.m.

N. Y. Yankees Start Rebuilding; Draft 4 Of Their Farm Hands

NEW YORK (AP)—The New York Yankees began rebuilding for 1955 yesterday by purchasing the contracts of four of their farm hands, including Negro catcher Elston Howard.

Howard(voted the most valuable player in the International League last year while at Toronto, is the first Negro to be placed on the Yankee roster.

Howard was brought up from Kansas City, which owned his contract, along with two righthanded pitchers, Ed Cereghino and Tom Sturdivant. Also, third baseman Leon Buddy Carter was bought from Binghamton of the Eastern League, another Yankee affiliate.

To make room for these men on the roster, the Yankees sold outfielder Art Schult and pitcher Al Cicotte to Kansas City.

"This is our first move in building for the 1955 season," general manager George Weiss said, in making the announcement.

The shifts give the New Yorkers a maximum of 40 players, plus three returned servicemen, Bob Grim, Tom Morgan and Carter, who may be carried extra.

Howard, a six-foot two hulk of man who is 25 years old, caught the eye of manager Casey Stengel in training last spring at St. Petersburg, Fla. But he was sent to Toronto for more seasoning, although under contract to Kansas City.

Converted from an outfielder to catcher, he hit .331 for Toronto to miss the batting title by only two percentage points. He got 164 hits, including 22 homers, 20 doubles and 15 triples, and he batted in 108 runs.

He was voted the most valuable player in the International League and made that league's All-Star team.

Cereghino was one of the last discoveries of the late Joe Dvine. Twenty years old, extremely fast, he had an 11-13 record with Kansas City last season.

Allen Home From Army

ROCHESTER, N. Y. (AP)—Bill Allen, 23, who as a schoolboy pitcher twice hurled no hitters to defeat Johnny Antonelli, 1954 World Series star for the New York Giants, yesterday came home from the U. S. Army ready to resume his baseball career.

He is scheduled to report to the Toledo club for spring training.

While Antonelli went to the Boston Braves at a reported $50,000 bonus plsyer, Allen signed with the same club for no bonus at all.

'Many Thousands'

He estimated damage to telephone lines at "many thousands of dollars."

The State Highway Patrol at Fayetteville reported 10 persons were marooned at Topsail Island when the bridge there was washed out. The patrol said Highway Patrolman W. F. Proctor was marooned on a causeway in Brunswick County when power lines blew down across the road. Proctor was not in danger, the patrol said.

In Lumberton power lines were down across Highway 301 north of the city. Telephone and electric lines were down.

School children at Fayetteville and Ft. Bragg were ordered to remain in the school buildings. Cumberland County schools were closed and the pupils sent home.

Grannis Airport at Fayetteville reported gusts up to 110 miles an hour. Widespread minor damage to dwellings and buildings was expected to run into high figures.

The highway patrol reported a Seaboard Air Line Railroad train had been halted between Hamlet and Wilmington because of weak bridges.

High winds sideswiped Marion, S. C., where extensive damage was reported from falling trees and cracked limbs, many of which fell on dwellings and automobiles.

Braves Take Up Contract Of Batter George Crowe

MILWAUKEE ((AP)—The Milwaukee Braves yesterday took up the contract of George Crowe, the batting star of their American Assn. Toledo farm club.

In exchange for the lefthanded first baseman's contract, the Braves assigned outfielder Collins Morgan to Toledo. Morgan played last season with Allentown, Pa., in the Eastern League.

Crowe, 32, played with Milwaukee in 1953 and hit .286 in 47 games.

Last season with Toledo he hit .334 which was second best in the league. He was second also in home runs with 34 and led the league with 197 runs batted in. Crowe tied for honors in hitting 38 doubles.

Washington politicians better sit up and take notice this weekend, because it isn't political parties that have been dominating the capital city ever since the Carolina train pulled into Union Station last night.

No Congressman, be he Democrat, Republican, or what-have-you, has ever seen the likes of the fiery filibusters, clamorous caucuses and luxuriant lobbying which have been in evidence from Connecticut Avenue to the Shoreham Hotel. Politics have been replaced by enthusiasm, and investigations by dissipations.

As soon as the Seaboard special train and the blue-and-white bedecked cars rolled into D.C.; Carolina spirit captivated the city. From last night's pep rally, today's football game and dance, to Sunday's Charlie Justice Day at the Redskin game, "Hark the Sound" has been, and will be, the one and only war cry.

And, a special warning to those Washingtonians who haven't as yet discovered the deluge of party participants: "You better move!"

Although approximately 2,000 of Carolina's 6,000 students have made, or will make the big trip to Washington, a few remain in Chapel Hill for academic, health, or otherwise minor reasons. There is very little weekend entertainment planned for the home bodies, but several groups will stage "Let's pretend we're in Washington" parties.

Deke's and Kappa Sig's, both turned fanatics for this water-skiing, had planned trips to the Carolina coast and Buggs Island for a weekend of the summer sport. But it looks now like they will have competition from a few stirred-up breezes. Perhaps the best solution to the tropical weather would be an exodus to the beach and a "welcome-Hazel" party for the approaching hurricane.

Kappa Epsilon, professional pharmaceutical sorority, welcomed the new pharmacy girls with a dinner at the Pines Tuesday night, Oct. 5.

Congratulations go out to the new members of the Order of the Miniataurs and the Order of the Sheiks. They were formally initiated in impressive ceremonies at last Saturday's game.

Coeds Eligible For Maid Of Cotton Contest

Carolina coeds have been declared eligible to participate in the 19955 Maid of Cotton Contest.

The announcement, issued recently by the president of the National Cotton Council, said a maximum of three candidates may enter from the university.

Each sorority and women's dormitory on campus has been asked to select a contestant for the local competition. The three finalists, to be chosen by a committee appointed by student council President Tom Creasy, will then send entry forms and photographs to the National Council in Memphis, Tenn.

The top 20 entries, who will be notified by wire, will go to Memphis where the official Maid of Cotton will be named.

Contestants must be unmarried, between the ages of 19 and 25, and must have been born in a cotton-producing state. The winner will tour leading cities in the United States and abroad, and will serve as the official ambassador for the cotton industry.

Deadline for entries is Nov. 1. Additional information may be obtained at President Creasy's office.

Sauter And Finegan Coming Monday

Bill Finegan — Eddie Sauter

THE SAUTER-FINEGAN ORCHESTRA, reputedly one of the most musically-daring aggregations in the history of the band, will appear next Monday in Memorial Hall. Sauter (left) and Finegan (right), rated among the country's top five arrangers, have shaped music for such bands as Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey and Glenn Miller.

New Sauter-Finegan Orchestra Will Play Two Concerts Here

The new Sauter-Finegan orchestra, which is apt to pull a squeaking rabbit out of a hat if the musical score should call for it, will appear on the Carolina campus Monday.

Two entirely different concerts one at 4 p. m., the other at 8:30, will be given in Memorial Hall. Tickets are $1.00 for students, and may be obtained from Ledbetter-Pickard, from the Carolina Sport Shop, from the Town and Campus, from the Information Desk at Graham Memorial, and from Y-Court on Monday.

For over a decade Sauter and Finegan have shaped the music played by more than a dozen top-flight orchestras. They have been behind the scenes for the arrangements of Artie Shaw, Benny Goodman, Ray McKinley, Tommy Dorsey and Glenn Miller.

Disc jockeys are describing the Sauter-Finegan RCA Victor recordings as the greatest things to come along in years. The band's distinctive music has been summed up as color and mood. And with this goes a strong beat and underlying excitement and gayety.

The band, unlike the average aggregation, numbers 25, including five saxaphones, piano, bass, drums guitar, harp and tuba. The percussion section is unusual in that it contains a xylophone, marimba, chimes, trinagle, celeste, tambourines, kettle drums, snare drums and thunder drum.

Sauter and Finegan first thought of teaming up as early as 1939, and finally in 1952, their first RCA Victor record was released: "Doodletown Fifers!" Since then they have made records such as "April in Paris," "Rain," 'Moonlight on the Ganges" and "Love is a Simple Thing."

The Enterprising AP

RALEIGH—(AP)—When Hurricane Hazel knocked out the power in the News and Observer building, where the Associated Press has its Eastern North Carolina office, Charlie Brown went to work.

The enterprising Brown, in charge of the bureau's traffic setup, hired a room in a hotel alongside the AP office.

Making like a dock worker, he threw electrical wires from the hotel room across an alley to the AP office. This enabled the AP teletype and wirephoto machines to resume contact with the outside world.

As Brown got out of the hotel elevator after finishing his work there, he met Frank Daniels, general manager of The N&O, and his chief mechanical supervisor entering the hotel — to rent a room.

University Press Honored

The PNC Press was honored recently by the selection of two of its books for Awards of Merit, presented by the American Association for State and Local History at its annual meeting in Madison, Wis.

The two UNC Press publications named for outstanding achievement were "North Carolina: The History of a Southern State" by High T. Lefler and Albert Ray Newsome and "The Spanish Jesuit Mission in Virginia, 1570-1572" by Clifford M. Lewis, S. J., and Albert J. Lommie, S. J.

The Press was the only publisher to receive more than one award among the 47 recipients, thirteen of them books of the history and biography type.

Both books were recognized for their "important contribution to state and local history in the Southeastern states during the past year."

The North Carolina history by Dr. Lefler, UNC professor of history, and the late Dr. Newsome, head of the UNC History Department for 16 years, was published last February.

The second award winner, "The Spanish Jesuit Mission in Virginia," was published for the Virgina Hstorical Society.

The Association's award recipients were selected from 91 candidates nominated in the United States, Canada and Puerto Rico.

"IT'S TOASTED" to taste better!

Doubtless, you've guessed that the Droodle at the right is: Careless two-gun cowboy enjoying better-tasting Lucky while waiting in ambush. Lots of other two-gun cowboys—and many millions of no-gun folks—agree that Luckies taste better. Students, for example, prefer Luckies to all other brands, according to the latest, biggest coast-to-coast college survey. Once again, the No. 1 reason is that Luckies taste better. They taste better because Lucky Strike is the cigarette of fine tobacco . . . and "It's Toasted" to taste better. "It's Toasted"—the famous Lucky Strike process—tones up Luckies' light, mild, good-tasting tobacco to make it taste even better. So, enjoy the better-tasting cigarette . . . Lucky Strike.

MISS CAROL SITES
. . . piano recital tonight

UNC Pianist Miss Carol Sites Presents Recital Here Tonight

Miss Carol Sites, Martinsbury, Va., graduate assistant and instructor in piano in the University Music Department, will present a piano recital tonight as second in Graham Memorial's "petites musicales" series.

Miss Sites' program of Mozart, Chanler, Piston, Barber, Debussy and Schumann selections will begin at 8 o'clock in the Graham Memorial Main Lounge.

Miss Sites was graduated from the University of Cincinnati and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. She has also studied privately with Roland Goldsand, pianist, in Cincinnati and New York.

Before coming to UNC in 1952, she taught piano and theory at the Adirondack Music Center and music appreciation at Averitt College in Danville, Va. Last summer she was instructor in piano at the University of Wisconsin music clinic.

Program

Miss Sites' program will consist of the following from Mozart: "Sonata in C Minor;" "Allegro;" "Adagio;" " Allegro Assai;"

"Toccata," from Chanler: "Passacaglia," from Piston; "Excursion No. One," from Barber;

From Debussy: "Danseuses de Delphes;" "La Danse de Puck;" "La Puerta del Vino;" "Ondine;"

From Schumann: "Kreisleriana," including "Agitatissimo," "Con Molta Espressione," "Vivace Assai," "Lento Assai," Molto Presto" and "Vivace E Scherzando."

The "petites musicales" are presented every other Sunday night by the Graham Memorial Student Union. A reception honoring the guest artist is held following each performance.

Last musicale's artist, Miss Helen Masloff, was warmly received by the GM audience. All seats were taken at Miss Masloff's concert.

Graham Memorial Director Jim Wallace has said that he will "do my best to accommodate the audience" tonight.

Maryland's Terps Trounce Carolina In Crushing Ground-Aerial Attack, 33-0

By BERNIE WEISS
DTH Assistant Sports Editor

Md.—Maryland's Terps exploded with acrushing ground attack, supplemented with adequate aerial power, to score three touch-downs in the final period and down the Carolina Tar Heels, 33-0, here today.

The Terrapin backfield, Dick Blieski, in particular, merely waltzed through huge holes torn in the Carolina defensive line, ripping off huge gains seemingly at will. In the closing minutes of the game the Terps substituted their third string, which still proved too much for the tired Tar Heels.

Bielski was clearly the individual star of the game. He averaged almost nine yards per carry, totaling 102 yards.

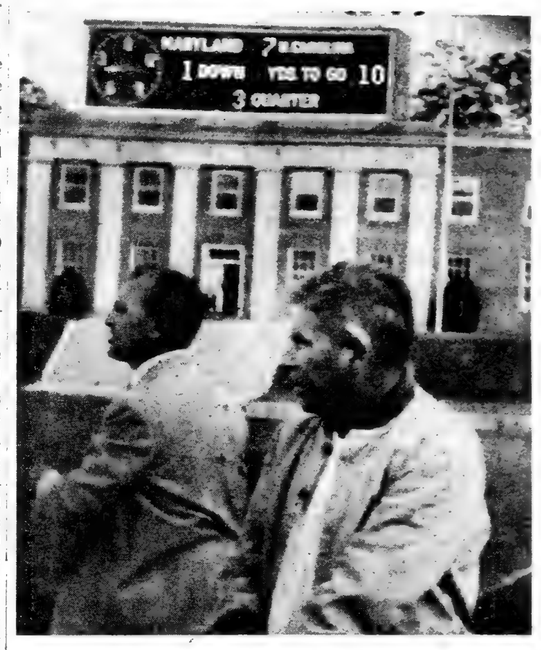
The closest Carolina came to scoring was in the first period when Ken Keller caught an A-1 long pass in the end zone. However, a penalty against Carolina for having an illegal pass receiver downfield killed the scare.

Approximately 2,000 Carolina students saw the outweighed UNC line fall back again and again. The Terrapin blocking was hard, fast and vicious and was well taken advantage of by the fleet Maryland backs.

The Old Liners' first score came on the initial series of downs. It took them only four plays after the kickoff to move 29 yards to the goal, Bielski going over from 11 yards out. His placement was good. The second period was scoreless, but Maryland came back with another score in the third canto when Ronnie Waller took the pigskin over from the five. Bielski's kick was perfect and the Terps too a 14-0 lead into the final period.

Then, with amazing rapidity and offensive strength, Tom Selep, Frank Tamburello and Dave Nusz touched Carolina paydirt.

UNC ran a total of six plays in that period.



Statistically, Carolina was clearly out of the running. Maryland racked up 23 first downs to Carolina's eight. Seventeen of these came on the ground. Maryland rushed for 368 yards to Carolina's 114, and the Terps had 448 total yards gained.

Carolina's offense again lacked punch and drive. The largest groud gainer was Ken Keller, who had only 36 yards, but the defeat was, of course, due to Maryland's powerful offense and a very sharp defense.

Terp Coach Jim Tatum remarked that it was their best game of the year. "We haven't any excuses," said Tar Heel Coach Georeg Barclay. "Maryland was by far the better team."

This is an understatement. Maryland's drive on its first touchdown covered 29 yards in four plays. The Terps gained possession on the Carolina 29 after receiving Will Frye's punt (his first of the year). Joe Horning hooked around left

After Hazel's Havoc:

Town Starts Cleaning Up

The after effects of Friday afternoon's Hurricane Hazel may be felt for quite some time, as people work to move the massive trees which she felled, telephone linemen repair fallen lines, and others have their houses and cars fixed.

J. S. Bennett, director of operations at the University, reported some 50 trees down on campus, and a number of telephones still out. He said that the damage could not be estimated in money as some of the things demolished, such as the Caldwell Memorial obelisk, could not be replcaed.

Town Manager Tom Rose said that some 100 to 150 trees were down in Chapel Hill and that 40 or 50 of them were blocking the streets or had knocked down power lines. All the streets were opened by yesterday, however.

Although the telephone at police headquarters was out, Chapel Hill policemen patrolled the streets during and after the storm. They moved children in the Victory Village nursery over to the hospital recreation room. They also estimated that hundreds of trees had fallen and reported some nine cars demolished. Traffic was directed around areas where live wires were down or trees were blocking the streets.

Telephone company officials reported that lines were down in approximately three-fourths of Chapel Hill and that some of the lines will not be repaired before tomorrow or later. All telephone maintenance crews are on duty.

The fire department answered one call Friday evening to help with some live wires. During the storm, they kept in touch with the police radio through their portable electric generator. All department members were at the station house and on call during the hurricane.

Colonial Motors lost a 12 by 6 foot plate glass window to the wind and a sign over their used parking lot fell, damaging two cars in the lot. The Mobile X-Ray unit which was parked at the hospital was also damaged by a falling tree. The Little Shop, on E. Franklin St., also lost a front window.

Carolina Motors lost the top of its chimney and one of their front signs. Some seven cars were in the local garages for repairs on Saturday.

Chancellor R. B. House reported that two cars at his house were damaged by a fallen tree. The Chancellor's own car, which he described as a "middle-aged" Buick, was damaged, but he said he thought it could be salvaged. His son-in-law's car, a Chevrolet, was described as a total loss.

North, South Carolina Beaches Beaten By Hazel's Tidal Waves

By NOEL YANCEY

WILMINGTON —(AP)— At least 10 persons drowned in Brunswick County in Southeastern North Carolina as Hurricane Hazel sent tidal waves smashing into beach fronts. Of one group of 11 persons at Ocean Beach, seven died or were missing. Ocean Island Beach was virtually wiped out.

A survey of the Atlantic Ocean front from the Myrtle Beach, S. C., vicinity northward to Wilmington after Hurricane Hazel struck yesterday showed property damage in the high millions.

Ocean Island

Dead at Ocean Island Beach were Mr. and Mrs. J. Elwood Cox and Mr. and Mrs. W. Frank Armfield Jr., all of High Point; and Sherman Register, 34, a hardware merchant from Shallotte. Missing and presumed dead were Register's wife, Madeline, 34, and their 10-year-old son, Buddy. Sheriff E. V. Leonard said there was virtually no hope they would be found alive.

The bodies of three other persons were found in Brunswick County; A Mrs. Lewis of High Point found at Holden's Beach; E. B. Todd of Lumberton, found at Long Beach; and an unidentified body found at Boone's Neck.

The State Highway Patrol also said the dead included David Glass of Greensboro and the missing included a Mr. Goldston of Sanford. Mr. Hewitt and Mr. Cox, both of Wilmington, and Fleet Lewis of High Point, whose relatives, if any, to the Mrs. Lewis found at Holden's Beach was no known.

Here's what happened to the party of 11 at Ocean Island. The Registers and their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bellamy, left their cottage during the worst of the storm and moved down to another cottage occupied by the Armfields and the Coxes. Also in the company were Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hart of High Point.

Bellamy said the group stayed until the tide came into the first floor of the cottage. Then the 11 took refuge on a high sand dune. But a huge wave dissolved the dune. They got into a truck. The men tried to hold the truck upright, but the tide kept pushing it along and soon a huge wave smashed the vehicle. The next Bellamy knew he and his wife came up near a smashed building and held on for dear life. Then they saw Mr. and Mrs. Hart clinging to the building.

A Negro, Joe Dock, set out in a skiff to rescue the party. The skiff capsized and at first Dock was believed drowned. However, he turned up safe.

Sheriff Leonard said that Holden's Beach was virtually wiped out, Long Beach was badly smashed, the Southport waterfront ruined, Shallotte suffered heavy damage was general over Brunswick County.

Shallotte had no water until this morning and outlying areas still were without water.

Looting 'Teriffic'

John Snure Jr., publisher of the Brunswick Herald, said looting was "teriffic" in Brunswick County until National Guardsmen moved in in force this morning. He said he lost $750 worth of photographic equipment and a heater. Snure said people were seen walking up beaches with money sticking out of their pockets.

He said several hundred persons in Brunswick County were without food or shelter pending the arrival of Red Cross workers in the southern portion of the county.

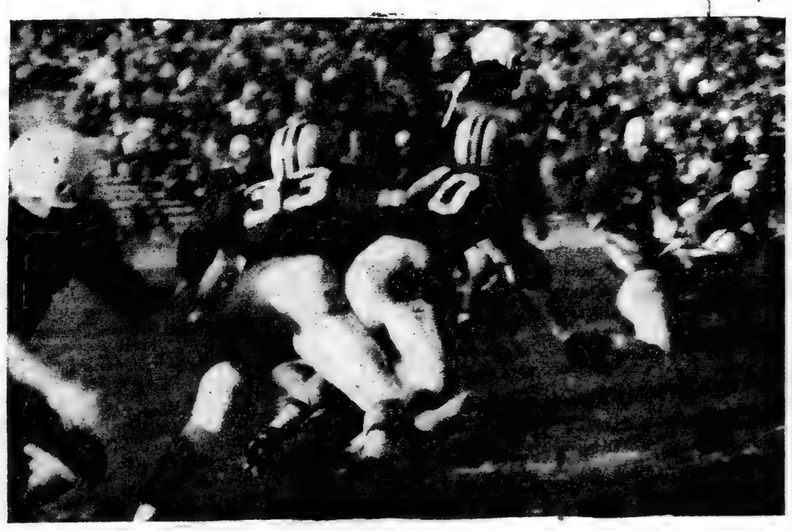
'Never Seen' Worse Wind



"I've seen windstorms here that could twist the top branches from trees, but I've never seen a forceable wind like this," Chancellor R. B. House said yesterday after Hurricane Hazel had breezed through campus.

The chancellor has been in close contact with Chapel Hill since 1912. He pointed out that Friday's storm is the first one of its kind that he'd ever heard of in this area.

Other townspeople recalled a tornado in 1920 or 1921 which ripped through nearby Chatham County, but all agreed its effects on Chapel Hill were slight compared with Hazel.

A Self-Examination For Christianity

J. C. Herrin, a great and Christian man, told us during the height of the doctrinal tempest that was stirring about him last year, "The chief problem of religion these days is that the wheels are turning—but they're not geared in to anything."

In that succinct summation, Mr. Herrin stated pretty well the problem of America's churches—the artificiality and peripheral worship that have befallen them. Worship, in J. V. Herrin's view, means more than repect for Christian priciples; it means, in a deeper sense, putting the least of its bulwarks is the simple admonition: "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

You know the Herrin story: how, after a long dispute over his beliefs, he was discharged last year from his post as Baptist student chaplain here by the Baptist State Convention. He is now at the Baptist Community Church, Scarsdale, New York. Be fore he left Chapel Hill, he set down his religious beliefs for The Chapel Hill News Leader.

Since it's Sunday and a few moments of religious reflection would not be inappropriate to the day, we commend his words to your thought. They are "geared in" to a deep and meaningful principle, and it is this: That religion is even more beautiful in the life of man than it is in church.

Relationship with God and with fellowmen is what is at stake in Christianity, and to claim that we are not quite sure of our relationship to either is merely a sinful evasion to be dealt with, not by theological speculation or mere semantic veribage; but by self-examination in the light of intellectual honesty and genuine repentance.

If this seems unduly naive and harsh we have only to remind ourselves of the scenes of judgment day in the New Testament. 'When saw we thee hungry and thirsty and naked?" What is missing in this plea is not knowledge about the plight of another, but sympathy and sensitivity to his real needs The Christian is one whose is attuned to the hidden anxities and hungers in the soul of another, and who, in furnishing his own life has included enough and to spare of the grace of life

The essence of Christianity, therefore, is not to be sought in the Book, the Puplit or the Liturgy. These can be, and sometimes are, helpful roadsigns. But genuine insight is found in demonstration, in the quality of life, i the character of a person. This leads us into the central mystery of Christianity which is o mystery in the usual sense of being hidden: it is hidden only to the one who refuses to believe it, and act on it as though it were so. This mystery is known as the Incarnation.

"Well," you say, "at last you are retreating into theological verbiage. What does that mean?"

Once again I repeat that Christianity is so simple that we miss its essence. Let me illustrate what is meant by Incarnation. The Fourth Gospel defines it as the "Word became flesh and dwelt among us." This refers to the wisdom of God, specificially as it was embodied in Christ. But it in no way limits this wisdom to the Christ. And it is not wisdom as we usually define the word. Its isimagination, feel as Eugene Debs felt: "As long as any man sympathy, tenderness, insight, mercy; it is to is in prison, I am free. It is to feel hunger so long as one-third of the world's children go to bed at night crying for bread. It is to lay one's own dignity in periol so long as any race or nation is deprived of self-respect.

Let The Kids Replace Those Long-Beards

Louis Kraar

"GIRLS COME to college to find husbands," Mr. Danziger said a few moments after he'd sat down at my table.

'You know, college is the best place for a girl to look for a husband. A girl has time to groom herself and meet boys. If she goes to work, she has to worry about the boss and working all day. But here she has plenty of time. And there are so many boys," he said.

A coed at my table nodded in agreement.

And the boy who had brought her into Mr. D.'s place changed the subject asking, "Mr. D. how'd you like the story in the paper about you and your place?"

"It was very nice for people in Chapel Hill. But for people in my country it would be funny."

The boy asked why.

"You see, the story said that I would take girl friends from my hometown Vienna down to a tavern at Gudesberg on the Rhine for a glass of wine. I did go there, of course. But Gudesberg is about as far from Vienna as New York is from Chapel Hill.

"We would do many things for a glass of wine, but we rarely went that far," Mr. Danzinger explained.

WE ASKED Mr. D. about his country, and he suggested that all of us should go there if we ever have the chance.

"If we would send young people, we might get some place. But when we just send old diplomats with long bears, it's not the same," he said.

'When young people sit around and talk in their idealistic way, they trust each other. And it is nice. Countries don't always trust diplomats the same way."

He told us about his son Edwin, who is in Ceylon on a Fulbright Fellowship. The young Carolina graduate is studying at the national University of Peradeniya in the mountains of the, tiny Asian island.

Erwin is studying the tea industry, but his letters tell of the plush dormitories in the Asian university, its coeds, the questions of its students—two thirds of whom are communists.

But the young American sits with them and answers questions like: "Which 10 families rule in the U. S.?' ' and "What is the difAmerica and in England?"

And perhaps, as Mr. D. suggests, there is some understanding among the students. At least they talk in "their idealistic way."

THE PASTRY wagon rolled by, and the shop began filling up. Mr. D. sighed.

"Someday when I am able to retire, I would like to go to school. It woud be wonderful to go to classes and learn about the world. I wouldn't do it for grades, you know. I'd just enjoy it," he said.

Then the long restaurant was crowded. Mr. D. went to greet his patrons.

But we still sat and talked in our idealistic way, perhaps like the youths at a tavern in Gudesberg on the Rhine did at one time.

Quote, Unquote

No, democracy is not dying.

We know it because we have seen it revive—and grow.

We know it cannot die — because it is built on the unhampered initiative of individual men and women joined together in a common enterprise — an enterprise undertaken and carried through by the free expression of a free majority.

We know it because democracy alone, of all forms of government, enlists the full force of men's enlightened will.

We know it because democracy alone has constructed an unlimited civilization capable of infinite progress in the improvement of human life.

We do not retreat. We are not contents to stad still.—Third Inaugural Address of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

'Beat It—We've Got An Election To Win'

Mr. Morganthau's Diaries

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — They don't want anything published about it, but the Jenner Internal Security Committee has been conducting a very hush-hush examination of Henry Morgenthau's famous diary.

The idea is to make headlines before election day with something that will connect members of the Roosevelt Administration with Harry Dexter White and any tinge of Russian espionage.

To this end, Jonathan Mitchell, husband of famed feminist Doris Stevens, has been up at Hyde Park, where the lengthy diary of the former Secretary of the Treasury is kept. Though the Jenner Committee probably won't appreciate any probing into its probing, this column has obtained copies of some of Mitchell's reports, and so far he hasn't struck much pay dirt. In one confidential report to the Jenner Committee, Mitchell states:

"Last week I got through only 14 volumes. I was held back by documents of British and French lend-lease. Since White was in charge of these negotiations, I hoped to find material of interest to the committee. But in fact, although I read the documents with great care, I found very litle."

Diaries Are Secret

Hitherto the Morgenthau Diaries have never been scrutinized by outsiders. They are probably the most carefully kept of any record of the hectic and vitally important years of the Roosevelt Administration. Morgenthau noted in great detail everything he did during the years he was Secretary of the Treasury—and he held that post longer than any other man in history. The diary detail is even more voluminous than that of the late Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes.

The diaries are locked in the Roosevelt Library in Hyde Park and are not open to public examination. However, Morgenthau, when questioned by the Jenner Committee about Harry Dexter White, who was accused by Attorney General Brownell of being a Russian spy, offered to let the Jenner Committee examine his diaries.

Morgenthau said he knew of no evidence that White was a spy during his association at the Treasury, and he offered to let the Jenner Committee examine any part of his records.

Simultaneously, Senator Knowland's office has been pushing the State Department to publish all diplomatic documents dealing with the Yalta Conference, in the hope that some clue regarding the operations of Alger Hiss might be forthcoming. The State Department, though under a Republican Administration, so far has refused to fix a publication date prior to election, despite an urgent request by Knowland's floor assistant, Bill Reed.

Morgenthau Pushed Loan

Security of the Morgenthau Diaries to date has chiefly revealed what the newspapers published at that time—namely that Henry Morgenthau was zealously anxious to keep Russia as a friendly ally and pushed a $10,000,000,000 peacetime loan to Russia toward the closing days of the war in order to win Russian confidence.

GOP ELEPHANT
. . . with the outlook dark, he's after election ammo.

As already well publicized, Morgenthau diaries, apparently considered it his job to report also on the political views of Herman Kahn, archivist for the Roosevelt Library. For he wrote the Jenner Committee:

"Kahn is an egg-head. He held himself in very well until Muskie's election (referring to the election of the new Democratic governor of Maine). Next day, he sidled up to Jim and me and delivered himself of a sudden, sneering attack on Fulton Lewis, Jr."

Note—the "Jim" referred to above is Jim Cardiello—a member of the Jenner Committee staff who is assisting Mitchell in probing the Morgenthau diary.

Newspaper Pals

Mitchell, when questioned by this writer about his research, was most loath to talk. Asked when his report would be published, Mitchell ducked.

"You and I were reporters together going back a long way," he said, doubtless referring to the fact that he had been a reporter on the old New York World. Mitchell also served as Washington correspondent for The New Republic for many years. "If I can help you out as one reporter to another I'll be glad to do so."

"Then who is with you on the Morgenthau diaries?" Mitchell was asked.

"Any statement on that will have to come from Washington."

"How long have you been with the Jenner committee?"

"No comment."

"You realize that when anyone is put on the federal payroll it must be a matter of record."

"Can't talk about it," said the old news reporter now gone bureaucrat.

"What is your salary?"

"No comment."

"You realize that when the taxpayers pay a man's salary, that also must be a matter of public record," Mitchell was reminded.

"Yes."

"And you still don't want to comment?"

"No comment."

"You say you want to be helpful as one reporter to another, and yet you don't even want to answer purely factual questions which obviously must be a matter of public record?"

Mr. Mitchell's voice trailed off. "You'll have to talk to the Jenner Committee," he said weakly.

This column will publish on Tuesday the full text of one of Mr. Mitchell's reports to the Jenner Committee on the Morgenthau diaries plus side remarks on archivist Kahn and Fulton Lewis, Jr.

Behind The Curtain

Reliable reports from behind the Iron Curtain indicate that the Kremlin is cracking down on the Russian people again.

After Stalin's death, and while the Malenkov Administration was getting itself settled in the saddle it appeased the civilian population with an abundance of little luxuries. Some of the heat was even taken off the churches while the "party line" which tells Soviet writers and musicians what they must say and play loosened up a little.

But a purge of writers and composers early this summer has now been followed by an anti-religious drive of growing proportions. The Vatican says it is "the most intense and best organized since 1930."

Note — Recent religious rallies in satellite countries have produced overflow crowds in apparent defiance of the Communists' anti-religious crusade, but informed sources say it's "just window dressing for the west."

The Negro And The South: Two Points Of View

Note To Indian Diplomats: 'Keep Your Turban On'

By Alan Paton

(Excerpts from a recent Collier's article by Alan Paton, the South African who wrote, Cry, The Beloevd Country. Mr. Paton has been on an exhibition tour of this country gathering material for his portrayal of the Negro in America.—Editor)

WHEN I WAS last in the South there were no Negroes in "white" state universities. Now there are more than two thousand. As I write they are still excluded in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina.

Despite segregation, the Negro in the South has enjoyed one benefit, even though belatedly. In 1896 the Supreme Court of the United States, in the famous transportation case of Plessy vs. Ferguson, ruled that segregation was not unconstitutional, provided the facilities were equal. This "separate but equal" doctrine took firm root in the Southern mind, but produced few blooms until the forties and fifties, when several magnificent Negro schools were built and white and colored teachers' salaries equalized in many parts of the South. It is easy to believe that the plant bloomed at last only because people began to hint that it was barren, and should be cut down and thrown into the fire.

I visited one of these new Negro schools, the J. W. Ligon High School, in Raleigh. North Carolina. My visit was short, but I have been a teacher nearly all my life, and if this was not a first-class school, I was deceived. The principal was Dr. W. H. Watson, who, I was told later, was the highest-paid principal in the city.

We discussed the pending Supreme Court decision, which Dr. Watson predicted would bring school segregation to an end.

"The changes won't be so drastic as many people fear," he said. "What is there to be afraid of? Isn't this a fine school? Our teachers are trained every bit as well as white teachers. Whether they are teaching white children or Negro children, they will give their best. I am very hopeful about the future."

Dr. Watson said one more thing to me: "We teach our children to obey the laws of the state where they live, but to change them if they can."

* * *

JUST AS THE Negro is being emancipated, so is the young white Southerner. There are stories of it from every side. Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University, recorded that at one Southern university, 135 white students went down to the train to meet the first Negro student. They would not let him carry a thing. It was white supremacy at its best.

WHAT WILL happen in the South if the schools are integrated? I asked that question, but everyone else was asking it too. Some asked it with anxiety, yet not with the deep and desperate anxiety with which white people would ask it in South Africa.

While everyone was asking this anxious question, many responsible leaders were announcing their intention of obeying the decision whatever it might be. The most disturbing reaction came from Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia.

Governor Talmadge is a forceful and self-assured man, with a loud voice and determined manner. He told me that desegregation would not be accepted by the South, and if it were enforced could lead to war between the states; Georgia would make every sacrifice to resist it, even to the extent of giving up its public schools. She would have private and segregated schools where each parent could choose the kind of school he wanted, Negro as well as white; there would be freedom of choice.

I asked him if the passage of time, and the pressure of America and the world, were not bringing segregation to an end.

"No, sir," he said emphatically. "Not in the South."

The governor made no intellectual defense of segregation; it was simply the Southern way of life. It is a tragedy for Georgia and America that he is unable to use his dynamic gifts to help guide them through the difficult times that lie ahead.

As for Georgia herself, with her motto, "Wisdom, Justice and Moderation," she may soon have to join in the perennial American task of narrowing the gap between her great ideals and her present practices.

I HAD THE PRIVILEGE of an interview with Governor James Francis Byrnes of South Carolina. I have a great respect for governors, especially one who had been a Justice of the Supreme Court, Director of War Mobilization and Secretary of State. The governor is seventy-five years of age, but does not look it.

Governor Byrnes justified segregation to me on the ground of "natural orders." Nature, he said, had her categories, and individuals from the one were not found in the other. In the shoals of blackfish one never encountered a . . . (here I lost the word, but I hope that it might have been a whiting). He said that this talk of "conflict in the soul of the South" was nonsense. It was the Negro of mixed blood who was the unhappy man — who, because he belonged to no order, fought unceasingly for the removal of any differentiation whatsoever. And the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was his instrument.

I asked the governor if the practice of segregation would not impair America's prestige in the world, and endanger world peace. Why, he said, any Negro diplomat who came to South Carolina would find better Negro hotels there than any in his own country, while an Indian diplomat would be free to go where he wished.

On March 25, 1954, the governor addressed the South Carolina Education Association. His closing words were: "We must earnestly pray that Almighty God will give to those who lead us the wisdom to know what is right and the courage to do the right."

It is impossible to mock at such words. The very use of them shows that the user knows that he and his state are caught up in a conflict of right and wrong. I have no doubt that Governor Byrnes would declare himself to be on the side of the angels — were he not afraid that the angels might be on the side of the Negroes. Perhaps that seems impossible to him, at this time, at his age, after all he has said. Still, he has counseled all the people of South Carolina to keep cool and calm, and has not said a word about the militia.

But you, Mr. Indian Diplomat visiting South Carolina: while entering the hotel of your choice it might be wise to keep your turban on your head.

The Decision Of The Court: 'Chaos In Dense Detail'

By Clifford Dowdey

(Excerpts from a recent article in The Saturday Review, Gifford Dowdey is a Richmonder who was educated at Columbia University. This, then, is a look at the Negro and the South by a Southerner.—Editor.)

THE FIRST REACTION in the South to Supreme Court's decision on segregation was one of studied calm. Though vestigial demagogues responded as their constituents expected them to, their intemperate blasts bore no more relation to the problems to be solved than the pious hosannas uttered by Northern politicians in the name of democracy.

The educated Southerner is well aware of the considerations of world politics which were involved in this decision; he strongly suspects that these considerations much influenced the unanimity of the Court, and he declines the role of obstacle to "the march of human freedom." At the same time, he is equally aware that "the historic decision" related to America's world position as an abstraction and to himself in the complex details of a very old reality.

Outside of the South irresponsible pharisees ("thank God, I'm not as other men") could display their own humanity by applauding this step toward "equality," but the Southerner has seldom been able to afford this luxury of self-approbation. Since his is a section where the white and black races co-exist in a single society, only the Southerner is forced to consider the practical application of a dictum which involves the minutiae of two parallel communities under one roof. For the practical application of the Court's decision only superficially concerned schools.

In the humane words of Chief Justice Warren, the decision said, "Today education is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments . . . Today it is a principal instrument in awakening the child to cultural values . . . and in helping him to adjust to a normal environment."

Now, in the South the normal environment of the white child is white and the normal environment of the colored child is colored. A mixed school would not help the student of either race adjust to his normal environment, since no mixer environment exists. If the Court's ukase were executed the effect would be to create a new mixed environment.

I think it is safe to say that, confronted by no matter what mandate, the Southerner will attempt to continue two parallel societies. He will look at the North, where segregation is illegal, and simulate what the North has done whenever confronted by a similar density of colored population.

NOW THAT "de-segregation" has been made national policy, the Southerner will have to achieve the same de facto segregation within his society without the balm of moral unction.

Despite all the worn cliques, to the average Southern the problem has never been the individual Negro. Without publicity, individaul Negroes now attend Southern educational institutions such as the Medival College in Richmond and the Virginia Episcopal Seminary, and Southerners going North to college or to live readily adjust to customs involving individual Negroes.

Brown 21 Princeton 20

PROVIDENCE, R.I. —(AP)— Everett Pearson, plucky team captain playing with a wrenched shoulder, raced 40 yards to a touchdown in the final two minutes and big Vin Jazwinski kicked the vital extra point yesterday to give Brown a dramatic 21-20 football victory over Princeton.

Twice hard luck Brown had seen its drives die inside the Princeton two yard line and twice Princeton had turned breaks into touchdowns before the game took a swift and unexpected turn.

With minutes running out and little hope left for the home crowd of 17,000, Brown took the ball on its own 20 and marched goalward. Jazwinski and Pearson were the meat-grinders in the 80 yard march and Pearson broke over guard for the clincher, with a great block by Pete Bartuska.

The Panthers, directed by Tom Hamilton, a former Navy coach, and now athletic director at Pitt, stormed back after trailing 6-0 in the first period by scoring two touchdowns within three minutes in the second quarter. But Pitt almost saw the victory go out of the window in the closing minutes of the game with a fumble deep in their territory.

Salvaterra, a sophomore quarterback, tallied on a one yard sneak and an eight yard scamper. He also passed 23 yards to halfback Henry Ford in the end zone for the other score.

Navy struck for its touchdowns in the first, second and fourth periods. The difference was in the conversions. George Textor missed one and Dick Echard the other.

Bugs Bagamery made all three touchdowns for Pitt.

An onside kickoff gave Navy the ball on the opening play. In eight plays the Middies moved the ball 45 yards for a touchdown.
